the next one this is a word when talking about drugs substance that makes it easier for the waste from someone's bells to come out okay what what would you refer to this substance as and there is again give you that picture there and there are many types of medications that you would say oh this is a um and it's going to well it's going to have this effect it's going to make it easier for uh somebody to for their bowels to come out if for example if somebody is constipated if they're constipated then they would need to take a all right you guys uh you guys are rocking this and again these are like I said these are things that I think everybody experiences from you know at maybe at one point in your life and that's why this vocabulary I believe is so important because you're talking we're talking in this case about a laxative so if you are experiencing constipation you go to the pharmacy and you would ask like hey I need to uh to get a laxative what would you recommend or what do you have and then there are are different brands that make medications that would be a laxative and that could help you in this regard so the next one okay this is talking about a drug used to calm a person or animal or to make them sleep so it's going to have that calming effect or just allow someone to sleep easier what type of drug are you going to take you're going to take a what so once again this is kind of just the overall like name referring to this drug and there are different brands that maybe you you could buy that's going to have this effect what would you say so I see some different answers uh so maybe again this might be a new word for some of you so in this case if you're looking for that calming effect or to help somebody sleep you would refer to that as a sedative I need to take a sedative because I'm having trouble sleeping and that's going to help and again there are different types of sedatives there are sedatives some maybe more mild others might be very strong but in general you would be talking about a sedative then we have this okay and the thing about the picture look at the picture to help we're talking about a thick substance usually containing medicine that is put on the skin where it is sore or maybe there's an injury and you're just trying to cure it what would you call that thick substance and really I said look at the picture because I think this is a good example A lot of times they come in these smaller tubes so I I know some people may be thinking cream I'm not talking about cream it's a little similar but again it's these smaller tubes uh and it's a thick substance sometimes cream isn't too thick so in this case uh if you're trying to to cure it and you're just putting it on the skin wow all right excellent I thought maybe this might be new for some of you you guys rocked it Lolly Rafaela uh young he Mina uh talking about ointment so you would use an ointment I think this is a good picture when you want to you know you have some uh it could be like even a bite or something and you'd put some ointment on there hoping to cure it but great job excellent so the next one is talking about an artificial form of a natural chemical substance okay this is a natural chemical substance but it's an artificial form in this case and it's used for treating particular medical conditions now I don't I don't want to give it away but often this is people when people think about this they think about something specific about that picture all right it has to do with the picture however this this uh this can also be used for for treating other medical conditions as well so I I thought maybe the picture would definitely give it away if you see that person with those muscles and wow okay that does not look natural it looks like that person uh maybe on steroids so steroid is again people often I think associate this with like Sports and people trying to become stronger but you you might have steroids I mentioned the word cream you might have a steroid cream for example if someone has eczema and they get the you know maybe the the redness that looks like a rash on their skin and in order to make that eczema go away you might use a steroid cream so again steroid it's not just about getting stronger and people using it in athletics and competitions but there are other medicines that people will use um that that you could say it's a steroid then we have this one we're talking about a drug that makes the mind or body more active what would you refer to that that type of drug as so I guess to give you a little bit of a hint we talked about a drug that would have that calming effect to help you sleep in that case you're going to take a sedative if you want to make your body more active then you might take a drug that would be considered a what so it's really it's like kind of the opposite of a sedative so you have something that's a sedative and then another drug that might be considered a what and I know people see that picture of coffee uh again not talking about coffee or caffeine but coffee or caffeine would be considered a um that is the word that I'm looking for excellent Victor Lawley uh rafella Ernie zero gamer we're talking about a stimulant so you would say that yeah coffee has caffeine it's a stimulant it's going to help you know your body and mind be more active and like I said it's the opposite of taking a sedative which is going to have that calming effect to help you sleep so you can think of those as opposite ends of the spectrum you have a sedative to help you sleep and a stimulant in order to help you stay active and stay awake maybe you need to stay up um late into the evening and you might drink coffee or there are some other medicines that you could take that that have this effect and you would say they least uh you got a little bit of review because it seems like you knew many of these words and I hope that you just learned one or two new words in this lesson uh or a new collocation because it even though I think these are common because you go to the pharmacy all the time I would still say that that they are Advanced because outside of this context of medicine Pharmacy you may not use them often it really depends on the conversations that you're having so thank you guys so much for joining me today I really appreciate you being here again I hope you learned something new if you like if you enjoyed the lesson and you did learn something new please hit that like button lets me know that okay maybe I'll I'll keep doing some of these vocabulary lessons helping you guys build your vocabulary I think it is an important part of reaching your fluency goals so thank you to Kaio good to see you I'll see you next week uh muffin young he Mina Lolly uh Vicki Gustav thanks for joining us Elena uh I hope that you have a wonderful Wednesday enjoy the rest of your day and I will see you guys next

ADVANCED SCIENCE VOCABULARY | Words & Phrases You Should Know

science is what we're going to talk about today and I have some I think Advanced but also common words and phrases that I want to quiz you on and I I tried to choose words that I think are a little more relevant because I know this topic is very Broad and if you like if you like learning new words and phrases building your vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is Interac English it's all about trying to help you reach your goals and as we go through this I want you to participate in the lesson answer the questions this is after all interactive English and if you would like to get the lesson notes that you see right next to me you can join our email Community click on the link down in the description if you are already a part of the community check your inbox I have sent them to you so let's just jump into it and start with some must know words and phrases and I say must know because I I think these are this this is vocabulary that you may come across if you're reading the newspaper or maybe you're having a conversation about some topic related to science and here is my first question I I think some are going to be a little easier than others but this is an idea or explanation for something that is based on known facts but has not yet been proved is called a what I'm basically giving you the meaning of this word and this is definitely a word it's related to science this idea an or an explanation for something you know you're basing this on on some known facts but it hasn't been proved you would say well I have a this word right here what do you think and I think one of the the key words in there and I know see Theory it's not yet been proved if something has not yet been proved then in that case it is a hypothesis and that is the key part of this it hasn't been proved yet you would say then it is an hypothesis and then you need to try to prove the hypothesis or maybe it doesn't get proved so that's really the difference between a theory and a hypothesis a theory has been proved and a hypothesis has not been proved see some good answers in there uh you guys are all on the right track so to give you some more examples how this is used in context and I told you it's common these are just a few news headlines using this word the rare earth hypothesis a hotly debated solution to the fery Paradox I'm not really sure what the fmy Paradox is from hypothesis to advances in cancer research this is from the New York Academy of Sciences or nature on the feasibility of malaria hypothesis scientific reports again all related to science when you talk about a hypothesis good word to know then we have this phrase the there are two missing words there is the process of objectively establishing facts through testing and experimentation now notice I've highlighted the bolded the wordthe it's really a part of the phrase because you're really talking about the what there are two missing words and again I'm giving you the meaning this this process of objectively establishing facts through testing through experimentation and it is called what what do you think I'll give you a moment to think of an answer write your answers in the chat I always love hearing from you even if watching this later please write your answers in the comments so this process which I think if you you know take any class science class they're going to talk about this process or specifically this method because it is known as the scientific method so you may talk about trying to establish facts and you got to test experiment ment and you're going to use the scientific method that's really what what this phrase is and like I said you you really would talk about use it with the article the the scientific method to put more of this in um into context for you I I thought this was a funny meme using different pictures like the scientific method so it starts up here like observation then you come up with a question and then there's the hypothesis like what do you think the the prediction with keano Reeves's face right there then you're going to experiment you get your results and either the hypothesis is rejected right there in the middle like Jackie Chan's picture or it's accepted and then it becomes a theory and then back to the observation so this is a using memes to kind of give you some images and the process of the scientific method then we have this uh again I there's so much to cover when talking about science and I am going to bounce around with vocabulary in different fields of Science and I think again you could see the animals up here and you see this circle what is this referring to and if you if you're having trouble reading it you could start with the uh you know the grass the producer and then the the grasshopper is the primary consumer the bird is the

this case which would mean that they're hunting other animals but nobody's really hunting The Owl and then when the owl passes away they decompose uh which is the mushroom and it just goes around in a circle and this is the food chain all right now I don't know there was a delayed response now I'm seeing all those answers in there but good job good job everybody how about this this is one that I do think that you will read uh when talking about or if you're reading a newspaper article about the environment or if you're having a discussion about the environment could be talking about climate change is the purposeful clearing of forest Land by people this is happening in many parts of the world I really do think this is a word that you've probably heard again I don't know if you end up actively using this vocabulary that is the goal that you not just learn the vocabulary passively but if you're in a conversation you're talking about some topic that these words will come up and you can use it in context but this is a common word and I would still say it is Advanced it's specific excellent I see a lot of great answers uh just give some shoutouts uh Curious ghost myth myth yeka Ava Rosie perfect we're talking about deforestation so when people mention deforestation it's done by people they're clearing the land for one reason or another it could have to do with development but if you read articles that might be talking about the Amazon rainforest this is a word that will certainly come up to give you um to give you more of an example as to how common this word is used if we go to engram viewer and I just typed it I put in the word deforestation and then the word Superman you're familiar with Superman the superhero uh DC Comics The Frequency that they're used is pretty much the same so again this is a word that is related to the environment it is a science word that is common one that I would definitely recommend that you make a part of your active vocabulary deforestation the next one uh this maybe is a little trickier so again I'm giving you the meaning m is a state in which opposing forces or influences are balanced this is a state in which opposing forces or influences are balanced and I think a key word in there just to give you a little bit of a hint is the word balanced so what do you think if you have any guesses write it in the chat don't worry if you get the wrong answer it's it's not a problem this is all about practicing and just using the the vocabulary that you already know trying to guess these answers so when we're talking about opposing forces or influences that are balanced were referring to the equilibrium excellent great job uh Kim for for bors uh nice nishat perfect so equilibrium is the state in which forces uh or influences are balanced when talking about this word I gave you the general meaning but within the different types of science like chemistry biology physics the meaning May slightly change and that's what I wanted to show you right here when talking about equilibrium so just I'll read this quickly in chemistry it says the state in which the reactants and products do not change because the rate of forward reaction is equal to the rate of reverse reaction if we're talking about biology equilibrium is the state of balance maintained by the various organisms that live in a particular environment there's that word again balance and in physics it also means the state of balance between opposing forces and that was more the the meaning that I gave you so just keep in mind that Within These different areas of science chemistry biology physics the meaning may change slightly and of course if we're talking about equilibrium it's also the title of a movie from I believe 2002 starring Christian Bale about some dystopian future and it's actually a decent movie if you haven't seen it and it's called equilibrium the next uh part of this I want to quiz you on different types of scientist so when you think of science there are different areas and you would have the name of the this area of science this field of science and then the scientist I just want you to tell me well what is this what is the scientist called so for example the first one what do you call a physical scientist who observes studies and forecast the weather now that I realize like when I say it like that it almost makes me think like I'm telling a joke what do you call a physical scientist who observe is this is not a joke but in all seriousness yes what what would you call this person this this is a scientist observes studies or forecasts the weather and I feel like if well I'll I'll get to it in just a second if you watch the local news or even I'd say the national news then they they talk about the weather they're going to cut over to this person who is going to talk about the weather forecast and that is when you will hear this word so yeah it is it is the another name is a weather man or weather woman but specifically if we're talking about the scientist you guys rock this one the meteorologist this is a meteorologist is a person who observes studies and forecasts the weather but specifically to to my point what I was trying to talk about I think a lot of times you you see these people on TV these are all examples of you know different meteorologists giving the weather forecast but excellent great job uh Ella Angela Zara Miranda perfect John lot of good answers with that one okay all right I think you guys maybe know these scientists let's let's see if you know this one all right this is a scientist who studies the history of life on Earth through the fossil record so I don't I'm not sure maybe if you'll confuse this with another one so the history of life on Earth through the fossil record specifically um what would you call this type of scientist I'll give you uh a hint just because I like having a little fun this is more of a pop culture hint when you think of the TV show Friends very famous show from a long time ago there was a character called Ross this was Ross's job Ross was a what all right that's a little pop culture quiz as well but this type of scientist in case you're unfamiliar studying through the fossil record is a paleontologist well done uh Kim uh Tong melon nice all right saw some good answers I thought maybe again people might think of archaeologist when they're digging up and trying to learn about communities and the animals that were there so I think again this in this case we're talking about the history through the fossil record paleontologist we're talking about paleontology so that that was a little trickier how about this one who is a scientist that studies the origin and structure of the universe including its planets Stars galaxies and blacks black holes I think this one's a little easier but I know when I've T about I've talked about this word in the past some people um confused it with another word that is also related to the the Stars uh so this they study the origin and structure of the universe plants Stars galaxies black holes this person is a what I hope that you were thinking about an astronomer all right ior uh Angela job astronomers they would study the origin and structure of the universe Stars galaxies sometimes I saw astrophysicist in this case um I was thinking that there might be a little more confusion with an astrologer so I know when we're talking about the stars and the skies there are different types of scientists specifically uh when we're talking about stars galaxies black holes an astronomer astronomy would be the subject an astronomer would be the scientist so just uh well let's have a look at uh the next one simply put this scientist studies plants what would you call a scientist who studies plants and this does have a specific uh name and you would talk about well the study of plants is a specific field of science and a person who studies plants is called oh c he guesses so oh there they are nice uh a botanist a botanist is a scientist who studies plants excellent um on Ella just a random person good job the last one for these different types of scientists which kind of scientist studies animals and plants that live in the sea again I feel like this is a well this is a scientist that maybe you've you've come across or you've you've heard about newspaper an article or maybe listening to the news or I don't just through your through your travels maybe and you've heard this type of scientist the the kind of scientist that studies the animals and plants that live in the sea so we're talking about the sea okay plants and animals in general because I had to change around the the wording uh when I asked this question we're talking about marine life and the study of Life Of course biology we're talking about a marine biologist I think uh many of you got that so yeah marine biologists would study animals and plants that live in the sea the ocean is a marine biologist excellent I think so many of you got that one perfect

now I want to do another part of this little mini science vocabulary quiz that I have for you and I want you to complete the sentences and the first one is well we're going back to uh astronomy there are M planets in our what so there are M planets we're looking for a number in our that is there are two words this is the phrase that I really wanted to uh point out and again it's a common phrase I think if you're talking about astronomy this is a phrase that may come up you're studying science General Science you're going to hear this phrase when talking about planets because in this case we're talking about again two words we're talking about our solar system and there are eight planets in our solar system when I was back in school a long time ago there were actually nine planets in our solar system so in case you're wondering here are the eight planets uh listed from their as their proximity to the sun you have mercur Mercury Venus Earth Mars Jupiter Saturn Uranus Neptune and the one that uh got demoted was Pluto because I put that up there does Pluto belong to our solar system this I thought was kind of funny I'll just read this to you uh in 2006 the international astronom astronomical Union the iaau demoted the much Lov Pluto from its position as the ninth planet from the sun to one of five dwarf planets the IOU had likely not anticipated the widespread outrage that followed the change in our solar systems lineup I just thought that was humorous like this widespread outrage when Pluto got demoted I don't know if you also experien and express some outrage when that happened but there are eight eight eight currently there are eight planets in our solar system how would you complete these sentences so you have that the grasshopper The Mouse and the owl animals that eat plants are called what animals that eat both plants and meat are called this and animals that eat meat are called what I feel like probably some of these words are more commonly used than other but if we're talking about science and you know the environment and the animals and who which animals are eating other animals again these are words that you will come across these are words that you will use so what do you think and and a lot of times you may you know you're going to use them not together you might use them together because you're talking about these different animals that either eat plants or eat meat or eat both plants and eat so I I think you guys are a lot of on the right track with this one we're talking about herbivores omnivores and carnivores so like the grasshopper is an herbivore only eats plants a mouse mice are omnivores they eat both plants and meat and the owl is a carnivore and really just eats meat even though I think there are some kind of owls that might be omnivores but in general you have those three words herbivores omnivores carnivores how about this right here I think you all know this word this um again it's a common word I think a good one to know still related to science if you leave a pot of hot water or if you leave a pot of water on a hot stove sorry if you leave a pot of water on a hot stove the water is going to do what what are what what verb is missing you have this hot stove the water it's boiling and it's going to what this is a again a word that yeah

you use talking about science maybe I don't know you're listening to a meteorologist talk about something and they may use this verb because when water heats the liquid turns to a gas and you would say it's going to evaporate all right I think a lot of you got that one excellent um and this is again a liquid changes to a gas especially by heating it's going to evaporate so the next one let me know what you think in order to speed up the reaction we need a what this is a word that is a science word but I also want I I I'm sharing it with you because it's also used in other contexts as well which I think can be very useful but in general it is a science word you're talking about speeding up a reaction and in order to do that you will need a find a noun I feel like just me saying it you could hopefully think of the word a what we're talking about a noun and I see all right some some good answers in there nice um uh oning uh just a random person a catalyst so uh Ella good job if we're talking about a catalyst is something that makes a chemical reaction more happen more quickly without itself being changed and it's a catalyst now there are other way ways that this may be used because you can talk about uh Catalyst as being like something that causes a big change and I think you often use this word maybe an everyday Co conversation I gave you some cations right there along with some news headlines you could talk about the Catalyst behind something this article says the Catalyst behind my profession for my passion for journalism and why I embrace the field or maybe you talk about the Catalyst for something here's this line mobile internet a catalyst for economic growth in Africa or a catalyst to do something this article for poetry aficionados in Chennai I'm probably mispronouncing that April serves as a catalyst to create to create poetry this is a catalyst so here I know I I gave you a fair number of words these are some of the words we talked about they're all related to science if you enjoy learning science vocabulary let me know hit that like button because there are definitely more lessons like this I can do in the future it is a topic that you are going to come across watching the news reading a newspaper or even in general conversations if you're talking about something like climate change a lot of this vocabulary may come up I tried to give you a little bit of variety as we went through this and talk about words that are I think a little more advanced but still comments so of course uh I want to I want you to tell me how how did you do on the quiz um you can let me know and write your answer right there how did you do on the quiz um and you could say like I am a Scientist like uh 100% uh maybe um I did pretty well 50% and maybe another one because most of us we study science in school you could say oh I need to go back to school um maybe 25% what do you think you can let me know how you did on this quiz I always love hearing from you uh always write to me in the comments and I try to respond and again if you want to get these lessons notes you can join my email Community Link is in the description if you're already a part of it check your inbox because I have sent them to you but I want to thank everybody for joining me today thank you uh Glo good to see you um Ella uh St kareim Myer Carlos glad you enjoyed the lesson I hope that you knew most of these words maybe some of them were new I always want to build vocabulary but thank thank you guys so much for being here and I will see you soon for another lesson in the future

ADVANCED SPRING VOCABULARY | Words and phrases you need to know

Hello and welcome to today's lesson. This is going to be an advanced vocabulary lesson. Because while spring is right around the corner, I wanted to talk to you about some different advanced words that are related to spring. These are words that I think you should definitely know. So, as I mentioned, we're going to be talking about some advanced spring vocabulary. I think some of the words and phrases you will be familiar with. And the way that I want to do this is I'm going to present this to you like a little bit of a quiz. So I'm going to give you like a question, a sentence, and I want you to think of the answer and then of course uh I'll give you a moment to think about it and then I will tell you the answer what the missing word or phrase is.

Before we begin, I do want to make a quick little announcement and that is that enrollment for my speaking course is now open. Um, you can click on a link down in the description. It's it's a speaking course. It's all about trying to help you speak confidently, speak clearly, speak naturally. The it's an 8week course in which uh there are different topics each week. And the other thing I wanted to tell you is that you can use the code uh it's right up here at the top. Uh I'm kind of blocking it. Speak 20 to get $20 uh off. So uh I'll kind of come back and mention this once more at the end, but yes, enrollment is now open. Classes are going to begin uh the first week of April and spaces are limited. So check that out if you're somebody who would like to practice and improve your speaking skills. So as I go through the

and then ah okay okay okay so my apologies I think the the connection dropped for just a moment and then now we're back. Okay so we're we're talking about advanced spring vocabulary and the first question that I have for you is right here. All right. So this is kind of uh fill in the blank. What what do you think? Uh what what word would best complete this sentence? I love the warm days when there's a nice gentle. What do you think? What word best completes that that sentence? Yes, everything we're we're back now. Everything's all good. A little technical uh difficulties there for just a moment. So, let me get the microphone here. So, what do you guys think? Um, this is a common collocation too. I think when you're when you hear you feel it gentle and of course the picture I think is a little bit of a giveaway.

So just to uh let you guys Yes. Uh Lii correct good to see you Li Tyo good to see you. Um Vivian Angela Yashar welcome. Nice. The the correct answer is breeze. So we're talking about like the wind. It's a gentle wind, but instead of people saying gentle wind, that's not a common collocation. I think in the springtime, uh, you you have these days where there's a nice gentle breeze and everybody loves that. I really love these the gentle breeze. The next one is right here. And this is just well the question, what are those? What do you call those? I've given you the first letter. Okay. And then I'll talk to you.

Well, I don't want to give it away, but what what do you call those in English? That that's the first letter that that you can see, which is G. All right. What do you think? Let me know. Write your answers in the chat or like I said, even if you're watching this later, write your answers in the comments. All right. So, this is one that I I told you this is advanced vocabulary, so it's a little more challenging. Um, and this is something I don't I don't wear these. Um, but and and the other thing I would tell you is that they do have different names as well, but I think commonly they're known as what? So, this the the question mark. Hey, that's all good. No, no problem. Alex, I have no idea. Okay. Um, Moier Fenon, you got it. Excellent. That you got the correct and uh Vetlana. Sorry if I mispronounced names. Angela. Yes. So, these are called galosshes. And you may be wondering, well, what is it that makes a galash uh different than rain boots or whatever? They do have different names. The difference is that uh galashes specifically, technically, if you want to be more exact, they go around your shoe. So galashes will cover your shoe and they protect your shoes from the rain or the mud. Whereas a rain boot would really protect your socks and under like you just have your socks and then you would put on your rain boots and you'd go outside um wherever you need to go and you wear them like shoes whereas galashes you're going to put over your shoes to protect them from the rain. So, that's the slight a slight difference between galashes and rain boots. Um, so hopefully, again, this is a new word for you. If you didn't know this, now you do. Those are galashes and they go over your shoes. Uh, I told you I don't wear them to be honest. I don't really wear rain boots either. I just when it's raining, I just go outside in my shoes.

Uh, Max, Yashar, Vivian, uh, Lai, Angela, uh, Kevin, spring break is the phrase. And I think again, it's mostly associated with schools when school is off for a week and you say, well, it's spring break. And I think in many other countries, there's also a break in the springtime. I don't know if many people would refer to it as spring break, but yes, in the US, you'd say, oh, like where are you going to go for spring break? And as you can see in the picture, a popular destination would be just traveling to to the beach. The next one that I have for you is, and this one I think is a little more challenging, so I'll I'll be impressed if uh if you guys get this one. It's a word that describes weather that is pleasantly warm. So, we've already talked about weather a little bit already. Um, a breeze is like a gentle wind. And often you might talk about a gentle breeze. In this case, we're saying the weather. It's pleasantly warm. It's what? It's one word. And this is the word that I took it straight from the dictionary as to what this word means. And I told you I think it's one that to be honest, I don't often use this word. Um, others might, but you know, if you want to describe weather that's pleasantly warm, which happens in the spring, you would say it's what? And I see one correct answer so far uh given by Victoria. Excellent. That is the word. So, you would I mean you could of course many of you are putting mild. You could describe like, hey, it's you know the weather's a bit mild like in terms of it's warm. I think pleasantly would be the kind of the key to say yes, it is balmy. Balmy means like pleasantly warm that you're that you enjoy this the weather that's outside. Um and typically I think spring there are days that are pleasantly warm and you could say yes it's balmy um outside. So excellent. I see some other correct answers. Uh Mark, Angela, well done, Alex. Perfect. And I told you it's it's this is not a word that I uh often use. Typically, I think many people would just say, "Hey, it's a nice day outside. Uh it's a beautiful day. It's gorgeous." But again, it's always good to build your vocabulary. It helps with your comprehension. And then you could use it as well. But I like I said, this is probably a more advanced word because it's not one that you're you're always going to hear when it's pleasantly warm outside.

But it's all about learning new words. That's what it's all about. So here I gave another sentence. Uh I provided the picture to give you a little more context and I maybe I made it a little too easy because I do think these are very common words and this is true. Uh this is kind of about myself. Every spring the m in the air gives me what what are the two words that would go in those blanks? And you could use the picture to help you out. Um, but this is definitely something I would say about myself. Every spring the m in the air gives me what? And these, like I said, these are, I think, definitely more common words. Um, words that I definitely think you should know.

So, excellent. Great job. Uh, Loi, perfect. Um, sleepwalker. Victoria uh MZZ. Nice. So, the first blank if you're talking about like you see the flowers back there. What is in the air? The pollen is in the air in the spring. Um you know, flowers, everything's blossoming, it's growing, and you have all that pollen in the air. And if you're like me, then it you could you get allergies. And it's actually it's already started for me this year. I've been sneezing a lot yesterday and today and I'm starting to take some uh allergy um medicine for that. So every spring the pollen in the air gives me allergies and that's true. So I think these are definitely good words to know um especially especially if you also are somebody who tends to get allergies in the springtime.

Then we have this right here. This is this is uh I guess maybe you could even think it's a little bit of a biology question. Um this is more challenging. So I've given you these different parts of the flower and I've covered up this one down here which is actually the more difficult word. Um so which part of the flower is this? So you see the flower, the flowering stem, the leaf, and then the roots down at the bottom. Which part is covered up? What word is that? Um, excellent. See some more familiar faces. Bamini, good to see you. Um, what do you think? And I I I think I feel like I'm there's a lot about flowers that I don't know. Um, I know some people may be a bit more familiar with it, so maybe this is a little easier for you. Uh, because I am seeing excellent uh, a lot of great questions.

Uh, are great answers for this one. Yes, Vivian, Victoria, Christine, um, Spatlana, Lai, Yashar, Bamini, Angela, the correct answer. Yes, this is the bulb. So the bulb of a flower in botney, botany is the study of plants is a modified stem that is the resting stage of certain seed plants. That is not my definition. That is uh from the internet. But to give you an idea of exactly what it is if somebody's talking about the bulb, but many of you got that one. So excellent. Uh I'm very impressed. Well done. Good job. If you got that one right, hit that like button. Let me know. It tells me how many people are actually participating in the lesson. So, this one, um, there could be more than one answer. I I'm I'm looking for a synonym. So, when you think of the spring, people would think of words like renew, refresh, revitalize. And those are all synonyms for another word that begins with an R. All right, so there there actually many R words that are synonyms. These all mean the same thing. Renew, refresh, revitalize. And what other word could you use that is a synonym for these? And I'm very uh very impressed that uh see some couple of uh correct answers already. And this is this is useful because I think it's always good to build your vocabulary with synonyms. You already know the meaning of one word and then you can associate with these other ones and then over time learn which words are more commonly used to talk about different topics. Something else we cover in the the speaking course. But in this case, we're talking about spring. And I think a very common word is the one that's missing like some of you said, which is rejuvenate. Um, that's the that's the word that we were looking for, even though there are other R words. So, Angela, um, who else?

Bamini, Ava, uh, Yapang. So, again, sorry if I mispronounced names. Kevin, um, Sleepwalker, nice, Christine. So, rejuvenate means to make someone um, look or feel young and energetic again. And I think this word is often used with spring because you have that word again. So every year when spring comes around, it's like people feel rejuvenated. Everybody's going they're going outside more often. They're doing more activities. And I think it's just part of the the process. I think a lot I know I feel that way because you see flowers, trees coming to life again and everything just is like it's a good word to know with spring, rejuvenate. Uh the next one that is this one right here. This is um I guess it's a little more of a maybe a biology question too. Um so I'm giving you this example even though it applies to other things as well. Caterpillars change to butterflies. Okay. This uh this change in form and appearance is known as a what? There is a specific word that talks about a change in like the physical form or appearance and it is known as a this. Okay. So, this is the example that I kind of trying to get you to associate with it. A caterpillar changing to a butterfly. You could also use it um to talk about people as well that if somebody just changes the way they look, the physical appearance, maybe they color their hair or they get a bunch of tattoos and you could say, "Wow, this person just did a complete what." And I see some great answers in there. Yes, I told you it's you could think of it as a little bit of a biology word. Metamorphosis. So, a metamorphosis, the meaning of that is a change in one's physical form or appearance. So, great job, uh, Max MZ to Kaya. We know we've talked about this in class. Excellent. Uh, sleepwalker. Uh, and hopefully, again, I if this is a a new word for you, that's great. So you can kind of just keep it in the back of your mind, but this is one that you would uh use to describe like this example. Caterpillar changing to a butterfly. It's a metamorphosis. Uh the next one right here. I thought this picture was funny, so I wanted to include it. It refers to a thorough cleaning of a house or room. This time of the year is called a what? And often I think you might hear people use it in the context like, oh, you know, maybe they're they're cleaning the house. Yeah, we're doing a little bit of a m All right, it's this time of the year. And I think all of us uh I think people can relate to it. Also, I think it's part of just rejuvenating again. And you're doing this thorough cleaning um this time of the year. And this is a phrase that I'm sure you're familiar with that you've heard before. I see many people writing answers down. Excellent. Um, yes, Lai, Kevin, Ava, Victoria, Yashar, uh, Duke, uh, we're talking about a spring cleaning. So, I think when when we clean our place, if somebody asks like, "Hey, what are you doing?" Yeah, we're just doing a bit of a spring cleaning right now. And really trying to clean the place thoroughly.

And also, I think it's associated with maybe getting rid of some of the things you don't need any longer and you're kind of, you know, cleaning out the closets a little bit or really trying to throw some things out, make more space, and you do a spring cleaning. So, it definitely is a thorough thorough cleaning. Perfect. Um, so I think that, like I said, this is a phrase that's pretty common that I think is useful to know this time of the year. Okay. Now, um, this is like, what do you think? I'm really just giving you, uh, two choices. Um, do you, looking at that picture, do you think this plant is sprouting or germinating?

What What do you think? Um, is it sprouting or germinating? And maybe maybe it's a little bit of a trick question. and I'll give you a full uh just a moment to think about it and then of course I'll I'll let you know what's going on. So, is this plant sprouting or germinating? What would you say? And I I guess it's not surprising many people are saying sprouting uh right now. Kevin's saying germinating going against the grain. Okay, so let me let me explain. I told you this is a trick question because in this case for this picture you could use either one. They can be used interchangeably sometimes sprouting and germinating. I could say that plant is sprouting. Um and I could also say it's it's germinating. So the specific difference to sprout means to grow from a seed. So since this plant is so small, it's just coming out of the like the seed and you could say it's sprouting. to germinate is to produce buds. Um, so it's also in this case it's germinating. So when when plants are really just starting to come out of the ground, you could really say it's sprouting or germinating. The one distinction I would make is that it's probably more common for people to use the word sprout because you can use this word to talk about other things as well like uh some you know it's growing quickly. It's really growing. You say wow they're sprouting. Um so this word is more common than germinate. So I think most of the time people would probably look at something like a plant like oh it's it's sprouting. But in this case, you could use either one. So, everybody's correct. Um, good job.

Everybody got this one. If you got this one, then hit that like button. Let me know. Um, that you were just participating. So, to put a finer point on what I just said, I told you that I think that sprouting would be more commonly used. If you have words like this and you have a situation in which you're like, "Okay, these words, they're interchangeable. Which one is more common? A great reference is Google Engram Viewer. And what this is taking is all the the like written English um books, online articles. So you can it maybe is a little more formal, but you can find stuff on there that's a little more informal. But the reason it is you put the words up there and I put sprout and germinate. And basically it's giving you a graph a representation of how common like how frequent the words are used over time. So you can see that germinate in red sprout is in blue that for a time period it seems like from 1860 to 1960 people would use germinate more often especially um in writing and over time it seems like nowadays sprouting is is more common. So, uh I just wanted to point this out as another reference. If you have this situation and you're thinking which like which word or phrase is more commonly used, you can use uh Google Engram viewer. It's a great resource. And then another one um what do you think? What are these called? This is another just visual uh visual vocabulary testing your your knowledge. I think you perhaps are familiar with uh with this word and again I'm putting it in here. This is advanced spring vocabulary. This is something else that this time of year um this is what goes on. Okay. So what do you think? What what are these called?

And I know like I feel like you start seeing some of those answers in the chat and there is yes I remember the word. Um so hopefully again this could be a new word for you. It's very specific because we're talking about these little guys right here. I know the picture looks big but they're actually very small. Um and yes, excellent. Great job. Just going to throw out some names. Kevin, Niha, Vivian, Khalid, Lai. Um, El Negrine, English class, Angela, uh, sleepwalker, mna. Uh, so the answer is tadpoles. These are tadpoles. They the meaning like the the small black creature with a large head and a long tail that lives in water and develops into a frog or toad is called uh a tadpole. And this is something that again happens um in the springtime. And this would be another example of a metamorphosis of a change of a tadpole becoming a frog or a toad would be another example of a metamorphosis. That physical change in appearance. Just wanted to throw that little bit of review in there for you. So I I know these I I just gave you about I think there were 12 or 13 words. Um, they're right here. So, this is the vocabulary list from today. Some of the words we talked about. Um, and yeah, I'm going to put this uh online for members, subscribers, patrons. Um, may even email this out if you are part of our email community. And you can find that link down below as well. So, I my main goal with these is to make this class a bit more interactive. I hope you learn some new words. Uh, great way to build your vocabulary, especially relating it to um certain topics. In this case, the time of year, so it's springtime or it's getting it's coming into spring. These are words or phrases that you may hear this time of year that can be useful or or you may read them u if you're reading the newspaper or some other article. I did want to circle back. I told you um for those of you who are interested in practicing and improving your speaking skills, uh the first week of April, I'm starting a new speaking course, um a new SpeakUp course. It's all about helping you speak confidently, clearly, and naturally. Uh check out that link down in the description. And again, if you have any questions, you can send me an email. the email. This is the course page down here. Um is right down here at the bottom. But on this page, you'll find out a lot more about class times. Um the cost of the course, it's somebody is asking it. It is not free. Uh this is an 8week course. It's $159. You can use the code speak 20 to get $20 off. Um and like I said, if you have other questions, uh you can send me an email.

But this uh this page try gives you a lot of information as to how it's set up and what all is included. So check that out in the link if yeah if you want to speak if you want to speak with me and I see I've you know some familiar faces who have taken the course uh uh like Takayo, Yashar, Bamini. Um I appreciate you guys being here with me today. Again, I hope you learn some new words and phrases. That that is the goal. Thank you, uh, Lai, Sleepwalker, Areli, um, Marcella Parna. Just throw out some last minutes, uh, shout outs. Mark, Christine, Kevin, um, curly, MZ, Udith. Uh, yeah, thank you guys. I hope you enjoy uh, the rest of your weekend. I hope you have uh a wonderful spring. It's it's one of my favorite times of the year. And of course, I will see you guys later for another lesson uh in the future. All right, see you next time. So long.

ADVANCED VERBS FOR WORK | Vocabulary Lesson

[Music] hey everyone my name is Wes from interactive English videos calm and the channel it's all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and today I want to help you build your vocabulary by teaching you some advanced verbs that are related to work and they are advanced which means these verbs are more specific so you may not hear them in everyday English but they will help you better express your thoughts opinions and ideas I'm going to tell you the verb give you the meaning and I will also share with you an example sentence so you can see how the verb is used in context and hopefully this will help you better understand the meaning now just because we're talking about verbs that are related to work that does not mean you can only use these verbs in the work environment you can use them in a variety of situations but I wanted to give you something to associate it with something that is relevant to your life experience because that's going to make it much easier for you to understand so let's begin with our first verb which is expedite to expedite something and this just means to make something happen more quickly so at work maybe you have some process that you have to go through in order to complete or finish something and you may want that to become more efficient and you want it to happen a little quicker and in that case you could say that you want to expedite the process the assembly-line helped expedite the manufacturing process

next is a phrasal verb and that is step down to step down this means that you are giving up a position and when we're talking about work I think often it may be used with somebody who's at a high level and maybe they are forced to step down or perhaps they are asked to step down those are some common collocations that you would use with this phrasal verb and I think you could this could happen for a variety of reasons perhaps there's some scandal and somebody's forced to step down or maybe they're at work there's just a lack of performance and they are asked to step down to give up the position the CEO was asked to step down because the company continued to lose money then we have a crew and to accrue means to increase in the number or amount of something over a period of time so in business perhaps a business takes out a loan and that loan is going to accrue interest this will get added over a period of time or maybe an employee an employee could accrue benefits the longer they work with a company to accrue the loan accrued interest each month then we have the verb cold call and to cold call someone it means to call or visit a possible customer and try to get them to buy something but without them being asked to do so you didn't ask this person to call or visit you I think this has happened to all of us for example we answer the phone and somebody is trying to sell us some product or service we did not tell them to call us but they are cold calling us so you can use this phrase as a verb to cold call someone or you could also use it as a noun to make a cold call and with work I think of someone who who is in sales and perhaps their job is to cold call all of these different people and they're trying to get them to buy their product or service to cold call we constantly cold called people in order to bring in new clients then we have another phrasal verb which is drum up and to drum up means to increase business activity or try to get more support for something for example you may want to drum up demand for a new product so that more people will buy it or perhaps you want to drum up support for some new promotion that you're trying to do to drum up the store tried to drum up business with a new promotion

next is well one of my favorite verbs because I think I like to do it I think all many of us like to do it from time to time and that is to procrastinate and what it means to procrastinate is to delay doing something and and try just putting it off until later mostly because it's something you you don't want to do perhaps it's unpleasant perhaps it's a little boring and you could say that that you are procrastinating at work I think this happens if there is something that we don't really want to do but we have to do it people tend to procrastinate stop procrastinating next is adjourn and to adjourn means to have a pause or rest during some formal meeting or trial and with this verb I tend to think of someone who may work in law or politics it's more of a formal setting so in that case people may use this verb and and talk about a journeying a meeting and and taking a pause taking a rest to adjourn let's adjourn the meeting and we'll get back together next week then we have the verb implore and to implore someone means to ask someone to do something or even not to do something in a very sincere and determined way I think it's more kind of like a professional way of begging and you implore someone to do something you're really you trying to get them to do it or maybe you would implore them not to do something I implore all of you to go ahead and hit that like button that's that's my professional way of begging and saying please please hit the like button she implored her employees to follow the new guidelines next is the verb vacillate 8 and to vacillate means to be uncertain about what to do or to change between different options it's a little similar to the verb hesitate but I think you would often use this verb when there is an important decision that needs to be made and there are some different options that a person may have and they're gonna go back and forth between those options they are vacillating it happens it happens at work because there are many important decisions that need to be made I tend to vacillate when presented with two good options then we have a verb that another one that I really like and that is enlighten to enlighten someone and this means to provide some information or understanding so I think at work if you need to explain something to your colleagues or your boss and you want to help them understand you want to enlighten them and often I think you may use this verb or even hear it being used with just a simple short statement and someone would say enlighten me in which case they're saying help me understand whatever it is you want to explain enlighten me give me that information enlighten me I tried to enlighten my colleagues about the value of working together next is an idiom which is a little more informal but also very relevant when when talking about work and that is to run out of steam and what this means is to lose energy or interest to to continue doing something that you've been working really hard and perhaps you're starting to lose energy and you could say that I'm running out of steam or maybe you've just you're so busy and you're starting to lose interest in what you're doing you could also say I'm running out of steam of course I think at any business any company they don't want their employees to run out of steam he needs a vacation he's starting to run out of steam so I hope I was able to enlighten you with some new vocabulary words and I also hope that you're not running out of steam and you will continue to watch some more English lessons because I just know that you're not going to procrastinate this is something that it must be done don't wait any longer keep watching some lessons and I I'm going to adjourn this lesson right now and I'm just trying to use as many of these words as I can just to help you get a quick review thank you guys so much for watching and I will see you next time

ADVANCED VOCABULARY QUIZ LESSON (Live-Stream)

Hello and welcome to today's lesson. My name is Wes. This is Interactive English. And if this is your first time here visiting our channel, it's all about just helping you practice and improve your English skills. And today, uh, we try to do that in a variety of ways. And today, I want to help you build your vocabulary. Specifically, we are going to be talking about some advanced vocabulary words. And I say that it's advanced and I feel like I'm trying to walk um a fine line here because I really I do want to teach you some more advanced words that are going to help you be more precise and that if you want to describe a situation or express yourself that you will be able to do that with these words because they are more specific. But at the same time, I try to choose words that are not just very random and that they're words that nobody ever uses. I try to find words that you will come across if you're reading a story or maybe you're listening to the news and that you could still use in everyday conversation. So, I say they're advanced. I think they're advanced. Um, and I definitely want to challenge you as well. So, thank you guys so much for joining me. Great to see so many familiar faces. Great to see so many members. Hello Aiden, Lai, um Patri, uh welcome to welcome to the chat. Angela, Nyla, um great to see all of you. So again, this is going to be an interactive lesson because what I want you guys to do is I want you to participate. I'm going to give you um a bunch of different questions and I want you to write your answers in the chat.

And even if you're watching this later, write your answers in the comment. Use it like uh it's a piece of paper. And again, it's just a great way to actually practice, practice, practice, practice, practice. Um and I what I'll do is I'll I'll give you the question and then I will give you a moment to try to think of an answer and then of course I will tell you what the answer is. So let's go ahead and begin. And the first set of questions that I have for you, I'm going to give you the word and I just want you to choose the correct meaning. What is the meaning of this word?

here with cajul. So this I'll go ahead and tell you this is a verb to cajul to cajul someone. What do you think this verb means to cajul? I'll give you a moment and then I will reveal the answer. Does it is it talking about a playful fight? Does it mean to persuade someone? Or does it mean to overcook some food? What do you think? Write your answers in the chat or even in the comments if you happen to be watching this later. To cajul. Excellent. Uh yes, Mike MZ Mazar. Uh Delia Shishri. Yes, the correct answer is B. To cajul someone means to persuade someone. I'm going to add something else. You're persuading them with flattery. And what that means is you're you're just saying a bunch of nice things to this person in order to persuade them. I'll give you an example.

I think of well as a teacher perhaps the students are trying to cajol me into delaying the exam and they say oh Wes we need a little more time to study don't give us the exam tomorrow and you you should do that because you're such a nice teacher you're such a kind teacher so they're saying these things to flatter me so that I will be persuaded to do what they want me to they're trying to cajol me into delaying the exam exam. So, you're really persuading somebody with flattery. All right. Excellent. Uh the next one, flabbergasted. All right. I chose this one. Um I think this one definitely is a little more common. And this is one you may have heard. I just like saying the word uh flabbergasted. It's an adjective. What do you think it means if somebody says that that they were flabbergasted? All right. And maybe I'm I'm giving it away with the context. Do you think it means that somebody is greatly surprised, they're out of breath, or perhaps they're they're just having an upset stomach? All right. Uh, what do you guys think? Write your answer in the chat. If somebody is flabbergasted, again, I said I think this one is a bit more common. It's a great adjective to use. And yes, just to give some great Wow, you guys are rocking this one. Yes. Uh, Aiden, Ruma, uh, Orlando, uh, Aan Athonosas, Saluturus. Sorry if I mispronounced names. I'm just trying to give out as many shout outs as I can. Loi, perfect. The correct answer is a. If you if somebody is flabbergasted, it just means that they're greatly surprised. So, it's a great adjective that you can use to describe someone who is extremely surprised. and you say that this person was flabbergasted. Something happened and they were flabbergasted.

The next question or the next vocabulary word that I have for you is this one, viferous. So again, this is an adjective, viferous. And we can use it, well, you can use it as an adjective. You can use it with other parts of speech as well. And I will uh tell you about that in just a moment. But what do you think is the meaning of viciferous? Does is it talking about the sound of loud music, expressing opinions loudly, or is it talking about the noise of a traffic jam? And the reason we're starting this way and just me asking you for um what you think the meaning is, I feel like this is uh this is a little easier and then it's going to get a bit more difficult as we go through this. So yes, perfect.

Uh Mike, Lories, Aiden, Paulo. Uh if something is uh or someone is viciferous, then it basically means that they are expressing opinions loudly and you're you're doing it with a lot of energy and emotion. And therefore, yeah, you you you would use this word to describe a person and they are talking about the an argument that was just um viciferous. I said that you you would use this with other parts of speech. Um other parts of speech as well because I think you might also commonly use this word as an adverb and you say that somebody was arguing viferously and that they were doing it loudly and they're really expressing their opinion.

Viciferous or as an adverb viciferously. The next one opine. This is a verb. I'll go ahead and tell you to opine. What do you think it means if someone is opining? Um, are they expressing regret? Are they is it mean to express an opinion or just does it mean to express dislike? What do you think? Uh, and if you guys are just joining us again, we're just doing uh this vocabulary uh advanced vocabulary. It's a quiz lesson. So I just ask try to participate take part in this lesson. That is what it's all about. So if somebody uh tuine I said it's a verb. What what do you think? Um excellent. Uh so you guys you guys are rocking this first part. Uh Ario uh Yenja Esther Ba Bashir.

Yes. To uh opine means to express an opinion. So somebody might opine and in that case they are sharing their opinion. And we could combine it with the word that we just talked about. Perhaps somebody might opine viciferously and they are expressing their opinion loudly with a lot of energy and emotion uh to opine. All right. So that is the first part of the vocabulary quiz. The next part that we're going to go through is I am going to give you a statement and I'm going to use uh the word and I want you to see I want you to put the word in context. All right? Using the the sentence, see if you can put the word in context and tell me uh what the meaning of the word is.

So, let's go ahead and begin with this one. All right. Uh, I'll read it for you. It says, "He used irrational arguments and obfuscated the primary issue." All right. I highlighted the word for you. Obfuscated. What does that word mean? It's a You can see that it it's a verb. What do you think it means? and try to use the sentence to try and put the the word into into context and see if you can determine what the meaning of it. What does it mean to obfuscate? Does it mean to highlight the importance to make something less clear or to purposefully lie? All right. And I will say for those of you who are very active and following our channel, I did a lesson ah probably over a year ago about advanced verbs. This is one of them. This is one of the verbs that I talked about to obuscate and maybe maybe many of you have seen that. Yes, excellent. Uh perfect boost your English Nyla uh Lai Andrea. The correct answer is B. To obiscate means to make something less clear and I'll go ahead and add something else. You could say you are trying to make it more difficult to understand. So in this case to give you an example I think of perhaps politicians. If somebody does not want to tell the truth or they want to talk about some issue and do it in a way that may confuse other people and then you could say they're trying to obiscate the truth or they're trying to obiscate some issue or some problem and they want to make it more difficult to understand. They want to make it less clear. So that is an example as to when you may come across this word or perhaps even use it to obiscate. The next one is, "The student asked me my age. It was such an important question." All right. The student asked me my age.

It was such an impertinent question. I think that uh this is it's an adjective and I think it is a fairly common adjective. So, this may be one that perhaps you are familiar with already. Um impertinent. What do you think it means if you describe someone or something as impertinent? Does it mean that it's showing ignorance, it's inquisitive, or it's lacking respect? All right. What do you think? Uh, excellent. Yes. Uh, Yenja. Uh, Lai Ladan, Angela, Tan, uh, Aiden. Yes. If if you say that someone or something is impertinent, it means that it is c. It is lacking respect. And I use this adjective before a noun saying it was an impertinent question because I I think depending on the country, the culture as well as the situation like a a teacher student relationship, you may not you you may not want to ask someone their age and you could say that it's lacking respect. Often I think you would use this adjective as a predicate adjective at the end of uh the sentence and you may describe someone and say that this person is impertinent. Um so I often think this adjective may come uh as a predicate adjective after the verb to be and you'd say somebody is impertinent or they are impertinent um in its lacking respect. The next question I have for you is this one's a little more difficult. Over the years, our high school reunions have become uh peruncater. All right. Over the years, our high school reunions have become peruncater. So, I'm talking about this situation of a high school reunion um and describing it as peruncater. So, what do you think? Does that mean that it is done quickly without care, increasingly interesting or necessary to attend? Which of those uh is the meaning of peruncater?

greeting. Somebody might describe a greeting as perfunctory. If you meet somebody on the street and they say hello, but it's really just done quickly. It doesn't seem like they want to talk to you. And that is the way. And you could say it was a perfunctory greeting. It was done quickly without much care or interest. It's perfunctory. The next one is he had had better days. That's why he found his roommate's celebratory mood quite irksome. All right. What do you think? He had had better days. That's why he found his roommate's celebratory mood quite irksome. Does irksome, that is the word that uh I've highlighted. Does that mean that something is comforting, surprising, or annoying? What do you think? Write your answers in the chat or even in the comments later. Again, it's interactive English. I want all of you guys to interact and participate in these lessons. So, he had had better days. I'm using the uh the past perfect there.

That's a good example of the past perfect. Had had uh he had had better days. That's why he found his roommate's celebratory mood quite irksome. So, if you if you say, "Well, I've had better days," then that means that well, you didn't have a good day. So if somebody has a celebratory mood perhaps you would find that exom which means that you would find it quite annoying. So if you describe something as irksome it just means that it is annoying. I think many of you um kind of you did well with that one. Excellent. Um so the next part again we have another part to this vocabulary practice quiz. So, what I'm going to do for this part is I'm going to give you uh a sentence with a blank. So, there's a blank in there. And I want you to tell me which vocabulary word best completes the sentence. So, in this case, you really need to know the meaning of the word and you really need to understand the context of the sentence. What's it trying to say? Now, I will give you a few different options. I will only go over the correct answer. Um, I'm not going to talk much about some of the other words because they are also advanced. Um, I want to keep this lesson at a reasonable length. So, let's begin uh with this one, which is there's a monument to pay to her achievements. There's a monument to pay to her achievements. Which of those words, those vocabulary words, best completes this sentence? So, you really got to try and do both. Now, put it into context as well as understand the meaning of the word. Uh, and of course, you can take a guess if you want. Uh, but I'll give you a moment. What do you think? There's a monument to pay pilgrimage, to pay homage, or to pay a mortgage. All right. What do you think? Um, so yes. Excellent. Uh, [laughter] perfect. Sid, um, Manati, Abin, Lai, Kadija, Leonardo. If we're talking about, uh, in this case, the correct answer is B, homage. All right, there's a monument to pay homage to her achievements. And homage is talking about a deep respect that you show for someone. And I think th this is actually a collocation. Pay homage. To pay homage, those two words are frequently used together. So if you're talking about homage, it is quite quite often you will uh it's going to be used with that verb to pay homage. The next one is right here. I could say that the company their income on the tax forms. Which word best completes this sentence? The company inundated their income on the tax forms. The company capitulated their income on the tax forms or the company fabricated their income on the tax forms. So, write your answer in the chat uh in the comments again. See see what you guys uh [laughter] see if you guys can get this. So there is only there is only one correct answer. Um and wow getting some different responses here. All right. So excellent. Uh yes, Nord. Uh 1990. All right. Uh have some right answers. This one's a little more challenging. uh Jerry uh Nikita uh Mazar Kareem. So the correct answer is C fabricated. All right. Uh in this case the company fabricated their income on the tax forms which is not something that you want to do because to fabricate something means to create something false in order to deceive someone. So you could use it with um somebody might fabricate a story. That is a common way in which you would use this verb to fabricate. The next one is this question right here. I can't believe my family had the m to go on vacation without me. I can't believe my family had the m to go on vacation without me. Which word best completes the sentence? complacency, tammerity or the posity. All right. And there is only one of those words will accurately complete this sentence. What do you think? Again, try to think of the context, the situation. Somebody is saying this. They're talking about this. I can't believe my family had the to go on vacation without me. What would you say?

Complacency to posity. Um, all right. Yes, this one. Uh, okay. Still some mix. Uh, yes. On loca. Uh, alamin. Perfect. Yesia. So, the word that we're looking for is be. Tammerity. I can't believe my family had the tmerity to go on vacation without me. Tammerity is um it's a noun and it's talking about the willingness to do something that may upset others. So in this case, you would use it in talking about a situation that you're really surprised that somebody did something because it's likely to upset others. And you would say, "I don't believe they had the tmerity to do this thing." The willingness to do it because it would upset other people.

Like in this example, if your family leaves and goes on vacation without you, yeah, I'd be a little upset, too. And I'd be like, I can't believe I can't believe they would do this, that they had the temerity to go on vacation without me. All [snorts] right, the next one. Some people believe that technology is a m for solving climate change. Some people believe that technology is a m for solving climate change. Which word completes that sentence? This this is a this is a this is definitely a more advanced word. I think all of these are more advanced. Is it uh panacea rigmmoral cloer? What do you think best completes this sentence? Some people believe that technology is a m for solving climate change. Uh all right. Well, like uh I think you guys doing well on this one.

Yes. Li Nikita MZ Shaloo. Uh [laughter] Angela Tan. All right. [snorts] So the answer that we're looking for is a panacea. So some people believe that technology is a panacea for solving climate change and a panacea is talking about well just something that will solve all problems. So in this case uh climate change is a problem and some people may believe that well technology is going to help us solve this problem. It's a panacea for this problem as well as others and they may believe that it solves all of our different problems and it is a panacea. Excellent. So those are the the words that I wanted to go over with you in this lesson. And again, if you guys do like what uh what we do here at Interactive English, if you want to become uh a member, support our channel, uh you can get a YouTube membership or become a patron. We offer some different and cool rewards. There are links down in the description below if you want to check that out. So remember, these are the words I put together, this word list, and I will put these words in the description part of this lesson. Um, actually wait, no, I don't think I don't think I will. Uh, because I don't want to just give you the answer to some of these questions. So, this this is your word list in case you want to review and maybe practice some more. Wait uh a few weeks, watch the lesson again and see if you remember the the meaning of these words. It is a great way to get exposure to new words. And then the more you practice with them, the more you hear them, the more you read them, you're just going to uh you're going to internalize the meaning so that when you want to speak or write, you will be able to use this word correctly. You're going to put it in your active memory. So, here are the words that we talked about uh from this lesson. I hope that you guys I think you guys did very well for the most part.

Um, you guys knew most of those. Again, I do think they are more advanced words, but I tried to find words that are also common that you would hear in a TV show, movie, or if you're watching the news, but you could probably also use in conversation depending on the the context and the situation. So, thank you guys so much for joining me. Thank you, Anderson. Um, all too easy. All right, I'll make it more difficult next time then. Uh, Olivia, uh, Paulo, Lai, Rose, uh, Aiden, Ruma, Rod, good to see you. Uh, Samuel, Lucky, just trying to give some quick shoutouts at the end. I try to say as many names uh, as possible and acknowledge all of you because I really appreciate you being here with me. [snorts] I hope that you have uh a wonderful rest of the weekend. Thank you guys so much for joining me and watching this video.

Uh keep practicing and keep up the good work and I will see you next time. So long.

LESSON 124 OF 749

ADVANCED VOCABULARY QUIZ | Do You Know These Words?

I think so all right what is up everyone so I hope I hope this is working this is the first time we've tried like setting an event and and trying this live so this I hope it I hope it should be working right now I actually just started doing the lesson when it wasn't streaming and I was basically talking to myself but welcome to today's lesson I have a super fun lesson for you today it's it is a vocabulary lesson and this lesson the reason I say it's special it's fun is because it's going to be completely interactive because I'm going to ask you questions I want you guys to answer it I want you to engage with the lesson if you're watching it now even if you're watching this later if you're watching this a year from now I still want you to participate and and just use that comment section like it's a piece of paper and write down the answer and then at the end you can comment and that way I know that you guys were actually participating in the lesson so today I have I'm gonna give you a quiz alright and it's not just any quiz it is a vocabulary quiz now I will tell you that the vocabulary words that I'm going to give you today they are more advanced words all right many of you ask us they're like oh I want some advanced vocabulary these are definitely more advanced words which means you're not going to hear these words if you everyday when you walk outside or if you turn on the TV you will hear them from time to time because they are great and very specific words so that some of them may be a bit difficult but you know it's always good to practice and learn new words and that's the best way to improve your fluency so I just want to say hello to some of you you guys have been waiting in the chat for me grace go SIA Lally hi

how are you guys Nelson wifey muhr nell Sabean jr welcome welcome welcome it's great to have you guys here thank you guys for joining us and let's see I want to talk to you oh okay some technical difficulties so I want to begin before we jump into our quiz all right I want to go ahead and just tell you real quickly okay why is it important to build your vocabulary all right there are three reasons why it's important this is very important stuff the first one is it just gives you greater comprehension and when I mean when I say greater comprehension that when you're listening to a TV show or a movie or you're listening during a lecture then you're going to know these words and be able to identify the vocabulary so that you can just follow along with what is being said and that way you don't have to stop and think to yourself oh what is that word I didn't get that and then the conversation continues and then suddenly you're lost that happens to me all the time so the more you build your vocabulary the greater comprehension you have the easier it is to follow along with different conversations or whatever it is you're listening to so that's why it is so so so important another reason is that you can just more easily communicate and produce the language if you're having a free-flowing conversation and you're talking about a variety of topics you could be talking about education you could be talking about health care government and no matter what you want to say which is the third one you're going to be able to accurately express your thoughts your opinions and your ideas and really use specific words in order to do so and that's why it's important when you learn new words to practice using them so that you remember and then you can continue using them on into the future and the next time you're having a conversation so these are three very important reasons why you should continue to build your vocabulary right so as I said if you are just joining us I'm gonna give you guys a vocabulary quiz and I'm going to ask you there are 12 different questions so what I'm going to do is I'm gonna ask you the question all right the vocabulary question I'll give you a little bit of time to try and answer you can write all of them are multiple choice too so you can write the word or you can just write the letter and you know what what do you think the answer is and then I'm going to tell you the answer and give you the meaning as well as some example sentences so you can see how the word is used in different context all right so again if you're worth if you're with me now write the answer in the chat all right I want to hear from all of you guys and even if you're watching this later I expect you to participate in the lesson and actually you know use that comment section write the answer and then we will go over them with you all right so we see a lot of people are you guys ready I hope you guys are ready to practice okay so hello Sudeep Jatinder Lyn SWAT Fareed sorry if I missed some names it is great to see all of you so now let's let's just get to it are you ready you ready to practice so the first word the first question that I have for you is this one all right what is a synonym for contrived alright

that's the word right there contrived now a synonym is a word that has the same meaning or a very similar meaning so you're thinking of the word contrived which one of those words a b c or d has the same meaning or just a very similar meaning what do you guys think I want you to write your answer in the chat I'll give you a few more seconds and then I'll go over it with you so if something is contrived that means it is what all right what do you guys think all right seeing some answers I don't know some question marks and no idea okay this is good okay so if something is contrived the answer is D it's artificial so contrived is an adjective and a lot of the times it's used after the verb to be and they talk about something is contrived and it just means that you it's having a unnatural or false appearance it's artificial it's fake so for example I was talked in a contrived British accent it's used as an adjective it's a fake British accent so if I were to say like hey hello hello mate chap how's it going you know today I'm just sitting in my flat giving this English lesson here and you can see that is a very bad British accent it is horrible it's fake it's artificial it's contrived okay the next one the story line seems a bit contrived often I think if you're talking about somebody's telling a story I think that's a common way that it's used and you say yeah the story is contrived and it could be somebody talking about their experience and they're saying oh this is what happened and you're like yeah I don't know it sounds a little fake it sounds a little artificial it's false it's contrived so I think that's one way it's commonly used and often it's used after that the verb to be something is contrived so now you know if something is contrived it's fake jr. good accent that really okay well I appreciate that but yeah that didn't sound FAO Samara thank you all right I'll take it I guess all right the next question that I have for you this one I think may be a little easier for you all right so in this one I'm giving you the meaning but I've just put that blank there so blank means completely exhausted drained of strength and energy so what do you what do you guys think completely exhausted drained of strength and energy that is the meaning of one of these words right here what do you guys think a B C or D write your answer in the chat and even if you guys don't know this or even if you don't know just take a guess have fun with it it's always great practice practice practice and if you're watching this later right you know use that use those comments make a list 1 to 12 write your answer and then hit comments so that I way I know okay you actually you took the quiz so many of you said yes a lot of you perfect D fatigued that is the answer it is an adjective if somebody is fatigued or they feel fatigued it means that they feel completely exhausted they are drained of strength and energy for example my sentence she was so fatigued she hurt everywhere sometimes if you are fatigued it means that you are really really exhausted you are really tired and sometimes yeah your your muscles hurt when you're fatigued I this happened to me recently all right many of you know if you follow us on on Instagram Twitter or Facebook you should check that out Wes felt fatigued after the marathon a few weeks ago I ran a marathon and afterwards I was exhausted I actually I hurt my body hurt I felt fatigued so as well as we're doing these words to again you guys feel free practice in the chat write a sentence share a sentence with us it's always great to practice next question already so this is another different type of question this is just a gap fill where I give you the sentence and I want you to fill in which word appropriately completes the sentence the family grew a amount of vegetables in their garden the family grew a amount of veg Stables in their garden what do you guys think the answer is as I'm looking through these I don't think there is not more than one answer I don't think there should be in any of these so how would you guys complete this sentence which of these words would you use to complete the sentence what do you guys think I'll give you a hint for this one the key word to me the key word is amount all right if we're talking about amount what do you guys think I things are right a lot of it let up jump a B a B so again you could say if you're talking about a plethora you're talking about you know a variety a difference but I said the key word is amount and if you're talking about amount you're talking about a number specifically so then that case the answer is copious a copious is an adjective and it means large in quantity or number something that is abundant so I was talking about in that one a copious amount of vegetables I said ammount we're talking about a number and if it's a copious amount that just means it is a large amount so for example right here she took she took copious notes during the class lecture so if somebody was taking copious notes that means they're taking notes again and again and again and again they are taking many notes a large amount it is a copia they are taking copious notes this one down here we just finished we traveled to LA when we were back in the US and yes Los Angeles has a copious amount of vehicles on the road there is a lot of traffic in Los Angeles way too much traffic and there are a copious amount of cars on the road so again if you're talking about a copious amount you're talking about a large large number all right so those are the first first few for you let's do another one again if you're just joining us we're just taking a vocabulary quiz I'm gonna ask you the question you give me the answer and then I'll tell you the answer so the next question it's another synonym one all right what is a synonym for hypocrisy this is a good word I really I really enjoy this word it's something you know you know it's a hypocrisy what's a synonym for the word hypocrisy again we're talking about a synonym so it can be something that has the same meaning or just a very very similar meaning all right what do you what do you guys think the answer is a hypocrisy and again don't don't worry take a guess if you don't know don't be shy don't worry about I don't want to say anything everybody's just writing down write down your answer and if you don't know just write a question mark it's okay it's okay if you don't know all of these answers so if we're talking about a hypocrisy I think many of you you got this one a deceitfulness all right so hypocrisy is a noun and it's talking about the false appearance of virtuous character or high standards it's deceitfulness because you're saying it's like somebody who's saying one thing and then they do something else for example all right this is I think this is true in many many countries you could say the hypocrisy of the government is stunning so for example many governments out there would be like you know all people should be good we should do good things we should not steal you know we're government officials and then many politicians they do that they they steal they they lie they cheat and then you could say well that is that's a hypocrisy you're saying one thing and then you're you're saying one thing to be like oh we have good character but then you do you do the exact opposite it's a hypocrisy again this is another great example my boss is known for his hypocrisy he tells us to arrive on time but he's always late so if the boss says you know oh you guys you need to be on work you need to be at work on time you should never be late but then the boss arrives late that's a hypocrisy and if you want to use it as an adjective you would say hypocritical somebody is hypocritical all right excellent so let's do another question this one right here what do you think it's another I give you the meaning you just have to fill in the blank hmm means something added to something else in order to enhance it what do you think something added to something else in order to enhance it you're trying to enhance something you're trying to make it better alright so what would you say means something added to something else in order to enhance it okay what do you guys think uh some of you yes excellent all right we got some good answers in there the answer is B supplement so supplement that is a noun and again it means something added to something else in order to enhance it for example I could say you know and I do this well not to increase my endurance but he takes vitamin supplements to increase his endurance you can take vitamin supplements to increase your endurance you can take it to get more vitamins get vitamin C there are many different supplements that people can take to give them you know more energy more more vitamins so again it's something added to something else or in this example right here I could say the worksheet is a supplement to the course material so if I'm teaching a class and I teach the class and I say well here before in take this worksheet it's going to help you out it's a supplement it's added to something else which is the course to make it to make it better to enhance it is to supplement the next one already alright again this is just a complete the sentence okay which word best completes this sentence what do you guys think people who seek peace violence alright people who seek peace violence how would you complete that that sentence which word makes sense when you want to complete that sentence you're talking about two opposite things peace and violence so people who seek peace they want peace what do those people think about violence what would you say alright so some of you okay yes all right yes this one most of you if people who seek peace abhor violence all right it is C abhor that is the answer because that is a verb and it means to disregard with extreme hatred or disgust so if you're somebody who likes peace then you hate violence you abhor violence so if you AB something it's not that you just hate it you really really hate it so for example you could say I abhor this type of insulting behavior if somebody is being rude or mean or insulting you'd say yes I just I abhor their behavior you could also say if you for example if you abhor racism you don't like it you can make a difference by fighting it all right you can fight against it all right so if you have poor something then yes you really really really dislike it so let me know how are you guys doing how many we just did six questions right then how have you guys been doing how many out of six did you get right what do you guys think all right so while you're telling me how many out of six you got again I just want to give you a reminder let you know if you guys like what we do then you can check us out on patreon if you want to help support free education free English education we have some very cool rewards we will leave a link in the description so what do you guys think I see some 5 out of 6 mistake - sunshine great job go SIA excellent Ronin well done on assume 6 out of 6 excellent perfect so again let's let's just keep practicing I have some more questions for you so this is great it's great to be able to practice and and then hopefully the more you practice then the more likely you are to actually remember and retain the words so that you can use them correctly the next time you are having a conversation or maybe even if you're writing and you're writing an email so let's continue the next question is this one acquiesce what is a synonym for acquiesce what do you guys think alright write your answer in the chat and if you're watching this later write the answer in the comments because I want to know that you guys are participating in these lessons which this is Interactive English you're supposed to interact with us alright so what is a synonym for acquiesce alright acquiesce it makes me think of a movie and that is actually one of my example sentences which I will show you in a moment so acquiesce all right we see some okay some different answers in here alright so if to acquiesce it is a synonym it basically means to comply to comply means yes to do with to do what somebody is requesting so acquiesce is a verb and it means to accept something without protest to comply and just do as you're asked do as you're told so that first example sentence bonus points to whoever can guess the movie what movie is that from I'm disinclined to acquiesce to your request I told you that it made me think of a movie and I actually had to look up the quote because I want to make sure I got it right I'm disinclined to acquiesce to your request bonus points if you can tell me the name of that movie the next one the next example sentence the board will acquiesce to any decision the CEO makes so if the CEO makes a decision the board will acquiesce they will not challenge the CEO and they'll say okay whatever do what you want another one this is a good sentence for me to me the students acquiesced to the teachers demands so when I'm in the classroom I say hey this is what I want you guys to do and the students acquiesce they accept it they don't protest and they just do whatever homework I might give them so the students acquiesce to the teachers demands so no guesses about what what movie that's from Star Wars no not really start now the the movie is Pirates of the Caribbean Pirates of the Caribbean it's they have like six of them now but in the first one the first one that came out gosh maybe like ten years ago Pirates of the Caribbean this is something that they said I think a few times in the movie I'm disinclined to acquiesce to your request so again you will find these words if you're listening to a lecture or or watching TV or watching a movie you will come across some of them so it is good to know this next word I think is a very common one nowadays it's becoming more and more common and that is well first I got to give you the question I don't want to give you the answer all right blank means to divide into two different opposing groups okay that's the meaning I want you to tell me what what word has this meaning to divide into two different opposing groups okay so when I say groups okay I want you to think I'm talking about most mostly people I guess you could talk about animals but something living it's mostly you're talking about people so it's not like you're talking about groups of objects you're talking about groups of people and it means to divide into two different opposing groups and I said it's so common nowadays because a lot of times it has to do with politics okay we hear this word a lot when you people are talking about politics and many of you yes you got it right excellent the answer is a polarize polarize it's a verb and it means to divide into two different opposing groups so for example I say that you know it's happening a lot in the United States when we're talking about our politics I think in many other countries I know that you guys are from all over the world but I think it might be happening in some of your countries as well in your politics that people are polarized they either they're either on this side or they're on this side so for example Donald Trump has completely polarized the company the canopic company the country he has completely polarized the country where you many people are very much anti Trump or they're very much Pro Trump and they are in two different opposing groups you can also talk about it like in this case I think this is another good example because again we're talking about people the brexit decision was polarizing and if something is polarizing again it's dividing the people into two different categories you are either for something or you are against it so again if we're talking about politics this word it's being used more and more and more and more because people are you know they're either on one side or they're on the other side and you'd say they are polarised alright the next question which word best completes the sentence okay what do you guys think what do you think which word best completes the sentence Marco Polo was an explorer all right Marco Polo was an explorer this one you know I there is a hint which you can automatically process of elimination you could get rid of one word altogether the other ones again we're talking about an adjective technically speaking you could maybe use any of those adjectives but there's one in particular because again the key word is Explorer and also Marco

Polo if you know who Marco Polo is and a little bit about his life then you would know okay what kind of Explorer he is what do you guys think most you yes excellent you guys got this the answer is C intrepid okay the key word was n so you know it should start with a vowel sound all right which gave means infantile and trumpet obnoxious again maybe he was some of those I really don't know but he was definitely an intrepid explorer which is an adjective that means fearless or adventurous somebody who is intrepid I like to think that I am an intrepid person I love to travel go places have new adventures have some excitement in life so I would like to think that I am intrepid so my example sentence which is more like an example story she has an intrepid spirit okay why well why is it intrepid because instead of flying she took a train then got on a ferry and guys I am intrepid lolly excellent perfect this one I think we're okay we're seeing a bit more of a variety so we're talking about an antonym the word that is the opposite and the answer would be d unreserved which means that timid reticent shy those are all synonyms for demure and that is what the word means so demure is an adjective and it means reserved you're modest you're shy you're you're a little reticent you you're not just looking to to speak and say hey everybody look at me so my example sentence I apologize I this was from a story I just got this it's a quote in a book the sentence is a little it's a bit heavy she spoke with the Damier dignity of which the picturesque value was well known to her all right the demure dignity a modest dignity in this sense I think they're talking about it means modest alright somebody who doesn't brag and say how wonderful they are they're demure a demure dignity being modest in this case he's a demure old man who rarely leaves the house it's more like shy you're a little more reticent you're more reserved you don't want to leave alright so if somebody is demure then you know it's a bit you know shy modest reserved you're not outspoken demure so let's continue with this question right here alright I'm giving you the meaning all right means capable of being perceived by touch real or actual so something blank means capable of being perceived by touch or it just means something that is real something that is actual which word has that meaning and these are these are meanings that I've taken I didn't make them up I took them straight from different online dictionaries and kind of just came up with what I thought was I think maybe more of an easy-to-understand meaning so that everybody you guys can follow along with this so what do you think it means alright write your answer in the chat or in the comments if you're watching it later so many of you I think you guys got this one be tangible is the answer tangible it's an adjective and that means capable of being perceived by touch something that is real something that is actual it is tangible so some example sentences I could say the rain brings tangible benefits to the community and that's a good word I think especially like in in business English if you want to talk about something something that has tangible benefits real benefits actual benefits again it's not always something that you have to be able to touch but oftentimes it is but in this case you're talking about tangible benefits something that's real in this case some people enjoy tangible gifts while others would rather spend time whoops that should be with friends I forgot my preposition there while other would rather spend time with friends so for example some people like it's like Oh what would you rather do would you rather take a vacation or get a car some people would be like well I'd rather have that car it's something that's tangible it's something that that I can touch that I can perceive that's real and I would rather have a tangible gift so again tangible it's something that's real all right next one let's do this one all right how would you complete that sentence right there I rejected the request but they tried to me into signing the document all right what would you use to complete that sentence I rejected the request but they tried to me into signing the document so you know you just try to put it into context if you're not sure which which which word or MS think about the context of the situation all right what's happening and maybe that'll help you decide well which word it is all right

what do you guys think all right getting a lot of answers excellent keep answering that's this is the best way to practice so I think a lot of you yes the answer is a coerce I rejected the request I said no but they still try to coerce me into signing the document and that is a verb and it means to persuade an unwilling person or individual to do something by using force or threats you could also try to get them to do it by by tricking somebody to I think you could be coerced by trickery but mostly it's you're persuading somebody to do something that doesn't want to do it and you're persuading them by force or threat that's the that's the common way to coerce somebody in this case he even men to coerce the children into doing the dishes so in in this case the word doesn't have like a strong negative meaning it's almost more trickery more playful like oh you coerce the children into doing the dishes you trick them and you got them to do the dishes even though they didn't want to in this case it is a little more you know strong with force or threat thus the oh it should be sorry another typo the suspects the schmuck the suspects were coerced into turning over the evidence they were coerced they were persuaded to do so by force or by threat I hope it helps to see these words being used in these different sentences to really put it in context to to understand the meaning and to see how they're used I really hope that's helping you guys right there so coerce is to persuade an unwilling participant so these are today's twelve words these are the words that we used in the quiz I want you to think right now how did you do let me know write it in the chat or write it in the comments if you're watching this later on how many did you get correct how well did you do did you get half of them correct six out of 12 did you do really well and get 10 out of 12 or maybe you got all of them correct even if you didn't do well it's okay because you are still practicing your English trying to build your vocabulary and learn new words because that's really what's going to help you improve your English fluency so again in the chat let me know how did you guys do let I'd love to hear from you guys so let's look at somebody people Oh 10 out of 12 excellent 10 out of 12 Pedro great job Pedro great job junior anak you're welcome Rosa's 9 Wafi 7 perfect all right guys that's great and hopefully what I hope today is that even if you didn't get all of them correct that maybe you've learned a new word and even if you just learned one new word that is one more word than you knew yesterday and that is an improvement so I hope you can remember that word go practice using it and again that's the best way to improve your skills and even if you want to you can come back and watch this lesson later on to remind yourself how to use these vocabulary words and see those sentences so you can understand the context in which they are used so thank you guys for joining me today I hope you enjoyed this interactive vocabulary quiz if you did please like and share this with all your friends helped us build grow and expand our classroom if you have any questions write those in the comments once the video gets posted and remember check us out on social media Facebook Instagram Twitter it's another great way to continue practicing and improving your English because we ask you a bunch of questions some of them are vocabulary questions like we did throughout today's lesson so thank you guys Ronen Barbara do knock Pedro what a nose yes Sierra Luke thank you thank you thank you Junior I appreciate you guys being here I appreciate you guys tuning in for these lessons I hope you find them useful and remember if you want to check out some of those cool rewards I was talking to you about check us out on patreon we'll leave a link in the description so thank you thank you thank you I hope you guys enjoy the rest of your weekend and we will see you next time so long

LESSON 125 OF 749

ADVANCED VOCAB FOR 2026! Words & Phrases You Should Know

I want to teach you some incredibly useful and advanced words that you can use and that I think you should know for 2026. So, I say that this vocabulary is very useful because I think these are words and phrases that are trending. They're becoming more popular. We're using them in more context. And I'll talk a little bit about that as we go through the lesson. And if you are somebody who wants to build your vocabulary in 2026, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way, I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. And if you would like to get these lesson notes next to me, click on the link down below in the description.

Join my email community. And if you are already a part of it, then check your inbox. I have sent them to you. So, of course, this this is a quiz lesson. I want you to participate. That's what it's all about. This is after all interactive English. So, I'm giving you the sentence and the missing word as well as the first letter because this one's a little little tricky, but and I'm giving you the meaning down below. The manager gave the team some H to adjust the timeline as long as the final deadline was met. So, the word begins with the letter L. I don't know if you can see it too well, but I'll go ahead and tell you that the meaning of this word, it refers to the amount of freedom that is available to move or even the to act on something like make a decision.

So, the manager gave the team some what uh to adjust the timeline. They're going to make this decision on their own as long as they as long as the final deadline is met. And what is it that you are giving this team or you would give someone somewhat I think this is a a a great word be especially in a work context and you're talking about that amount of freedom that you may have or you could use it and say well you do not have much what and in that case you don't have a lot of freedom. So, the word that we're talking about, I see it. Uh, great job. Uh, nice, Katarina, Julia. Leeway.

Leeway refers to the amount of freedom that is available to move or act. And you might give someone some leeway. Or somebody might say, I I don't have much leeway. Now, I see somebody wrote wiggle room. They mean the same thing. So, in this case, you could also use wiggle room. In this context, they are synonyms. So that's actually also another great phrase. The manager gave the team some leeway, some amount of freedom to adjust the timeline as long as the final deadline uh was met. Just to give you a little more context because I think this also helps you build your vocabulary, I want to share with you some collocations with this word. And often you might use it with a quantifier and talk about, you know, somebody has a little leeway or they have some leeway or maybe you you're asking for more leeway in order to do something or maybe say, look, I don't have much leeway. I don't have much freedom.

and and you have a lot of leeway. So there are many quantifiers that you can use with this noun and I wanted to share some of them with you. What do you think? Uh here is the next question that I have for you. Write your answers in the comments in the chat. I just want to know that everybody's participating. the company's public statement felt what begins with the letter P rather than a genuine commitment to improvement. So we're talking about an adjective here. This that's the part of speech and the meaning of this word is done or expressed for the sake of appearance especially to impress others or just to improve your own image. And I think this is a good context to to think about this word the company's public statement. It felt this rather than genuine. So well I'll talk a little bit a bit about it when I tell you the word or show you the answer. What adjective? What word starts with a P and you're basically saying it's not it's not genuine. It's really I don't I was about to say it uh that not political pretentious those are not the words I this is a word that well part of it is commonly used uh especially as a verb but this again we're using it as a descriptive adjective when you want to say it's not really it's not really genuine when talking about this performance which which is a noun that's very common or to perform. But in this case, I'm going to take that word as part of the word family, use it as an adjective to say that something is performative.

So, the one thing I was going to say is that it does have more of a negative connotation because you're using it to say that well, this other person or group of people, they're not they're not sincere in what they're saying. it is actually a performance and they just want to look good or they just they don't mean what they say and you could describe this action speech behavior as performative. It is done or expressed for the sake of appearance that you and and maybe to impress someone or maybe you're doing it for your own image or your reputation and you could say that it is performative. So the example sentence, just to read it one more time with that word, the company's public statement felt performative rather than a genuine commitment to improvement. And it's just something they do for the sake of their own appearance. And you want to use it in a negative way and say, "Yeah, that's really just performative. It's all a it's a show. That's all it really is. These people aren't sincere or this person is not genuine. It's just performative." Here is the next one. This is a phrase. This is a phrase that I like and I feel like I've been using it more. Maybe I've I've been around other people who've been using this. Uh so let's let's have a look. He failed to m the m and made a joke that landed poorly during a tense meeting. I'm giving you the first word there. There are actually three words that are missing. The first word begins with the letter R. Mm. Them.

So, somebody is in a meeting, they make a joke, and it's like, "Okay, that, you know, that landed poorly. Nobody was laughing. People maybe thought it was a little awkward, and they're surprised that this person would even attempt to make the joke." And you would say, "Why didn't you what?" So, the meaning is to understand or or be sensitive to the mood or feelings of a group of people that that one is addressing or engaging with. And in that case when especially you're talking about a group of people and you're trying to gauge what is the you know what's the feeling in this room. Are people happy? Are they angry?

Are they sad? Or in this meeting maybe they're being they're discussing something that's very serious and somebody comes in and makes a joke and it's like look why why would you why would you make that joke? you know, can't you read the room and understand that it's inappropriate to to make a joke? You got to read the room. So, I saw some correct answers. And if you tell someone to read the room, you're telling them, look, understand the environment that you're in and so that you don't say something that is insensitive or awkward or stupid or silly. He failed to read the room and made a joke that landed poorly during a tense meeting. And a lot of times you might say this to another person just as a standalone statement if you're telling somebody does something and maybe it's awkward. It's like look you read the room. All right. Know where you're at.

You got to read the room. So this is a I think a useful phrase that I told you I feel like I use. I'm starting to use it more. And you find yourself in these situations and you're telling someone or maybe somebody may say it to me, uh, if I make some off-hand comment and they say, "Look, Wes, you got to read the room. Read the room." Here is a fun little comic just to follow up on this that they're out camping. I don't know why I thought this was funny. Uh, it seems just really a bit silly. over here getting ready to tell a scary story. maybe a scary ghost story without thinking that, hey, there's another ghost over there. You're going to hurt you're going to hurt this ghost feelings if you tell a story like this. And you got to understand that. You got to read the room. So, really, this is about appealing to somebody's understanding that they need to be sensitive. They need to be aware of the comments that they're making, what they're saying, or the way they're behaving that it could be offensive and it's just inappropriate. And you got to read the room. Great phrase to know. I don't have the mental to take on another project this quarter. I'm using it in a business context and it refers to the energy or mental capacity required to deal with a situation. And it actually has two meanings. I feel like this is the meaning that is becoming more commonly used and that's why I say these are words and phrases that are trending. Actually, maybe it's because I put this lesson together recently. I used this I used this phrase yesterday when I was I was my wife wanted to to talk to me about something that was more serious. I was a little stressed out. I had a lot of things to do. Look, I was like I just don't have the mental to to talk about this right now. We can come back to it later. So, what word begins with a B? And it has that meaning down below. The energy or mental capacity required to deal with this situation. You could use this in a work setting. You could use this at home like I just did and gave you an example. I I can't I can't deal with this right now. I don't have the mental what. So, we're talking about the word bandwidth. When you hear this word probably you're thinking wait bandwidth like related to computers but that is the other meaning and I think the first one that a lot of people think about when talking about bandwidth but we're going to use it to refer to the energy or mental capacity that you would need in order to deal with a situation. the mental bandwidth. That is a common collocation. And as you probably tell, as I mentioned the word collocation, you know that I'm getting ready to share some other common collocations with this noun. Talking about the mental bandwidth or somebody like I don't have the emotional bandwidth to wrap my head around this situation or sufficient bandwidth or I not have enough bandwidth to do something. I've been using it uh in the negative as I've been talking like I don't have the mental bandwidth. Uh you could follow this with the preposition to if you want to talk about the thing that you need to do. I don't have the mental bandwidth to have this conversation right now. Or maybe you have the lack of bandwidth to do something. So keep in mind you may follow these phrases with the preposition too. Uh, but I hope that you I hope that you have the mental bandwidth to watch this lesson, participate in these lessons, and supercharge your vocabulary so that you can prepare for for the next year. What do you think? The M startup is already attracting significant investment from major tech firms.

The word begins with an N. It's just a single word and it is an adjective that means only recently formed. So really kind of new uh recently formed or started but likely to grow larger quickly there. It's it's going to grow or it's probably going to grow. So it's like we're referring to the initial stages of something like in this case the initial stages of a company a startup and the expectation that it's going to grow quickly. But when we're in that you know just the beginning it was recently formed or recently started we can use this adjective that kind just captures that idea. Please, if you have any guesses again, I want you to participate. Write your answers in the comments in the chat. Uh, so many great to see so many members. Lai, Manuel, uh, Lai, no, no, no. I'm I think I was the one late today. I wrote the wrong time.

Uh, and I apologize about that. Uh, like I said yesterday, I just didn't have the the mental bandwidth to deal with a lot of uh, things going on. So, the word that we're looking for, excellent, Julia Manuel, nent. Nent is a word that you can use to talk about something that is recently formed or started but the expectation is oh it is going to grow and get bigger. So you may hear people use this in a business context like a naent startup or a naent industry. People could use that to talk about AI that it's still in the early stages and it's uh you know experiencing uh the nent uh stages of growth in this case.

So good word to know one that I think as things change quickly uh especially when it comes to technology you're going to hear that word more and more nent this is one well I don't want to again I feel like sometimes I just talk and I give it away let me read the sentence to you social media often creates an where people only hear opinions they already agree with I think this is true And it there are two words that are missing. So this is a phrase. The first word begins with the letter E. You can tell using that indefinite article N that the next word would begin with a vowel sound. So social media creates an what and you're in this situation where you only hear the opinions that you already agree with. So we're referring to an environment in which a person encounters only beliefs or opinions that coincide with their own. What would you call that atmosphere? And I I absolutely agree with this that if you are on social media or use social media, which we all do, you're more likely to come across post or uh content that is very similar to your own opinion that already exists. and you it it makes it more challenging to understand what's going on and I feel like probably social media is not a good place to get really like get news. You could find news using social media but just be aware that when you are using social media it does create this echo chamber. Yes. Excellent. Well done. And this is, I think, a phrase that you probably have heard of before. I don't know if you use it actively in com conversation. I think that when talking about social media, you will absolutely hear and use this phrase. And because social media is becoming more and more a part of our daily lives, more we have more conversations about it and we will continue to do so next year, I think that it is a very relevant phrase when talking about this environment that we're in. and we only hear the opinions that we already have and you have this echo chamber. Social media creates an echo chamber where people only hear opinions they already agree with.

echo chamber, I came across this. I thought it uh I thought it's true. You see this person just stuck in this bubble of like like like like and you just get that exposure to those beliefs or opinions that you already have. And it basically confirms the thing that you believe and people think it's true and you're not getting other perspectives or outside opinions. And that is why you might say and I think all all of us are in an echo chamber when we use social media. So it's not necessarily something that's overly offensive because I really just think it's a fact that we're on social media and we are in this echo chamber.

Before making a decision, we need to issue from a practical standpoint. This is a phrase that you could play around with a little bit and I'll talk about what I mean uh when I say that. But basically the phrase means to analyze, explain or break down a complex idea, statement or issue into smaller understandable parts. So if you approach me with a complex issue, I might just use this statement right here. Look, we need to uh this issue. I kind of gave away I gave away part of it just now. I didn't mean to, but it has two words. What the first one begins with a U. What would you say? Put yourself in this situation and there's just this problem that you need to analyze or an issue and you are actually saying this statement right here. You could say it out loud and maybe you'll, you know, end up saying the answer. Before making a decision, we need to issue from a practical standpoint. And the word that the word that I'm talking about that I want and it is a phrase is to unpack this. You the the reason why I say you could play around with it. You might say unpack that or there's a lot to unpack. But really, we're talking about the the word unpack and we're using it in the context to mean to analyze, explain or break down a complex idea, issue or statement. Before making a decision, we need to unpack the this issue from a p practical standpoint. So once again, you may say somebody brings presents this problem, let's unpack this or we need to unpack that or there's a lot to unpack.

Feasible is really a synonym for this word. It's one word. It begins with a V. And we're talking about what kind of options? Again, these are options that are capable of working. They're feasible. And in that case, you could also say they are what? Give you five more seconds and then I'll tell you the answer. Five, four, three, two, one. We're talking about viable. Excellent. See some great answers. Viable options. If something is viable, then you're basically saying, "Well, yeah, I think that that might work." Uh, we need to explore all viable options before committing to a long-term strategy. It's feasible. It's viable. Those are synonyms. I want to give you some collocations.

Even though there are many different words that you can use with viable. So you might talk about a viable plan or a viable alternative or as in our example sentence, a viable option. If I want to use it with some adverbs, you may come across uh using it with saying something is perfectly viable or economically viable, financially viable, or even politically viable. Those are some common phrases with this word that you may come across. movie, TV show, listening to a podcast, watching the news. Uh, but this is a useful word to know. So, really try to think about it, the meaning, how it's used, think about these collocations, and just keep building your vocabulary.

Let's for a moment, what if the plan fails because we weren't given enough leeway to work independently? trying to bring back up that word leeway. The the phrase that I'm referring to, there are three missing words. The phrase is to argue against a popular or accepted idea, not because you personally disagree with it, but just to stimulate debate. This is a word that or a phrase that I've talked about in previous lessons. So, if you've been a longtime follower of the channel, probably you've come across this before. It's something that I will do from time to time and I'm may just want to debate someone, challenge their opinion, what they're saying. I may not necessarily that may not be my real opinion, what I'm actually what it seems like I'm arguing for, but what am I doing in that situation?

In this context right here, they're trying to make the best decision. and they want to know, okay, instead of assuming that the plan is going to work, let's what and let's let's think about, okay, let's have a debate about what if the plan fails because we weren't given enough leeway. What is going to happen then? But this situation when you're going to argue against a popular or accepted idea is to great job Tayo Bod to play devil's advocate. I think we can all I don't want to say relate to this, but I'm sure you can think of someone in your life who likes to play devil's advocate. They like to debate, challenge others, and it may not be their real opinion. They just Sometimes people just like to argue and debate and they like to play devil's advocate. Let's play devil's advocate for a moment. What if the plan fails because we weren't given enough leeway to work independently?

Again, I know I say this with all of these great phrase to know and uh I would say if you want to try to, you know, put it in a little more context, make an association. Think of somebody that you know right now. Who do you think of when you hear this phrase to play devil's advocate and you know somebody who likes to debate, likes to argue? Here is the next question. traditional storytelling and create a more immersive experience. This is a verb that means to to go further, rise above, be more important or better than something, especially a limit. This word I do think is more advanced. It's a more advanced verb that you're you're not going to just come across or use in everyday conversation, but I think it is a great verb to add emphasis and trying to show how just how much further or how, you know, much more important something is. And you can use this verb to really add emphasis. It always happens like when I say I think when I say this is an advanced word, it's not as commonly used. Everybody just they they rock it in the comments. Great job. Uh Wordsworth um Bodie, Julia Jen, great to see you. Um Zakaria to transcend. And if you say that something is going to transcend something else, it just means yeah, to go further, to rise above, to be more important. The film aims to transcend traditional storytelling and create a more immersive experience. So, we're adding that emphasis. It's a very descriptive verb when you want to say that something is going to transcend something else to give you a little more context.

One thing that I like to do from time to time is share with you some news headlines so that you really get a better idea as to how it's used in context. So, here's the first one. I'll just read through these. Joanna Macy uh who found a way to transcend eco anxiety dies at age 96. It's a nice long uh life but this person found a way to transcend eco anxiety. I'm not really sure what that uh eco anxiety refers to but uh just an example with transcend a recent one. Diverse Jazz Head program seeks to transcend all borders and UK jazz showcase added to club rights. I feel like this is a collocation with this verb to transcend all borders to transcend the limits. Here's another example with this verb theater review.

How to transcend a happy marriage presented by Iron Crow Theater at Baltimore Theater Project. And they're talking about transcending a happy marriage. And then the last article, time to transcend the how to teach battles. And we're using this verb. It's very descriptive, adding emphasis when you want to say something transcends something else. Let's Well, what I didn't give you any letters for this one. I It's two. It's a phrase. I'll I'll go ahead and tell you it's a phrasal verb. I'll give you that hint. Let's m for a moment and look at the long-term implications of this choice. And when you do this this action, because it is a phrasal verb, you are stepping back from a problem or situation to see the patterns, the overall context or unintended consequences. I've given you uh you can see the picture. I thought maybe the picture might be a little bit of a hint when it comes to this phrasal verb, but for some reason I feel like uh I'll I use YouTube and I'll listen to different news reports, uh commentary, podcast, and this is one that I I feel like I keep hearing more and more and it's one of these things where I feel like other people are using it online or in the news and then people hear it and then they start using it and just gains a lot more steam and that therefore I would say yeah this phrasal verb is trending and somebody would say let's for a moment even they might just say that standalone statement let's for a moment and they're going to take a step back in order to I I don't want to well a meaning like to see the big picture but instead of saying to see the big picture they're they're going to say this. Let's mm for a moment and they're going to follow it and uh look at the the long-term implications of this choice. I I feel like close like let's take a step back and but I feel like in that case it's not when I think about stepping back or stepping forward. It's like progress. You're like look let's stay let's take a step back and pause what we're doing. This is not necessarily about pausing something. It's more about kind of getting that overall view of what's happening. And I just mentioned that see the big picture. So yes, the phrasal verb we're talk that I'm looking for, Takaya, well done. Zoom out. Let's zoom out for a moment. And you're taking a step back to from from a problem. And you're the the idea when you zoom out is that you're then going to try to look at the big picture, see the overall context. What are some of the unintended consequences of this plan or action?

And you want to say, let let's zoom out. So, think about this phrasal verb having a very similar meaning to, okay, let's let's try to see the big picture. Let's take a look at the big picture. and you're wanting to see the entirety of a situation or issue or problem before you proceed. And in that case, instead of saying like, oh, the big picture, you could use this phrasal verb, let's zoom out. Let's zoom out for a moment and really try to understand everything that's going on when we zoom out. And I don't know if that picture of that guy, I was trying to show it like he's like looking through some like camera angle, but you're going to zoom out. And of course, when people think about this phrasal verb, I think the first meaning that they go to would be actually using a camera. You zoom in, you zoom out, but it basically means what it says. When you zoom out, you can see more. You understand what's going on in the room or in that uh in that environment. The politician's vote for a policy he publicly opposed was a clear display of political what? There are two words. I'm giving you the first word of both of them. I I thought maybe this might this phrase might be a little more challenging, but once again when I say that I feel like a lot of people know the answer. Uh but if you know it, if you have a guess, write it in the chat, write it in the comments. But this phrase refers to a state of mental discomfort that occurs when a person holds beliefs or opinions that are inconsistent or that conflict with an aspect of their behavior. I think you you hear you would hear this when talking about polit politics because politicians they would vote one way but it really is kind of the opposite of what their um something that they may have publicly supported or in this example sentence that they publicly opposed. So it was an example of what you're just you're holding these conflicting views, conflicting opinions and you could capture that by referring to this phrase and it is an example of what first word begins with the letter C. The next word D. It is one that it you're you're not going to hear it as often as I feel like maybe that phrasal verb like to zoom out, but I do think it's becoming more and more popular. Uh very close answer. Uh not cognitive

Very close. Cognitive what? That's the first word. Cognitive. I'll give you five more seconds. Five, four, three, two, one. That was a very quick 5 seconds. We're talking about cognitive dissonance. And this refers to that mental discomfort, that challenge, that struggle that somebody's going through because they have beliefs or opinions that are inconsistent. The politician's vote for a policy he publicly opposed was a clear display of political cognitive dissonance. I want to give you some more examples when it comes to this phrase. And these are more cartoons. This is actually I feel like a series of cartoons, jokes that is labeled as cognitive dissonance. I don't know if you can really see these, but I'll I'll go ahead and read them to you. But think about again this idea of conflicting opposing views or beliefs. And like somebody say, "Oh, I want to lose weight. uh my goal weight can be achieved through cake. These are two opposites. Or relying to work um uh replying to work emails in 2 minutes or less, but replying to text messages in two years or less. And you have these these replying to someone this cognitive dissonance or telling people I read a new book every week but still binge binge say yes to the dress. And then finally, refusing to spend an extra 10 cents for a paper bag at checkout because I'm cheap, but spending $16 on a salad that only with only that only has one tiny piece of halfbaked chicken. It's like, wait, why did I spend so much money for for this? It's clearly not worth it, but I do it anyway. Here is the next one. I'm trying to give you another hint with the picture. I'll go ahead and put that out uh right up front. The department worked in and rarely communicated which slowed down the entire project.

So you can use this word when referring to a system, process, department, etc. that operates in isolation from others, not sharing information or cooperation with other departments or groups. I'm giving you, as you can tell, just based on the meaning that I'm going to use it in more of a work context, the same way that I have done in this example sentence right here, the department worked in what? Now, the picture you might be looking at and be like, wait, this is not an office. There's I don't see anybody working. But this is a word that has multiple meanings. This is the real actual meaning uh of this word. I feel like when I think of the word, this is the first thing I think of in this picture. What are those?

Do you know in English you would call these? This is a or there are several what it is a place. The other meaning would be a place where you would store grain. So, if you're you go to a farm or you're driving by a farm, you may see these uh things constructed right here that they're going to use in order to store grain or other things. And those are called what? Uh yes, excellent. We're not not a solo. You're kind of close. A silo. Those are silos. But you can use it in this context to say that the department worked in silos and rarely communicated which slowed down the entire project.

And in that case, we're referring to a system process department that operates in isolation. So, if you're talking about a farm, these are silos and you're just going to use it to store grain or what have you and you're going to store them in a silo. But in this context, we could use it to talk about work and I feel like it's becoming more popular because there are situations in which this is happening. People, departments, they're not communicating and everyone is siloed uh off from the other. Which brings me to the next thing I want to mention about this word is that you could use it different parts of speech like as a noun. The departments worked in silos and rarely communicated. If I want to use it as a verb, the company tried to silo its marketing data from sales but it hurt the overall strategy or as an adjective. The marketing team became very siloed and lost touch with sales. So really think about the isolation that word when we're talking about uh a department a team whether they are trying to silo some information or they're working in silos. And whenever you hear this word just kind of associate it with that isolation. Many people attempt to m their productivity with supplements and digital tools. Once again, I feel like this is a word that you may come across. I feel like I hear it a lot, especially on YouTube, and it's becoming more and more mainstream. I feel like in some online dictionaries may not even include it, but it means the it refers to attempts to improve the condition of your body and mind using either technology, drugs, or other chemical substances such as hormones. It begins with the letter B.

And I I feel like again boost would work. Boost would work. That is not the the word that I'm talking about. But it does. Yeah. If something boost your productivity, it's a good thing. I feel like this word is becoming more commonly used because I feel like it's a good sales word. People would hear it and they think, "Oh, wow." Like, uh, this is very important. I want to I'm going to pay money. I'm going to try this. Uh, and it I think in that case, it's very useful from a marketing standpoint. So, when talking about improving your condition, could be supplements, it could be uh technology, the word that I'm referring to is a biohack. Uh if if you have somebody's trying to promote something, say, "Oh, like um I have this great biohack for helping you build your vocabulary." You hear biohack and that that's a real captivating word and like whoa, tell me more. So that's why I said I feel like this word is more often used uh in this marketing context where somebody has a method or approach or a device or a supplement that they want to sell or they want others to use and they're going to use this word biohack to say that it's going to improve your body or mind when you use this technology or drug. It's going to help you uh biohack your productivity or biohack your efficiency. Many people attempt to biohack their productivity with supplements or digital tools and yes I think I think that is true. So keep an eye out or listen listen for this word. Uh I think you will come across it in this context especially somebody has this oh I have this innovative new approach to help you biohack something. These are the words that we just went over this advanced vocab for 2026 to help you gear up, get ready for the new year. And uh if you want to get these lesson notes, remember, check out that link down below in the description. You can join my community. But if you enjoyed this lesson and learned something new, please let me know by hitting that like button. That tells me that you're learning new things. You're building your vocabulary. It's an ongoing process. Remember, it's a marathon. It's not a sprint. But I want to thank all of you for joining me today. I apologize for kind of messing up the time. Uh and uh I'll just try to be more mindful of it. But yeah, I just didn't have the uh emotional bandwidth yesterday uh to deal with some of these things. And uh yeah, that's why I I made that mistake. But I'm going to try to get things in perspective. I feel like sometimes I just need to zoom out, try to get a better idea of the big picture, uh, so that I can move forward in a productive way. Not really biohack my productivity. Kind of like the way that I'm doing things. And I'm just using these words, uh, just before we wrap things up. So, thank you uh, Lai, Julia, Manuel, Teao, uh, Natalia, Bod, great to see you guys. Hope you have a wonderful rest of the day and I will see you

ADVANCED WORDS, PHRASES, & IDIOMS | Useful Gambling Vocabulary

how well do you know your gambling vocabulary let's find out because I want to quiz you on a lot of different words phrases and idioms that are related to gambling but many of them you can use in a broader context and I will explain that as we go through the lesson and if you would like to access the lesson notes that are right next to me click on that link Down Below in the description join my email community and you can review these words and really make them A Part of Your Action Ive memory so let's begin with some useful words and phrases and this is a quiz lesson I would love it if you participate you can write your answers on separate sheet of paper or just use the comment section below and let's start out with just some fill-in the blank questions if you play long enough the M always wins I'll give you about 5 Seconds to think of the answer so in this case where where do you play where do you gamble so you would say the M always wins I think a key word is the article the and you would say the house when often talking about a casino a business a place where people gamble and that is a statement that I think is pretty common The House Always Wins The House Always Wins yes The House Always Wins because The House Always Wins play long enough you never change the stakes the house takes you how about this question right here I think we need to roll the what I'm giving you this picture hopefully it it's a hint it's a clue as to what the answer is I think we need to roll the dice so dice refers to the small cubes and there are dots on each side to represent numbers and the singular people may say die the plural dice now you may hear people say dice when talking about just one but you may hear d or dice to roll the dice now this is an expression that you could also use to refer to just some risk that you're taking in order to achieve a goal and like say okay let's take a risk let's roll the dice roll a dice just roll the dice Tri the da will throw everything at us you just be rolling the dice yeah roll the dice to help you better understand how this phrase roll the dice is used in context I have some news headlines for you Mercedes roll the dice with the w14 as a bid to return to title winning ways but will it pay off again they're going to roll the dice or help me Hara should I roll the dice on a Dungeons and Dragons based romance and finally angels will roll the dice by keeping shoh atani making other deals so again in all of these examples they're talking about taking that risk to achieve a goal to roll the dice the next question let's play a game does anyone have a m of cards in this case I'm talking about the quantifier if you have a group of cards you may call it a what deck of cards so this is the quantifier that you would use when you're talking about this group of cards a deck of cards now in a deck of cards there are four different suits this is a bonus question do you know the names of these suits we have hearts spades diamonds and clubs a little bit of a bonus question for you the next question at a casino the m is the person who M the cards there are two blanks but really it's very similar I guess you could say these words are perhaps in the same word family because we're talking about in the first blank a noun and in the second one a verb at a casino the dealer is the person who deals the cards if you and I are playing a card game I might say well well who's going to be the dealer oh I'm the dealer okay I will deal the cards dealers are watching The Players the boxmen are watching the dealers all right dealer cards come on

let's dealer cards do you know this word at the casino know I won several stacks of what you can see in the picture I'm talking about uh those things over there they are not tokens they are not coins in English I would say they are chips I think they're pretty much used in in just about every Casino you give the casino money and then they will give you back chips that represent that same value of money and you will get chips at the casino she just won ,000 she's going to bet it all and go what phrase would complete that sentence so you win some money and then you're going to bet it all again and you can say oh I'm going to go in this case you could say double or nothing this is a phrase that you can use when playing a game to say that the amount that you either won or even lost you're going to bet it all again that same amount and go double or nothing one thing I want to point out is a distinction between American English and British English now of course I am from the US so I am going to say double or nothing but in British English people would say double or quits double or qu it's a challenge yeah double or quits double or nothing double or nothing and okay double or nothing here is a situation that you may find yourself in at a casino I have 11 and the dealer is showing a six therefore I would like to what we're talking about the game Blackjack which I think is very common at a casino and in this case I would say I have 11 and the dealer is showing a six therefore I would like to double down to double down another phrase using the word double but in this case it means to double the BET after seeing someone's initial cards and basically you're just hoping to win more money got 11 you always Double Down 11 I know but it's $200 it's blood money I get that a double down I can't double down it one thing that I would like to point out with this phrase to double down it also has another meaning which I think is often used in just casual conversation and in this case it would mean to strengthen one's commitment to a particular strategy or course of action typically one that is a little risky and I've given you a couple of example sentences to help you better understand how it's used in context he didn't admit that he was wrong instead he decided to double down or I could say the company decided to double down on their marketing efforts in hopes of increasing sales uh look you know what I think we need to talk about was doubling down doubling down mhm cooking 100b a week not 50 here is the next one he doesn't have the winning hand his bet is just a what if you don't have a very good hand but you bet anyway what is it that that you're doing his bet is just a bluff so if we're talking about using it as a noun a bluff is just an attempt to deceive or trick someone into believing that one can or is going to do something and You' say oh it's just a bluff but I can use it as a verb as well to Bluff to deceive someone as to one's abilities or intentions and you are bluffing someone he's bluffing Vulcans never Bluff you're bluffing I never Bluff here is another one he played the lottery and hit the what which noun is missing in this sentence to hit the it's a pretty common phrase he played the lottery and hit the jackpot so if we're just talking about jackpot as a noun it refers to a large cash prize that someone would win if you're maybe at a casino or you're playing the lottery but I could also use the phrase to hit the jackpot when referring to really a huge or big success or just making a large profit often through luck to hit the jackpot we hit the jackpot wow Mason really hit the jackpot this Christmas now let's let's have a look at some gambling idioms and expressions and I'm going to switch things up a little bit because this time I'm giving you the meaning of the idiom as well as an example sentence below to try to help you figure it out so this idiom means to protect yourself against loss by supporting more than one possible result or both sides in a competition and this this is going to be a bit more challenging but check out the example sentence below they decided to M by say a large bet on the home team and a small bet on the opposing team so what is it that you're doing in this situation I would say they're trying to hedge their bets so you don't want to risk too much and lose too much so you're going to place another bet to pretty much offset the amount that you could lose and you're trying to hedge your bets it's called hedging your bets boys my brother's a book mker bookmakers hedge their best here is the next one this refers to something that is very likely to happen and you can see in the example sentence so you think they'll get married next year I think it's you you think this thing is likely to happen in that case you would use this idiom you would say that something is in the cards that if you believe it's going to happen yeah you know know I I think it's in the cards this is more of a US idiom because in the UK instead of in the cards they may say it's on the cards both of them are correct but I wanted to to make you aware of that distinction between American English and British English in the cards versus on the cards how about the next one this means to be honest and not hide what you are thinking or doing I'm not going to keep secrets and be completely transparent I'm going to what so if you're trying to be honest and you're not going to hide anything you could say I'm going to put my cards on the table I'm going to show you what I have and be completely transparent I'm going to put my cards on the table let's put our cards on the table here lady let's put our cards on the table here is the next one this is used to describe a situation in which it is impossible to be sure about what Will will happen so if he becomes the new CEO what we don't know what could happen and you could just use this idiom and say all bets are off if he becomes the new CEO all bets are off you have no idea what will happen all bets are off Legend has it when the S below all bets are off anything can happen you want to be like them waste of time you want to be different all bets are off to help give you a better idea as to how this idiom is used in context I have some more news headlines for you Jay Leno says censorship can't change comedy if it's really funny all bets are off when AI unplugs uhoh we don't know what's going to happen all bets are off and finally tasmania's unique electoral system means all bets are off on the liberals' future and then we have this next idiom to be the result of chance rather than something that you have control over she was chosen first at random it was just the what and you can kind of see in the picture what's going on and you could say it was just the luck of the draw so if you say something's the luck of the draw it means that well you don't really have control over it it's another way of just really emphasizing that well this was just a lucky situation it was luck of the draw sorry yeah well luck of the draw if we get too many bad candidates up front we're son luck of the draw here is the next one a powerful and often secret weapon Advantage Etc that can be used if it is needed if they try to back out of the deal I'm not worried because I've got an what and you can see that article ends so you know the next word begins with a vowel sound and you can see in the picture the cards those are Aces so in this case you could say you have an ace up your sleeve if they try to back out of the deal I'm not worried because I've got an ace up my sleeve this is just that secret weapon or advantage that you may have and you can say that You' you've got an ace up your sleeve catching them something else yeah C but I got an ace up my sleeve see this little guy they uses to track game in Africa you like that what is that isn't that beautiful it's like an ace on my sleeve what else you wait how about this one to allow events to happen without trying to change them that is the meaning of this idiom and as an example I could say it's out of our control we'll just have to see what happens and you see the picture there those chips and what are they doing they are falling so you could say it's out of our control we'll just have to see what happens and let the chips fall where they may and you just you want to allow these events to unfold and really not try to change them and in that case you could say let's let's just let the chips fall where they may and we'll see what happens say let's evolve chips fall where they may please the man is talking let him get it out and let the chips fall where they may I can't bring myself to do it Russ we just have to let the chips fall where they may then we have this idiom which means to arrange something in a dishonest way in order to achieve the result you want what is it that you're doing it's impossible for us to win the competition because they have what and you're doing something in a dishonest way in that case you may be stacking the deck to stack the deck means to arrange certain things whether it could be rules or whatever so that you have an advantage and you you're just really doing it in a dishonest way and you could say that you are stacking the deck or maybe someone else is stacking the deck they got Lan they're stacking the deck with ringers the deck is stacked the rules are rigged what are you up to Nigel oh just stacking the deck in my favor once again I want to point out the difference between American English and British English because in the US you would say that someone is stacking the deck while in the UK K you would say they're stacking the cards same meaning we're just going to change that one word stacking the deck versus stacking the cards now let's get to some more Casino specific vocabulary and talk about some of the games that you would find if you walk into a casino because before some of the many of those idioms and even the vocabulary that we talked about in the beginning you you can use in a broader context but specifically these are games games that people may play in a casino or even you know among your friends a card game in which players try to acquire cards with a face value totaling 21 or more this is actually a game that I have previously mentioned when I talked about the phrase double down so if you're going to double down and double the bet you would do this when you're playing Blackjack it's a card game and you're you're trying to get to 21 or as close to 21 as you can here is the next one I think if you go into just about any casino you're going to see these machines right here that you try to win money by putting coins into it and and operating it and you may pull the handle or push the button and these machines are called slot machines and yes if you go into a casino you we'll certainly see slot machines they're very colorful they're very loud how about this game right here this is a very Lively and energetic game played with two dice remember we talked about dice already in which a throw of seven or 11 is a winning throw two three or 12 is a losing throw and this is a very you know simplified way of playing the game there there's more to it than that but the game that you see in the picture right here is called craps what about this game right here and these are I'm sure these are games that are very popular I'm sure you've seen them movies TV shows this is a gambling game in which a ball is dropped onto a revolving wheel with numbered compartments you would call this game roulette how about this card game right here which is probably the most famous card game that is played all around the world it is played by two or more people who bet on the value of the hands dealt to them and you are going to play this game of poker now Texas holdom I included that because it is a well it is a version of Poker that I think is commonly played in casinos and even among friends you could have your own game of Texas holdam and you get together and you play poker what do you think this game is called right here it is a comparing card game played between two hands the player and the banker this is a game I'm I've never really I actually have never played this game but you you see it in just about every Casino it is called bakarar so you're comparing cards and you have a player and the banker and now for a little review I know I've given you a lot but look I I'm just going to going to put my cards on the table and be transparent because it's a lot to take in hopefully you were familiar with some of these words and phrases but I hope you learn some new ones as well some people may say well this this approach it's it's too difficult because there are too many words but I'm going to double down and say I I think it's helpful and it's good to get review as well as you know learn a few new ones and build your vocabulary slowly and I really hope that you enjoy some of the other video lessons and feel that discovering the channel was like just like you hit the jackpot I I hope you feel that way and of course uh you know I you can continue to build your vocabulary watch another video Lesson I think that this is something that will happen I can see it in your future I think it's in the cards and of course I I will be back with another video Lesson

next week I promise it's true I am not bluffing and uh what else could I throw in there I I think that's good we can wrap things up if you enjoyed the lesson and you did learn something new you can let me know by hitting that like button and as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

ADVERB CLAUSES | All the Grammar You Need to Know

hello and welcome to another super amazing incredible fantastic I don't know how many more adjectives I can use to describe this grammar lesson but it's just going to be really great so if you don't know if this is your first time here my name is Wes this is interactive English and we are all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and today I have a fun lesson for you and we are going to talk about adverb clauses alright so this is a grammar lesson and they don't know why that that's a picture of a beach has nothing to do with adverb clauses I kind of just like the picture I thought it was fun I thought it looked nice so we are going to discuss adverb clauses we I'm gonna teach you what they are I'm gonna tell you different types of adverb clauses and then we're gonna actually practice using them and I want you guys to write your answers in the chat and again even if you're watching this later we always tell everybody who's watching these videos to write your answers in the comments use the comments section like it's a piece of paper we want you to interact with us this is what interactive English is all about but first I want to give a shout out to some of the people who are here with me right now hello Andre so elias carlos luma jacqueline manipur chef chef d gamer excellent Natalie Moustafa English vibes on to some lolly Paul but I've gone Menotti sorry if I miss some names I will try to say everybody's name and recognize you for being here I really appreciate it love it that we have so many people from all over the world joining these classes so today we're gonna work on adverb clauses so it's important to know first well what is what is an adverb clause so an adverb clause it's a group of words that function as an adverb that function as the adverb of a sentence so these this group of words it can it mostly modifies verbs but it could also modify an adjective it can also modify another adverb so these are some things right here that are important to know about adverb clauses they can come at the beginning middle or end of a sentence so they're very versatile as to where they can be located they contain a subject and a verb that is also very important all of these clauses they will contain a subject and a verb if they do not then it might be a phrase so keep that in mind and they are all dependent clauses and if you're wondering what a dependent clause is it's just it's not a complete thought this is not a sentence on its own so it needs an independent clause in order to become a full complete and powerful sentence and it will begin with a subordinating conjunction so this is a great way to be able to identify an adverb clause if you can identify the subordinating conjunction and I've listed some of those for you right here before after even if because wherever then you probably know okay so this is an adverb clause this is what we're talking about and I will give you a list of many more subordinating conjunctions so that you can try to identify them so you know exactly what an adverb clause is for example look at that sentence right there I won't continue unless you hit the like button alright I'm always I'm always fishing for likes so I've underlined the adverb clause unless you hit the like button now notice again it has a subject you it has a verb hit so this would be something that somebody could say using unless I won't continue unless you hit the like button so please please please just go ahead just go ahead and hit that like button down below Oh notice that this is at the end of a sentence so I'm going to give you some examples what if the adverb clause came in the middle all right well then it's going to be surrounded by commas most often it'll be surrounded by so for example here's another example for you our students, after they watch our lessons okay that's is my adverb clause another comma it's surrounded by the commas our students after they watch our lessons are 25% more likely to get a promotion to get a promotion at work can you believe that there is no scientific evidence to back up that claim but it's something that I would like to think I would like to think that if you watch our lessons it'll make you're smarter it'll improve your English skills and maybe you'll get that promotion so that is an example of an adverb clause in the middle of a sentence now let's look at it at the beginning and again notice the grammar alright notice the grammar let the punctuation is what I should say so this in the middle it's surrounded by commas now we have it at the beginning and this time I want you guys you complete this sentence right here I've given you the adverb clause whether you like it or not comma and then you're going to add that independent clause at the end so what would you think if the first thing that comes to your mind just write it down there write it in the chat write it in the comments whether you like it or not what what what is the first thing that comes to your mind share some sentences with us because again as people are watching this it's great to be able to see a lot of different examples because that's just again it reinforces the grammar it means that you're more likely to comprehend what what it is alright so for example whether you like it or not Johansen said you have to work yeah that's true whether you like it or not you have to work yeah you like that we have to go on or lesson yes whether or not Wes will continue the video yes Wes will continue the video you like it or not I will keep doing what I'm doing right now excellent jin-hee perfect so those are some great examples thank you guys for sharing so let's now that you know what an adverb clause is I want to just go through some different types of adverb clauses and again as we go through these

feel free to just throw out some sentences practice using these adverb clauses I always encourage everyone practice practice practice don't worry about making mistakes so the first one that I want to talk to you about is adverb clauses of place so these answer the questions where and the subordinating conjunctions that you will find with these wherever or even just where wherever where so that example sentence wherever you go that's where you are all right wherever you go that is the adverb clause all right wherever is the subordinating conjunction wherever you go that's where you are it's very philosophical I know exactly you go to the kitchen that's where you are you go to the bedroom that's where you are if you travel to Brazil that's where you are wherever you go that's where you are so these are adverb clauses of place all right now adverb clauses of time these I think are perhaps some of the most common ones that you will see and these will answer the question of when when something happens and you look at look at that list whoops right there so you can see that that list of subordinating conjunctions you see these words quite often before after when while as soon as whenever by the time when you see those words that we often use them as an adverb clause so for example I was watching Netflix while I created this lesson all right this is answering like it's modifying the time that I was watching it and telling you know answering like will when all right when was this happening I was watching Netflix while I created this lesson that is a true story I was watching Netflix while I created this lesson and if you want to know what I was watching it was little baby bum all right this is what we show our five our five month old baby girl if you have Netflix you can search for it check it out little baby bum all right that's it that's a shout out for a little baby bum right there our little girl loves it so let's at the next one adverb clauses of reason all right these are going to answer the question why all right so we have because of due to since because as now all right try to give me an example sentence all right use use one of these all right and see if you can give me a full sentence using the subordinating conjunction and create an adverb clause you can check out my example right here it I use it in a question we can have these adverb clauses in questions as well can you answer the question since you're so smart so if somebody was just asking this can you answer the question since you're so smart since you're so smart that is the adverb clause it has a subject it has a verb and if I were talking to these cats right here they look a bit worried all right they look a bit worried okay so um let's see we have some other people sharing sentences excellent so again as an adverb clause of time I completed my homework while you were sleeping perfect excellent um miss diem on some little baby bomb I think yes you're right that's the one since we were out of soap I will go buy some perfect all right we did not enter the place since it was restricted that is a great example great use of it English vibes I cannot come to meet you as I was dejected yes if you don't feel good you're not gonna go meet someone excellent good example an issue Nisha

Nisha Hussein perfect so let's keep going says there are more types of adverb clause this was adverb clause of reason now let's talk about adverb clauses of condition so last week I did a quiz all on conditionals all right those are adverb clauses though that that condition is an adverb clause so you will see those words if even if only if unless in case and I will link that quiz up above if you have not taken our quiz and even still let me let me do you one more all right if you haven't taken it you can check it out I'm gonna throw it in chat right there boom okay so there is a link to our conditional quiz which we did recently so condition adverb clause a condition they answer the question of how here is my example it is a long example even if you're not part of our email list even if you can still communicate with me in the comments so even if you're not a part of our email list in which we send you the access to the secret fluency lesson we send you some lesson updates information we send you some useful and free resources and I'm really really really trying to sell you on this email list so that you guys can stay in touch with us join the team there is a link to it in the description if you want to check it out and boom doing it again there is a link to it right there in the chat check out the email list we will send you the secret fluency lesson or if you don't that's okay you can write to us in the comments and keep in touch with me but this is a good example of an adverb clause of condition that's not using if all right so what are some examples do we have some yes even if I ask for permission from my parents they won't let me go to the party excellent Abner even if I had money I wouldn't have bought you a Porsche Aiden that's a good example why not why not I would love to drive a Porsche I've never been I've never driven a Porsche alright even if I'm tired I'm following les West's lesson all right Thank You Lally for following this lesson even if you're tired I appreciate it so let's look now more more and more types of adverbs adverb clauses of purpose I told you that there are many subordinating conjunctions and I'm not saying like oh you have to learn each one perfectly the first step with just being able to identify them once you identify them then you know okay I'm dealing with an adverb clause and that's really gonna help you put together the grammar in your mind if you want to better comprehend how these sentences are constructed and why we say that why we say things the way that we do so here are some so that in order that in case for fear that and I gave you my example right down here and and this is what somebody you know could say they may not they might not do this but uh you know I'm gonna write myself a note in case I forget in case I forget that is my my adverb clause of purpose I'm gonna write myself a note in case I forget and the note that I would write to myself is eat breakfast because often I get up in the morning and I just start going I just start working I forget to eat breakfast I do make coffee but I often forget to eat breakfast I didn't eat breakfast this morning and as soon as this lesson is over I need to eat something because I'm hungry all right let's look at this last one all right the last type of of adverb is adverb clauses of contrast okay so these are answering the questions of how and some of the subordinating conjunctions although even though though whereas while all right I just want to tell you though so in case you're wondering about the pronunciation so here's my example although you just started learning English maybe many of you have it but as an example although you did although you just started learning English your skills are amazing all right so some of you out there you've told me like oh I just started learning and I'm reading the way that you you know that you're writing in the comment like wow that's impressive alright so I can say although you just started learning English your skills are amazing that is an example of an adverb clause of contrast I'm gonna gonna read a few of you guys you guys are throwing down some you guys are dropping some great examples so I just feel like I need to read some of them alright so Misbah I you could say I will finish my work so that I can go for a walk exactly after I'm gonna after I finish this lesson I'll finish this lesson so that I can go for a walk or so that I can eat and then go for a walk let's look at this take an umbrella in case it rains Hezbollah that's a great example thank you for sharing let's see you can't uh you let's see Maria you can't leave you can't leave it out your your job unless you finish it up on time so it's like maybe he's like you can't leave your job unless you finish unless you finish up your work like you can't go home unless you finish up your work you have to do something before you can leave excellent great so now it's time to practice so we went through that quickly but I want to practice using these adverb clauses and again what I'm going to ask you to do is to write a sentence using an adverb clause so this is going to be an activity dealing with transformations I am going to give you either one sentence or a couple of sentences I am going to then give you the subordinating conjunction and I want you to write a new sentence using the subordinating conjunction that has the same meaning it means the same thing but you're just creating a sentence with an adverb clause it's gonna start easy it I'll start out easy and then it's going to it's going to quickly get more difficult alright so the first one I think shouldn't be a problem so this is kind of like even an example all right two things he brushes his teeth he goes to bed I want you to write the subordinating conjunction I want you to use is after okay so use that subordinating conjunction write a sentence with an adverb clause that means the same thing that that gives me the same information he brushes his teeth he goes to bed use that adverb clause of time and give me a write read me a sentence write it in the chat write it in the comments again I want to I want you guys to participate in these lessons alright so there are a couple of different ways that you could write this you can put the adverb clause at the beginning alright just like Paul did after he brushes his teeth he goes to bed perfect all right or you could put it at the end just like ona some and English vibes did he goes to bed after he brushes his teeth remember though if it comes at the beginning I put it at the beginning remember it needs that comma after he brushes his teeth comma he goes to bed alright so now that you know what I want you to do they're gonna get a little more difficult okay so the the next one that I have for you is it's talking about choices okay I don't care where we go you decide now I want you to capture this same the same meaning I don't care where we go you decide it's like people are having a conversation and I want you to use wherever now there are different ways that you would be able to write this alright there's not just one answer it's really this is really a test it's good because it's really testing your fluency skills to think about okay I have the meaning I know what this means now let's see if I can say the same thing but say it in a different way so I want you to use the word wherever and capture that meaning I don't care where we go you decide all right okay all right let me see Dan Monson said wherever wherever you decide to go I don't care hey that works all right wherever we go you decide Paul that also works let's see Mirek son said I don't care wherever yeah but maybe it needs say wherever we go all right I don't care wherever we go you decide so mine was a little different all right let me give you my answer it seems the same thing i I think this is commonly somebody said would say hey I'll go wherever you want or maybe you wanted you're talking to somebody else and you'd say well we can go wherever you want wherever you decide wherever you want to go that's where we'll go all right I'll go wherever you want again there are there there's more than one answer it's all about you know practice and that's great that that we're giving different answers perfect so the next one all right this is we used to take the bus to work but we just bought a car okay so think about that that sentence think about the the context we used to take the bus to work but we just bought a car okay and use now that so I'm gonna tell you I capitalized the N and now I want you to put this at the beginning put it at the beginning of the sentence all right put the adverb clause at the beginning we used to take the bus to work but we just bought a car and that right there and that that would not be the car all right there cuz that's just a little toy car so how would you take that meaning use now that and capture capture the same meaning say the same thing alright so this is this is great practice not just for writing adverb clauses but really to get you thinking and to test your fluency skills okay so write me a sentence with the adverb clause use the subordinating conjunction now that alright and put it at the beginning so we have so many examples all right I'm gonna let's see lolly wrote now that now that we buy a car we don't take well we don't take the bus anymore now that we would say now that we bought a car because we're talking about the past let's see Donna now that we've bought a car we stop taking the bus that works perfect that's general though I got wheels I take Bo I got wheels I take the bike to go for shopping I guess you're really changing the meaning of that sentence Lucia now that we have a car we don't need to take the bus that works perfect Tatiana now that we just bought a car we don't take a bus to work that works my example I said now that we have a car we don't have to take the bus to work or you can say we don't have to take the bus anymore now that we have a car so let's look at another one all right it's just I got I got baby on the mind because we have a little five month old girl Emmie so I thought this you know maybe I was looking for pictures I said to describe it so I would say again I can help you but I need you to tell me what happened I can help you but I need you to tell me what happened use the subordinating conjunction unless all right and it's a lower case unless so in this case put it at the end of the sentence put the adverb clause at the end see if you can put it at the end all right how would you take that meaning I can help you but I need you to tell me what happened use the word unless right right a sentence with an adverb clause that has that same meaning okay so let's see um what we're getting some great answers all right already perfect English vibe I cannot help you unless you tell me what happened boom perfect mix on unless you tell me what happened I can't help you that works the adverb clause in that case is at the beginning so remember you need that comma after the adverb clause what else Alonso I can help you unless you tell me what happened but Rimmer it Alonso it'd be I can't help you because you need to know what happened so you'd have to say I can't help you unless you tell me what happened I cannot help you unless you tell me what happened unfortunately when it's a baby that's young they can cry they really can't though they can't talk to you and tell you what happened not yet all right so here we go all right you ready for the next one this is a little trickier okay because the grammar the grammar is a little more specific and we'll see if you guys can can do this one so I would say I was running I know I was late to the restaurant so my friends began eating without me all right you're maybe you're meeting your friends you're supposed to meet at a certain time you're late but they do said hey this person's late we're just going to go ahead and start eating I was late to the restaurant so my friends began eating without me and I want you to use by the time all right that is the adverb clause that I want you guys to use by the time so what what do you guys think all right use that advert call use it at the beginning of the sentence because I gave you that capital B so it tells you okay it's at the beginning of the sentence by the time what I was running late I was are I keep saying running late you can say I like to say that but it needs the same thing you're running late you're late I was late to the restaurant

so my friends began eating without me and again even if you're watching this later practice practice practice write the sentences and in the comments section love it when when people do that so here we go all right on a sum by the time I got to the restaurant my friends my friends have already started eating clothes clothes clothes the grammar remember we're talking about the past perfect let's see you don't by by the time I reach the restaurants my friends had started eating okay that works mixing by the time I got to restaurants my friends began eating could say that remember I'm looking the the independent clause I was looking for the past perfect there was another sand it's in here who is it gotcha been here sorry if i mispronounce names by the time I arrived at the restaurant my friends had already begun eating alright so again this is a little way to learn when you learn something new whether it's grammar pronunciation vocabulary practice practice practice that is a big part of helping you comprehend the information and then be able to use it as well in writing and speaking so thank you guys thank you thank you thank you so much for joining me today please hit that like button if you already didn't do that share this lesson with other people you know who are trying to practice and improve their English skills and if you want to contact us you can join join our team check out subscribe to our newsletter we'll give you access to the secret fluency lesson or just write to us in the comments you can also follow us on social media we are active on Facebook Twitter and Instagram so thank you thank you thank you Camila thank you guys thank you for joining me where is it

ADVERB VOCABULARY QUIZ | Advanced English Words

what is up everyone I hope that you are feeling super smart today because I have an adverb vocabulary quiz for you that is what we are going to do in today's lesson now if this is your first time here I just want to introduce myself my name is Wes and this is interactive English which is all about helping you guys practice and improve your English skills and we do that by trying to make interactive lessons we want you to participate in these lessons which is exactly what we're going to do today because I have a bunch of different questions for you and I want you guys to answer if you are in the chat then I want you to write your answers in the chat even if you are watching this lesson later I want you guys to write your answers in the comment I want you to be engaged and interact with this quiz so I want to take a quick moment and say hello and give a shout out to those who are with us today hello Vishnu qu uh Claudia um avilash Andre Kai indu Judy noain Ira um who else do we have aat welcome welcome Ana hello hello if you joined us just say your name tell me your name in the chat I just love hearing from you guys so I told you that today we are going to do an adverb quiz an adverb VOC vocabulary quiz so when you think of adverbs I think most people think of grammar but this is not a grammar quiz I want to make that very clear at the beginning this is more of a vocabulary quiz because I am going to ask you the meaning of different adverbs that is the quiz so I've taken uh different words and these are more advanced English words and the reason I chose these words is because I feel like they're often used as adverbs of course you can have a word that is a verb an adjective or an adverb uh they can be used in different parts of speech but I specifically chose these words because I feel like we often find them as adverbs so the way I'm going to do this is some of these questions are going to ask you about synonyms uh some questions are going to be asking about the meaning of these adverbs what what does this adverb mean and others are going to be about trying to put the words in context and I'm going to give you an example sentence so it's all multiple choice all right don't worry and I just want you guys to try the best you can don't be shy don't hesitate to give an answer please please please please write those answers in the chat or in the comments so the reason why we're doing this today is because well first it's important to build your vocabulary the bigger your vocabulary the greater your comprehension it's also going to be more easily uh you can more easily communicate and produce the language especially when you're speaking and the reason you can do this is because of number three you can more accurately express your thoughts your opinions your ideas you will be able to say exactly what you want to say because you know the words so adverbs uh just a quick review what are adverbs well again as I mentioned it is a part of speech mostly when we think of adverbs we think of grammar and we did a grammar lesson on adverb verbs before which I will link somewhere around here if you want to check it out it is all about adverb placement and I highly suggest you check out that lesson so an adverb the first thing we need to know is that it modifies a verb most of the time it doesn't always modify a verb it can modify an adjective a determiner a clause but in this quiz all of these adverbs will modify the verbs and we use them they typically Express manner time frequency such as always usually sometimes rarely never or a degree to the extent at which something can happen so this is how we usually uh what adverbs typically Express and mostly these words will end in an ly all of our words today in this quiz they are all ly words all right I'll go ahead and tell you that from the beginning and the other tricky thing like I mentioned we talked about in a previous lesson is that adverbs may go in different places within a sentence they might go at the beginning they might go at the end most often you will find adverbs in the middle of a sentence they will either come before the verb or right after the verb and as I go through the quiz I will be giving you some example sentences so you'll be able to see where they fall in the sentence all right the one other thing I will say in this vocabulary quiz I am when I give you the answer I'm going to tell you what that adverb means and I will give you some example sentences all of the other adverbs that I use in those examples I'm not going to go over the meaning for every single adverb that you see on this quiz because that would just take hours so if there is another word on there that you don't know I highly encourage you to look it up look up that word find out its meaning try to see how it's used in different sentences so that you can better understand that word but I'm just going to go over those adverbs that are the answer to these questions all right are you guys ready Ethan riswan Loi Mr English are you are you guys ready Mina all right so if you're ready you need I want you to click on the Go Button you need to click on the go button and then this quiz is going to start so please click on that go button right now even if you're watching this later all right excellent let's begin I told you this is interactive so the first question is which is a synonym for quickly which of these adverbs keenly briskly fervently coolly which is a synonym for quickly I told you these are all ly adverbs so I want you to write your answer in the chat or write your answer in the comments you can either write the word or just write the letter A B C or D what what do you guys what do you guys think all right which is a synonym for quickly all right one of those words all right so this is okay so I we got some mixed answers in here between C and B the answer if you're talking about quickly you know doing something quickly moving quickly the answer is briskly which is which is wait what is briskly that is B briskly that is the answer so briskly means to move or do something with great speed and often when I think of briskly

I think you're you're very focused and you're very serious and you are doing something briskly you're not joking around so for example uh right here he was running late so he walked briskly to work and it's talking about the way he walked the way he moved you walk briskly and in this example I wanted to give you a different context so when when you retort it's also like you're say saying something back what's that she retorted briskly I couldn't hear you and in this case again this this briskly it kind of gives us a little more information because it sets the tone of the conversation because when you if you retort briskly you're you're kind of saying it quickly and with a little bit of force and you're serious it's not like you're like oh what's that I didn't hear you you're more like wait what's that I didn't hear you so it really kind of captures the the the essence of the dialogue that you're trying to you so that is number one B briskly if you got that right uh hit that like button so that I know if I see it go up then I'll like okay you guys you guys got this you understand all right so the next question all right this means happening or being done at the same time which of these adverbs means happening or being done at the same time a automatically B annually C mechanically or D simultaneously what do you guys think and some of these adverbs again I I I think they are a little more advanced but some are more intermediate you might be familiar with some of these words already which is great because it's always good to review all right so we're getting some answers in there great excellent austo uh Kow AI lyd deare indu Judy excellent yes the correct answer is D simultaneously so if you do something simultaneously it is happening or being done at the same time check out my beautiful example sentences over here yes the letters and packages went out simultaneously they went out at the same time and again this comes after the verb the the phrasal verb went out and we use it down here and we use it for the verb in this example we simultaneously developed a marketing plan and created new products you're talking about two things that you do at the same time you are doing them simultaneously all right are you ready the next question right here now put this in context I'm giving you a sentence now they M offered to donate their time and money to the relief effort okay so uh I'll go ahead you can you know that the verb is offered and that's what we're trying to describe now I will I will say grammatically you you could use maybe some of these different words in there but again think about the context of this situation so you need to understand some of the other words in this sentence to help you accurately choose which adverb best completes this sentence all right what do you guys think yes Junior Andre uh Mr Dy ell a wait oh see no oh close uh yes so the answer is generously a generously they generously offered to donate so again the key word in there was donate when you're donating you're giving something and if you're doing that you know that's a very generous thing to do so you generously offer to donate and it's it just means that you are regularly giving or sharing you're just an unselfish person so you do things generously and in my example sentence I said people in the community generously volunteered to build houses after a storm so most of the time this adverb is used with verbs that that mean good things that mean things that have to do with sharing or or good work like volunteering or it could say they generously cooked dinner for the entire neighborhood they did this thing it was very generous of them they were unselfish and they generously genuis did that I'm having a tough time saying generously all right the next question are you guys ready you guys are rocking this excellent what is a synonym for intentionally what is a synonym for intentionally A B C or D I want you guys to write your answers in that chat all right or write them in the comments if you if you guys are just joining us we are doing a quiz an adverb vocabulary quiz and I'm asking you questions I want you to write the answer all right what is a synonym for intentionally is it deliberately promptly honestly or reluctantly all right excellent uh I see some great answers in here yes Ellie essan Olivia uh pritish Mor morillo uh I'm trying to get as many names as I can the answer is a deliberately so if you do something deliberately it means consciously and intentionally you do something on purpose so again in this case uh I'm I'm describing these verbs these actions and I might say you deliberately gave me the wrong directions maybe you did not want this person to find this place and you deliberately gave them the wrong directions it's I I feel like this word is often used as an adverb you hear this a lot you deliberately do something or I left his name off the list deliberately there is a reason why I didn't do this so you do something deliberately you do it on purpose there is a reason for doing that all right so I just wanted to let you guys know if you enjoy what we do here at interactive English I encourage you to check us out on patreon we offer some cool reward rewards I will leave a link in the description down below part of those rewards one of them is actually the lesson notes to all of these live lessons I post these notes on on our uh patreon page and those people who are patrons who are who who are absolutely our best friends they have access to these notes that that we use during these live lessons so check that out link is in the description let's continue all right how how are you guys doing let let me you know in the comments tell me how how many have You' got we got we did four questions already how many out of four have you gotten have did you get all of them correct did you get two correct did you get three correct write that write that in the comments let me know all right so let's continue the next question is this asking you for the meaning blank m means in a way that makes fun of someone or or something so we're talking about a word this word means in a way that makes fun of someone or something is it A woefully B zestfully C mockingly or D boastfully and and don't try to guess based off of my intonation and again even if you don't know all of these words you know just take a guess all right have fun with this just try and guess which one you think it means so which one means to make fun of someone or something this is not you know this is not a very good word I don't think because people you know they don't like this so yes excellent all right maybe this was a little easy uh most of you got this excellent Zen Shanti uh purple butterfly Alonzo gelle excellent yes the answer is C mockingly all right you're doing something mockingly it's in a way that makes fun of someone or something for example he imitated his boss's voice mockingly so if you imitate somebody's voice maybe you're you're making fun of them the way that they talk or the way that they sound and you're doing it mockingly or this one I just love that picture down there I've used it before when when asking questions on our social media and I'd say they mockingly bought two stuffed animals that was a little typo there that should be animals with an S for their pet and if you can't see that image down there it's the dog with the two stuffed animals and he's asking are you mocking me cuz I feel like I'm being mocked so in that case he's using mock to mock someone as a verb but again many of these words you can use them as a verb an adjective an adverb different parts of speech it's great to learn them all because that's an awesome way to build your vocabulary so mockingly you do something mockingly next question all right are you guys ready here we go so this is a sentence I want you to put it in context our home is M clean but we try our home is M clean but we try all right this is I I I am actually talking about our apartment where we live so keep in mind the context we do have a a new baby so I I would actually say you know yeah our home is clean but we try all right what do you think would best complete this sentence based on that context speedily disparagingly certainly or relatively what what do you guys think AB BC or D all right you guys quick quick on the quick on the draw there ly Ellie Claudia jelle Asma uh Alonzo star night yes all right excellent thank you guys for answering the correct answer is D relatively our home is relative L clean but we try so if I'm saying something is relatively clean it's talking about to a certain degree especially when you're comparing it with some other thing or some some of the same kind so maybe I'm just comparing it to to other people's apartments and saying yeah you know our home is relatively clean but we have this new baby we're we're trying we're trying to keep it as clean as we CL can but it's relatively clean um probably I think these are two other good examples if you're talking about you can use it to talk about an environment or even an object so for example my phone is relatively new if somebody says hey is that a new phone and maybe it's 3 months old or it's it's two weeks old and you can say yeah it's relatively new it's not brand new it's relatively new compared to other phones it is new another time where you often hear this adverb is when talking about the weather if you ever watch the weather channel in English the next time you are watching The Weather Channel I want you to see if you can identify the word relatively because you hear it a lot because when talking about the weather we often compare one day to the other days or to the week before or to the month before so you're often comparing different days and they might say you know Tom tomorrow will be relatively cool but things will warm up next week so again especially when talking about the weather you say yeah it's going to be you know relatively hot compared to other days um get to Alonzo great job yes if you're talking about longingly it means the S it's has a similar meaning to wishfully so when you're talking about doing something wishfully it's like you're a little sad and you're thinking about something that it's just not possible it because maybe it already happened and you can't change the past or you're just thinking about the past you're remembering things that happened in the past and you're thinking about it longingly you you you you want this thing to happen again you wish it could happen again and you're thinking about it you you remember something wistfully like that first example so I say he wistfully remembered his childhood playground so he's thinking about this good memory and he's thinking it makes him a little sad because maybe it was such a good memory he wants to go back and you wistfully remember his childhood playground or in the case of this like you you want something and you can't have it the cat stared wistfully at the mouse and I just love that image so that's why I use that sentence the cat stared wistfully at the mouse he wants that mouse all right but it's impossible he shouldn't he shouldn't attack the mouse he shouldn't eat it so this one again it's maybe not as common but again it's good to learn new words and and be able to understand how they're used in different context are you guys ready ready for the next one all right again if you if you've gotten more than five of these right uh let me know hit hit that like button so I know okay you guys you guys are in this all right you guys are doing well the next question that I have for you is right here ready so it's another definition one all right it means very serious or formal in manner Behavior or expression okay again if you guys if you're just joining us welcome we're taking this quiz and I want you guys to participate write your answers in the chat or if you're watching it later write your answers in the comments this means very serious or formal in your manner Behavior or expression is it a captively b abnormally C solemnly D deceptively what do you guys think all right seeing uh some good answers excellent wow you guys you guys rock this one all right so the answer is C solemnly it means very serious or formal in your manner Behavior or expression so in my example sentence I used it at the very beginning in this case all right most of the time like I said it goes before the verb or or after the verb but in this case I put it at the beginning and this just adds a little emphasis because solemnly he recounted what happened during the accident so once I start out with solemnly I really set you you set the mood you know it's a serious situation and and he's talking about this accident so it's probably something that very very bad that happened very serious very maybe even a little sad so in this case it goes at the beginning of the sentence or this is another example if you watch any kind of Law and Order type show where there's lawyers and police and there a jury and in a courtroom you might hear something like people would say I solemnly swear to tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth and in the reason it's used in this case is because when you're in a courtroom you're you're often taking an oath and people will like put their hand up and they will say you know I promise to tell the truth they solemnly swear to do something it's very formal and it's a formal situation so you might hear that I solemnly swear to tell you the whole truth and nothing but the truth next time you're watching a movie in a courtroom see if you hear this adverb being used solemnly and in that picture it's a picture of a pinky swear this is not formal at all it's very informal promise you would say you know oh do you promise me pinky swear and people will take their pinkies and they make a promise like that it that's more informal I just like the picture and that is a little American cultural that that's that's your cultural lesson for today pinky swears and maybe they have pinky swears in your country I don't know you guys can let me know in the chat or in the comments all right the next question that I have for you is this one complete the sentence all right Wes smiled M when he forgot to buy Yana flowers for Valentine's Day all right I will I will confess this is this is not a true this is not a true sentence it's just an example I didn't buy flowers I usually buy chocolate because that that's more uh her preference is chocolate instead of flowers but it's a good example so Wes smiled M when he forgot to buy flowers for Valentine's Day did I smile a passionately B coolly C gleefully or D sheepishly what do you guys think all right write your answer in the chat all right I want to hear from all of you guys who are in there right now write your answer which which which adverb best completes this sentence and again you know you could put a bunch of adverbs in there but based on the context all right I forgot to buy something for this special day so the answer would be D sheepishly I sheepishly smiled when I forgot to buy Yana flowers for Valentine's Day because sheepishly means in an embarrassed manner due to some shame or lack of confidence so in the sentence before if you forget a Valentine's gift that's you know that's a little shameful you might you're proud of that so you might do something like smiled sheepishly like I forgot and check out these sentences I've given you one for each context the boy smiled sheepishly at the girl across the room in this case the boy likes the girl he has a crush on the girl but he lacks confidence so he smiled sheepishly so in this case it means lacking confidence in this other one right here the employees sheepishly turned in the The Unfinished report this would be more shame all right you're not the report surreptitiously the meaning would be doing something secretly but because I asked for an antonym an antonym means a word that has an opposite meaning so the opposite of doing something secret secretly or doing something surreptitiously would be to do it openly so everybody knows what's happening so B openly is the correct answer that is the antonym for ctitious so surreptitiously again it means in a way that somebody is attempting to avoid being noticed or they're trying to avoid attention and they don't want to be noticed so it's kind of like you're trying to do something secretly and example sentence the politicians surreptitiously pass a law to promote corporate interest and this is something happens in the US all the time maybe it happens in your country that some companies corporations they have a lot of money they have a lot of influence so they will buy these politicians and donate to their campaigns and then these politicians will pass laws to help these companies and they will surreptitiously do that because they don't want people to notice they don't want people to know so this is a good example um the other one down here is just a little more of a simple example the rat surreptitiously walked toward the food the rat doesn't want people to see that they're going to get the food and take it so they walk and move surreptitiously again you can use it in a way to describe the the way that somebody moves they're moving surreptitiously all right that is a good word that's a good adverb I like that one so remember today's word list we talked about 10 different adverbs uh and

let's go through them right now so even if you joined us a little late we'll go through the meaning of these one more time it's always good to review what you've learned so the first word that we talked about was briskly it means to move or do something at great speed you move briskly he was running late so he walked briskly to work simultaneously means happening or being done at the same time you're doing two things right at the same time the letters and packages went out simultaneously generously I think many of you know that generously you are regularly giving or sharing you are unselfish so people in the community generously volunteered to build houses after the storm deliberately means intentionally you do something on purpose you deliberately gave me the wrong directions why did you do that the next one mockingly means in a way that makes fun of someone so you could he intimidated his boss voice mockingly you are making fun of this person relatively means to a certain degree especially compared with some other kind I told you keep an eye uh keep listen for this adverb when you're when you watching The Weather Channel or hearing people in English talk about the weather tomorrow will be relatively cool but things will warm up next week and that's true the weather just cooled down here the next one was wistfully wistfully is sad thinking about something in the past longingly all right he wistfully remembered his childhood playground it was a great memory and I am longing to go back to that time solemnly means very serious or formal in manner Behavior or expression I told you right here in these courtroom shows you might hear somebody say I solemnly swear to tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth and the next one sheepish sheepishly in an embarrassed manner due to some shame or lack of confidence all right so like I said good example about shame the employees sheepishly turned in the unfinished report and then surreptitiously in a way that avoid that attempts to avoid being noticed or or drawing attention to yourself you do something surreptitiously like those sneaky politicians the politicians surreptitiously passed a law to promote corporate interest all right so that is your quiz today if you learned a new word please hit hit that like button down below we really appreciate it thank you guys so much for being here uh I I hope that you will like and share our lessons with other people because we're constantly trying to build and grow our classroom and as always write us questions in the comments what I want to know I want you guys in the comments

tell me how many you got right there were 10 questions how many did you get correct I want to hear from you and you can join Jo our social media classes up there we're always posting questions for you guys to practice and improve your English skills so give a shout out to everybody thank you Kai farat Andre yasu Daisy indu um snigga thank you guys Maria for being here Mahendra ban uh IR Anderson Miriam Rosal Linda Vishnu thank you uh Risa glad you guys were here jelle essan Olivia savah Molly thank you thank you thank you sorry if I missed some of your names I tried to say as many names as possible during this lesson we will do more quizzes in the future because they're very interactive and it is a great way for you guys to practice your English skills so thank you guys for being here I hope you enjoy the rest of your day and I will see you next time so long

LESSON 129 OF 749

ADVICE for English Teachers & English Learners + Vocabulary

hey everyone welcome to today's lesson my name is Wes this is interactive English and if this is your first time here our channel it's all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and today it's going to be a discussion lesson I'm gonna have a little discussion with all of you so it's good for your listening if you want to just follow along and listen to this discussion also I'm going to be giving you some new vocabulary so as we go through and talk about our topic which is about education I'm gonna put it together a vocabulary list of some different words or phrases that I've picked out and I'll give you the meaning and then after the lesson I will put all of those vocabulary words down in the description so I just want to give a quick shout out a quick hello to those of you who are with me in the chat hello

Aidan hello sleepwalker Lalli Mary Jane Saeed so so excellent thank you guys for joining me today and the the discussion that we're going to have today and I'll have some other questions for you it's it's all about well it's mostly about teachers but as also it applies to learners because there are many teachers out there that watch our lessons that follow this channel and I get a lot of different questions I love hearing from other English teachers and you get to hear about their experiences and what's happening so I wanted to share with you some of my own experiences and and offer up some advice that is going to really be talking about okay what do you need to know when you enter the classroom and most of the advice is geared toward teachers and I'm going to share with you my experience that the the knowledge that I've gained after 15 years of teaching English but some of it is relevant to learners as well so when we go through this I'm going to be talking about how it to both teachers and learners so the first thing that I want to tell you which is an expression that I want to teach you is that look I'm gonna be talking about my experience I'm gonna be talking about my opinions my thoughts and I would say again just take everything with a grain of salt you might agree with me about some things you may disagree with me about others but this is something that I tell English learners all the time or anybody you know it's good to take things with a grain of salt and if you don't know what this expression means we're gonna add it this is gonna be the first one we're going to add to our vocabulary list right here so if you tell somebody you know take things with a grain of salt it just means that you should you know not believe everything is true you know to to doubt things so when I say that I'm gonna be talking to you again about my experience that might be different from your experience in the classroom and that's perfectly okay so again even though I'm sharing my opinions I'd still tell you you know take things with a grain of salt just keep that in mind so that is the first expression that I really wanted to teach you today so let's go ahead and jump into it so the first thing that I would tell a teacher especially a new teacher and I think this applies to anybody who is going to start a new job and the way I'm gonna do this is go through some of these quotes that I found that I think are relevant that I just kind of enjoy and if you can't read that because I had a tough time finding the picture with it it says a bad attitude is like a flat tire if you don't change it you'll never go anywhere and I think this is so true so the first thing that I would tell people is that you know you need to make sure that you have the right attitude if you decide that you know you you know you're interested in teaching make sure you know that that's some that you are passionate about and because that's going to help you have that right attitude and the first question that I'd ask for all of you guys who are even in the chat right now have you ever had a teacher that you just didn't get along with that for some reason their attitude their behavior the way they acted you just didn't get along with this person and why why is it that you feel like you didn't get along right that to me let me know I'd love to hear back from you guys and see what you think because I always say that you know your attitude is infectious if you go into the classroom with a very positive attitude it's going to influence the attitude of the learners and of course you want your students your learners to have a positive attitude because that's going to create an atmosphere that makes it easier to learn and understand the information you want to tell them of course I know that they're people everybody has a bad day that's perfectly fine it's normal and I noticed that when I've had bad days and I've taken that attitude into the classroom most more often than not those lessons are not the best lessons they they they it's it's affected me and it's affected my learner's and you can tell that that that's a problem so again just I it's something to think about as you get in go into the classroom especially if you are doing this for the first time and you are entering a new class I think it's so important that if you are starting a new class to make sure you get off on the right foot and go in there with a very positive attitude first impressions are so important so let's add a couple more words to the vocabulary list I told you you want to go into the classroom with a positive attitude you want to make sure that you get off on the right foot and what that means it's an expression to get off on the right foot it means that you start out start out a relationship let me say in a positive way so I think whatever job you do it's important if you're your co-workers or your boss you want to get off on the right foot for teachers you want to start your classes off on the right foot and I also told you for new classes first impressions are so important and if you hear this word talking about a first impression it's the way someone you know initially thinks about you all right what do they think about you that is your first impression and you always want to make a good first impression whether you are a teacher whether you are a businessman a businesswoman whatever job first impressions are good so again some people you guys are sharing with me in the chat excellent Mikhail said I believe one of the university hated me because he saw me as a threat I was confident and going for big projects simply did not like me at all okay that's a great example when maybe if you get into the classroom and you if you think that way of another student then that's definitely not a way to get off on the right foot so again that is a great example Miguel thanks for sharing with us he said who is it Kotter Beck said yes I have a teacher I like he didn't listen when I answered and he decreased my results and that's something that I do want to talk about a little later we're gonna talk about listening so I told you that it's important to go in there with just a positive attitude again I think a lot of these things are fairly common sense but it's important that that people even though that we should know these things it's always good to hear it again and again and again and to really think about that because we can all be better the next thing that I would say is that it's very important to know your audience now this is this is something that I tell to students all the time I say know your audience and the reason is it's important you would say you need to know your audience when you are writing or if you are giving a presentation because if you're writing you want to know who is reading your essay who is reading your email because you're not always going to write it the same way the same goes with a presentation and what I would ask you guys this question let me know I'd like to hear your experience have you ever given a presentation or you were giving a talk to a group of people and as you got into it you realized that okay this is the wrong audience perhaps you were trying to tell a joke or you were trying to say something to the group and you realized okay this is not the right audience for for what I'm trying to say so this is definitely something that I would tell learners all the time for for presentations for writing you need to know your audience and I would say that the exact same goes for for teachers as well you need to know your audience you need to know who the students are for example I I first started teaching a long time ago in South Korea on young haseo to anybody out there who's in South Korea and I first started teaching children and I was teaching I teach to school for about a year and I was teaching children that were around you know fourth fifth grade they were high elementary school students and then I switched from teaching children to teaching at a university so I went from children to university and I remember when I first got in there and started teaching University the very first class that I had I said okay you know one of the first thing I'm gonna do I'm gonna talk about the rules of the class you know what are some of the expectations and I realized as I started going through it I was kind of treating in the situation as though it were still children about like don't do this you can't do that you know no running around in the classroom and as I started doing it I realize okay this this is not the right audience these are students that were anywhere from 18 to 22 years old it was not a bunch of children and again this that's a very important thing when a teacher they need to know their audience they need to know their students the other thing that I would tell teachers when it comes to knowing your students is typically one of the first things that a teacher should do is a needs assessment so when you get into learning about teaching English teachers might do a needs assessment and basically that just means that they need to understand what the student what the students the learners what do they need to do in order to improve the most it's basically like talking about that gap between well what do the students know now and where do they want to be in the future and that gap in between those are the needs the student needs and you need to understand what those needs are and you can do different types of a needs assessment if you're a teacher you can do just like student feedback and this is something that I would do I would go into a classroom especially with adults and I did this with my University students and I would ask them even the first day and have them write down what are some things that you hope to accomplish in this course and I would ask them other questions what do you think is the most difficult part of learning English so automatically I was trying to have them identify the greatest challenges that they think exist and what they want to accomplish because then I could take that information and try to shape my lesson plans around that to better help them throughout the course so you could do student feedback you could even do a quiz that's another great way to do a needs assessment but again for teachers it's very important to know your audience understand well who the students are and what does everybody need of course it's very difficult for like on a platform like this as a teacher I you know all of you you are different ages different parts of the world I'm not able to speak with you one-on-one directly so again a lot of the information that we have on our Channel I try to do a variety do vocabulary that is a little more difficult some vocabulary that might be easier I try to do a little bit of grammar and again the level is going to vary because many of you are at different levels as well but if you're going into the classroom needs assessment is very important so let's look at the next thing that I would tell you is this quote right here I love this quote this is a famous quote that is it's attributed to Lois past year and it's just chance favors the prepared mind and I think this goes without saying okay and that is another great that's another great expression if somebody says this goes without saying so let's just gonna I'm gonna add that to our vocabulary list right here so if somebody says that sentence and they say this goes without saying it kind of means well it means exactly what it says you're basically telling somebody kind of like yeah you should know the information that I'm about to tell you and people would say that when they're getting ready to say something that most people already know that maybe a little bit of common sense so I could say that this right now it's it goes without saying chance favors the prepared mind and basically it's just saying you know don't underestimate the the power of preparedness that you as a teacher and both as a learner this is a you need to be prepared you need to be ready and especially as a teacher and I feel like this is this has happened to me where something's going on in your life and for some reason you're not able to prepare as well as you would like to and typically in my experience when that's happened when that happens the class it just it's not as good as those classes where I'm able to prepare every activity I know very well what I want to do and those classes tend to be better that you you need to really prepare and keep that in mind and when I say prepare especially as teachers you need to you need to have a syllabus you need to know what you're going to do throughout the course when a year when you're planning lessons you need to have a lesson plan you would be surprised at over the years

how many teachers I've met and some of them they just don't use lesson plans and I think it's a little strange but again the more prepared you are the better that you're going to have a successful class and that's better for the learners as well a syllabus a lesson plan I would also say you need to show transparency how our grades going to be determined how are you going to do that and tell the learners what they need to expect this is something that I think has always helped me that if I had a class for example and it was going to be one semester Monday Wednesday and Friday the very first week I would go in there and I would tell the students okay this is what we're gonna do every Monday this is what we're going to do every Wednesday and this is what we're going to do every Friday and I create that routine so students know what to expect every day when they come to class of course the lessons are going to be different but there is that there is that expectation and I've always found that in my experience again routine really has helped the students because they know what to expect they know what they're doing they're more likely to do the work that you assign them and it helps them come to class more prepared if they know what the routine is and they know what to expect and I'm not saying a routine that for example what I would do would be like maybe a warm-up and I'd say okay every Monday we're gonna do idiom of the day and I teach a new idiom and that's our warmup and we'd have a discussion every Wednesday maybe we'd go over some new type of academic vocabulary and then we'd have a discussion on that so again establish some sort of routine

so that the students know what to expect and for learners when I say try to be prepared I think I think again maybe think about your long term and your short term goals where is it that you want to be and how are you going to get there and what's going to help you prepare in order to accomplish those short-term goals and to accomplish those long-term goals all right so the next thing that I would tell you as teachers if you're going into the classroom would be this is what works for some may not work for others okay so teachers I'd say especially they need to understand that all learners are different and that for some learners certain styles and methods and approaches are going to be more beneficial than it might be for other students and the reason I say this is because I tell I would tell teachers you need to try a variety of methods and a variety of approaches and when you start I think learning to become a teacher you learn about these different methods for example there is what's called the direct method and this is a method where you only use the target language and you're learning more every day vocabulary and sentences there's another approach which is called total physical response this is an approach which is more for kinesthetic learners it's about you know you're moving around you're getting up out of your chair and and some people who learn that way who are more kinesthetic learners and they it helps them remember things to move around this is a great approach that they can use total physical response there's also one that I like and again this is my personal preference for any of you out there who are listening it's it's called content and language integrated learning sometimes it's shortened to CLIL and what this means content and language integrated learning it's basically you are teaching a language while you're teaching some other topic and you're using the target language to teach something else and this is what happens at international schools all the time where students will learn math but they will learn math in English and because of that they're not only learning math but they're also learning the English language they're learning new vocabulary that's related to math they're constantly reading in English they're constantly listening to English and as you're learning this other subject you're able to learn the language so that is one of my personal favorites but again in this case as a teacher what I would tell people is that you should try to use an eclectic approach and that's actually the next vocabulary word that I wanted to teach you is eclectic because some of you may be wondering well what does that mean what does eclectic mean so let's go back over to our vocabulary list and I'm going to write it down if you're talking about something that is eclectic it is an adjective so I'll go ahead and write that down and what it means is that it's talking about it is using a variety of sources or it comes from a variety of sources so I'm talking about you should use an eclectic approach which basically means that somebody is using all of those methods that I just talked about you're using the direct method you're doing a little TPR and you're having students move around the classroom you're also doing some content and language integrating learning by you're studying some other topic but you're doing it in English that would be an eclectic approach now often when I think about using this word I think about somebody talking about maybe art and they would say that somebody has an eclectic taste that they have a taste that is developed from a variety of sources and they say oh it's very eclectic so I often think that this is a word that you may hear when people are talking about art but just keep that in mind what works for some may not work for others and that's something I tell when we're talking about variety that's something I tell learners all the time try to get a variety recently I just had a lesson on on talking about listening and how you improve your skills and one of the the very first thing we talked about was a variety try to get a variety of listening whether you are listening to these videos on YouTube you're listening to an audiobook or a podcast or even music variety is always good so if you're a learner remember that keep that in mind variety can't go wrong the next thing the next little bit of advice that I would like to share with teachers and learners would be about mistakes in talking about mistakes and again this is another quote which is attributed to Albert Einstein and it just says a person who never made a mistake never tried anything new and I think what everybody needs to realize I think again this goes without saying is that mistakes it's a fact of life and that is actually the next expression or next phrase that I want to add if you say that something is a fact of life it's just an expression that people use let's go over to our vocabulary list but it's a common one and basically what you're just trying to say is that well this thing is true you'd say that something is a fact of life so this is a great expression phrase that you can use and you're trying to kind of emphasize that something is true and I'll add and cannot be avoided alright and I just told you right then I said mistakes it's a fact of life if you are teaching you're going to make mistakes if you are learning a language such as English you're going to make mistakes even in the chat right now I want you guys to think we as a learner what is the last mistake that you made and I know that if you feel comfortable share that share that with us because again the one thing I would say is try to embrace your mistakes it's a fact of life we all make them I know that some people if you make a mistake it can really get you down and that makes it as a learner it makes it harder for you to continue especially when it comes to something like speaking I think if somebody makes a speaking mistake and then they get corrected they may feel a little self-conscious and then go that was a that was a silly mistake why did I do that and they maybe become a little bit more maybe a little shy and they're a little more reticent to speak the next time but even as a teacher you're going to make mistakes I make mistakes all the time I still make mistakes and I think as a teacher the most important thing is that you're going to learn from those mistakes that you're not going to avoid them but just think about okay how can I do this better in the future because when you do a lesson quite often you're going to teach that lesson again possibly to another class and you can think about that mistake and think okay why did I make this mistake how can I

avoid it then next time so if you're talking about avoiding a mistake in your lesson then that's that's great you know you can do that and the same goes for learners if you make a mistake in speaking in grammar in writing whatever it is then if you can identify it the goal is not to avoid using this word or phrase or try to avoid using this grammar but just to practice and then the next time try to use it and do it correctly so as a teacher you're definitely going to make mistakes even as a learner try to embrace them and understand that I'll give you an example just to make fun of myself a little bit recently I did a live lesson talking about adjectives that are our adjectives that are followed by prepositions that was the lesson that I had put together but I made a mistake and on one of the very first slides I had the word verbs and it was a mistake I should have changed the word to adjectives but when I started doing the live lesson I for some reason I got it in my mind okay we're talking about verbs and through the entire first half of the I kept talking about verbs instead of saying adjectives and I realized that halfway through help the lesson and if you were to go back if you were to find the lesson you will see that I kind of froze and I was like oh no I just realized I've made a huge mistake because I've been using the wrong part of speech I corrected it I kept going through with the lesson but again it was a mistake it was an embarrassing mistake but I've left it up there so again like what I asked you guys about some mistakes let's see Vicki shared if you make a speaking mistake in German sometimes they switch to English all you and that doesn't help at all and it's annoying that that is an excellent point I think sometimes when especially it's happened to me when you're twin as an English speaker and you're trying to learn another language since since many people out there there are many speakers of English and people they feel very confident in their their language skills you're trying to learn a language but then when somebody switches back to English again it can make you feel a little down you're like oh like you know I'm trying to practice this other language when I lived another quick story when I lived in in Costa Rica Pura Vida anybody out there who's in Costa Rica I would often meet people and I was learning Spanish and I could I could speak Spanish but I would meet people from Costa Rica they would see me they'd want to practice their English skills and even if even if my Spanish was much better than their English I still would speak to them in English because I knew that they just wanted to practice they wanted to improve their skills and I think that that's what would help them the most so again that that that is a great point thanks for sharing with us Vicky so the next the next little quote the little piece of advice that I'd have for you and this is another great I heard this a long time ago and I heard it was like oh this is so true and it says a teacher is a person who never says anything once I think when I heard this the first time it was like a great teacher is a person who never says anything once and this is so true if you are a teacher or you're you want to become a teacher or you're getting ready to be a teacher you have to realize that you need to repeat repeat repeat repeat repeat and just keep saying it again and again and again and you need to get comfortable with that because that is the best way that not only people are going to learn it but they're going to remember it and I'm not talking about just like well learning English you do this with new vocabulary I don't know you many of you have seen our lessons and I'll do a vocabulary lesson and I'll teach a word and then later on in the lesson I'll say it again and typically I'll just try to keep repeating the words throughout the lesson hoping that you just learned it that maybe you you have a better understanding of the meaning so you need to do this whether you're talking about well for English teachers new vocabulary you need to do this with grammar and just repeat the information you need to do this with homework assignments as well you can't just tell a student or a learner like okay this is your homework assignment or or this is what I want you to do for your essay or this is what I want you to read you need to say it again and again and again and just understand and know that you need to repeat yourselves because I think for some people when you first enter this profession and you have to repeat yourself it can be a little annoying and you're like ah why do I have to why do I have to keep telling you the same thing but as a teacher you need to be patient you need to realize okay you're going to need to say the same thing again and again and again because a teacher is a person who never says anything once and I think this is a good time to point out as a learner I think it's very important that you need to listen to understand that this is going to require your complete concentration you need to listen because I think we've all been there if you stop listening and it's you just it's very easy to tune out if you're listening to another language and when you tune out and you stop focusing it's you try to come back into the conversation you're like wait what what just happened what I I completely missed what somebody said so that's another word let's add it to our vocabulary list to tune out and that is a phrasal verb so if we go over here and I said if you're learning another language it's very easy to tune out so you can tune out something or you can tune out someone and it basically means to stop paying attention and again yeah this would happen to me when I was learning Spanish and I would try so hard to focus

but especially at the beginning if I'm involved in a conversation it was very easy to tune out and then suddenly I tried to join the conversation again it's like oh no I'm lost what is everybody talking about so again when you think about you enter the classroom as a learner you really again you need to focus you need to listen because that's going to help you better follow along with the lesson and then when the teacher says something the first time you may hear it you may remember it exactly so let's look at the next one the next little piece of advice I have is to strive for continuous improvement instead of perfection and this is something else that I think is relevant for well will any job that it's good to strive for continuous improvement instead of perfection I would tell learners the same thing because well if you're talking about teaching if you're talking about learning another language there's always room for improvement and well that's another great expression

let's write it down I said there's always room for improvement and I would say that this is kind of a collocation if you say that there is room for room for improvement it basically means that there is space for for somebody to improve a room for improvement all right there is well let's just say more more space in which someone can improve all right so this is an I said it's like kind of it's a collocation it's a phrase you white frequently hear somebody use this if they're talking about well of their own skills like I'd say even with Spanish you know I I have lived in several different spanish-speaking countries but for me let's there's there's so much room for improvement there's so much I can do to to improve my language skills and to go back to the point about teaching as a teacher I think you you need to understand you need to realize there's always going to be room for improvement that you're always going to be able to get better and again that's the goal is just to try and get better and better because you can learn something from anyone even somebody who maybe you think well this person is not a good teacher there's still some things that you can learn and I think that you need to keep an open mind when it comes to improving when it comes to learning because I think a lot of people especially teachers if you see some money and I think this you know same with any kind of environment work environment if you see somebody who you think oh you know I'm much better than that person there's nothing that they can teach me I think that's not that that's not the right attitude to have you need to try and understand that yes there are so many things that we can teach each other there are all you other English teachers who are watching this right now there are so many things that I could learn from you and I think that's so important that you need to understand that we can all learn from each other and especially for teachers let's I want to get back to that perfection point you need to make sure you know that the lessons don't have to be perfect all right because again you're going to make mistakes and it shouldn't be about well I need to make this perfect you shouldn't be asking yourself how can I make this perfect instead what you should be asking yourself is well how can i how can I make this better instead of how can I make it perfect how can I make this better and learner's should be asking themselves the same thing your language skills do not have to be perfect instead of saying that you should just be asking yourself how can I make this better and I want to talk to you a little bit about reflective teaching when I lived in I lived in California before my wife and I moved to Europe this is where I did my masters in Teasle which is teaching English to speakers of other languages and I did my final I did my final report on reflective teaching practices and I think this is where you can try to reflect and understand what you need to do in order to do it better and the whole idea about reflective teaching is where when you you teach a lesson you kind of you just think back about okay what did I do what what could I have done better did I make any mistakes why was there a mistake how can I improve for the next time and there's a lot of other methods you can go in there like for example peer observations it's an example of a reflective teaching practice because you are somebody else is watching your lesson and then they're able to give some feedback some advice and you actually sit down and you're supposed to talk with that person about okay what did you see what did you think about this how can I improve and you basically brainstorm some ideas you reflect on the lesson that both of you that that that one teacher gave and the other teacher observed and you reflect on it and think about well how can how can you improve what are some areas that you need to improve on and how can you do that so strive for improvement not perfection I would tell learners the same thing because I think when it comes to language learning so many people want you know they say I want fluency but again fluency is different for dim people because what I think might be somebody fluent in a language might be different than what you think so again it goes back to this whole notion of you know perfection things don't have to be perfect perfect it should all be all about you know what what do I need to do to improve so those are some of my suggestions that I wanted to throw out for for all of you I hope that especially for teachers I hope that maybe you found it useful if you're a learner this is great listening practice I hope that you learned some some new vocabulary and I will take this vocabulary and I would I will put it down in the description below so that all of you have it and those are you who are watching it later you'd be able to listen for those words as we go through through and keep a continuous flow of the content Thank You Samuel stephannie have a good weekend too Francesca will see you guys next time

LESSON 130 OF 749

AMERICAN ENGLISH ACCENT TRAINING (Speak Naturally & Easily)

I want to talk to you about fast speech because this is something that people often tell me that when they're watching a movie or TV show or just listening to English out on the streets if you're in the US and they say well it's really hard for me to understand what other people are saying even though when they're watching me in these videos they say well it's much easier to understand so I want to look at some simple sentences and really do a deep dive and talk about what's going on so you have a better understanding of why people sound the way they do and I know everybody has different speaking goals you should never feel like you need to speak with one accent or another because some of the things that I'm going to talk about they are more closely related to the American accent so this is the dialogue that I would like to practice and we're going to go over it and really look at what's going on with each of these sentences so I'll go ahead and say the dialogue you can just listen to me say it right now what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time I'm going to see if I can find one on the app pretty simple easy enough to understand especially now that you're able to read it but I know reading and listening are two different things but let's uh let's have a look at what's going on and of course one thing I want to point out if you would like to get the lesson notes check out the link Down Below in the description you can join our email Community my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals so the first two questions what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around the first thing I want to point out is the phrase what's up with something this is used to say that you just don't understand something or you're asking for an explanation so in this context if somebody says what's up with the bus then basically it uh implies that maybe the bus is late and something's wrong and you don't know what's going on and that's really the situation that we're in when I start out with the question well what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around so here are some different things that are happening the first thing I want to talk about is linking what's up so linking is when we link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word so we can link the final consonant sound in what's with the beginning vowel sound in up what's up with the there's a little some coarticulation this is when you have overlapping sounds you have a voiceless th and with and a voice th in the and you should you feel that vibration when you say the but essentially your tongue is going to move into the position as well as your mouth with that th sound in with and you're going to release into that voiced th sound should we keep waiting around so there's a few things I want to talk about here the first is that with verbs in the continuous tense and this is pretty common uh in the United States if we're talking about what the way that Americans generally speak and what they'll do is they'll drop the G in those ings so if I have uh like a sentence like I'm taking a break instead of taking and you hear that in sound I drop the G it's going to sound like taken taken I'm taking a break now in this case waiting I'm going to drop the G and it may sound like waiting and you're think wait those those two those two words don't sound the same and that is because the t is then going to change from a flap te in waiting and I will talk about the flap te in just a moment to a glottal te which is going to be a glottal stop and if you're thinking well what the heck is a glottal stop this is when your glottis closes it blocks the flow of air and you you feel this tightness in your throat so think about uh if somebody makes a mistake and they say uhoh in between those sounds that uh oh you can feel that glottal stop uhoh and your glottis is closing so there are times when the te is going to be a glottal te and some this happens when you have the T followed by an n Sound and there there are many individual words that in which this happens so Mountain you may hear people pronounce it with a t or Mountain kitten all right instead of a true te I'm going to say kitten with a glottal te so instead of waiting I'm going to say waiting now this is not a fixed rule you may hear somebody say in this case the flap te waiting or the glottal te waiting either one of them is perfectly fine but for this exercise I am going to say that glottal T waiting and then I can link that wait that n Sound with the vowel sound in around wait and around give that phrase a try wait and around wait and around so let's practice saying it you can maintain that same Pace because I think that's one of the more challenging parts of shadowing three times here we go what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around all right excellent let's continue and look at the next sentence it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options so the first thing I want to point out is want some more vocabulary it's your call this is a statement that you could use to basically tell someone look you should make the decision I I know you're asking my opinion but really it's up to you it's your call so with this sentence there are several different things happening the first is a simulation this is when you have two sounds they blend together to create a new sound this is not a fixed rule it's not always going to occur you may hear people pronounce those individual sounds but in this case that TS plus the Y sound in your they blend together and you get a sh like it's sure it's sure it's call so this is not something you have to force it's like we're taking that CH sound in putting it between the two words and that is what allows us to connect them together but uh you'll hear me say this when I when I say this look it's your call it's your call and then the next Clause but I I can link these two words together and what I want to point out most importantly is that that final T in but you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T I told you that I would come back to that because I I'm from the US and Americans we love the flap tea so the flap T it most often occurs when the t comes between two vowel sounds in words like water but this is a phrase the t is at the end of the word but because the next word begins with a vowel sound you're going to hear me pronounce that as a flap T but ey you you should hear that soft D but ey but I but I think we may want to we can reduce that to just W to this is very I feel like you you've heard this before you may even already use it as part of your speaking fluency we may want to consider other options we can link those three words together and I'm linking that final r with the beginning vow sound and it's almost like we're moving it over consider other options consider other options just repeat and say this after me consider other options consider other options good let's say the sentence together once again I want to Shadow and really have you say it at the same time and see if you can maintain that same speed so I'll say it two times slowly and then three times at more of a regular speed but let's say it slowly together ready it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options okay so now I I trust that you were saying that with me let's say it at more of a normal speed I'll say it three times try to say it with me try to maintain that same speed here we go it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options all right you're doing great you're doing great let's keep moving along with our next sentence we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time so in Uber is this is like a taxi they operate in many different parts of the world uh if you're unfamiliar what Uber is so what's happening with this sentence going to we can reduce that to Gunna this is very common again you may already be using it when you're having a conversation have to I can also reduce that to have to it is a little tricky when you have one right after the other we're going to have to we're going to have to give that a try repeat after me we're gonna have to we're gonna have to get n Uber I can link that entire phrase the final T and get you'll hear me you'll hear me pronounce it as a flap T that I can then link with the vow sound in N get an Uber get an Uber we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to we can reduce that to wna and then make it on time make it on I can link those three words and there you see it again that T I told you Americans love the flap te you'll hear me pronounce it with that soft D sound but I can link all those three word those three words together make it on time repeat this phrase after me make it on time make it on time all right I think you're ready

let's let's practice saying this together two times slowly and then three times at a faster speed so let's start and say it slowly and say it with me we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time now let's say it a little faster three times repeat after me try to maintain that same pace we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time nice let's look at the final sentence in in this situation in this dialogue the other person responds and says I'm going to see if I can find one on the app so what's happening when I just said that statement the first thing is I'm going to now I told you that going to may get reduced to Gunna I'm gonna that's very common you can use that but you may hear people reduce I'm gonna even further and it's going to sound like Amna so this is not something that you have to do I know when I've taught people this sometimes they say well I just don't feel very comfortable with it and that is perfectly fine do not feel like you need to say i'mna if you want to use I'm gonna that that works but I told you that I think this is good for your listening comprehension because when you watch a movie or TV show you may hear that am so instead of I'm going to cook dinner I'm going to cook dinner or I'm going to go to the mall I'm going to go to the mall so when I said those sentences you hopefully it was easy for you to pick out that i'mna and in your mind you're like okay yes that means I'm going to so I'm going to I'm going to see if I I can link those two words together can find so in this case find I'm I'm pronouncing that D sound at the end and releasing it but that's not really how you're going to hear people pronounce the word because elision is going to occur this is when sounds or syllables get removed and this sometimes happens when a t or a d follows an N sound so instead of fine it may just sound like fine like if I said um I cannot uh find my phone I I I can't find my phone I can't find my phone you don't really hear that D D sound because I'm not releasing it in my mouth so if I can find one on the app one on I can link that phrase together and the the only thing I want to point out with the article the it really has a strong and a weak form you hear you're hearing me say the weak form the and that occurs when the next word begins with a consonant sound the the car the cup the glass but when the word begins with a vowel sound then you may hear that strong form the the app app begins with a vowel sound the elephant the air so just something to keep in mind as we go through this sentence and I want you to say it with me I'll say it twice slowly if you want to try and say use that am feel free but if you want to use I'm Guna that's also okay but let's let's say it twice slowly and then we'll say it three times at a faster speed are you ready I'm going to see if I can find one on the app I'm going to see if I can find one on the app now let's say it a little faster three times I'm going to see if I can find one on the app I'm going to see if I can find one on the app I'm going to see if I can find one on the app I think we are now ready to practice this entire dialogue and what I'd like to do I'll I'll say it one more time so that you can hear it again in its entirety and then I want you to practice and say it with me and I'll be a and then you can be B and we'll switch so just to say it one more time what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around it's your call but I think we may want to consider other options we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time I'm going to see if I can find one on the app okay so I am going to start out I will say a I want you to say B and we'll see if we can kind of sync up our this conversation so that it sounds natural because I'll give you a moment to say the sentence so let me start out I will say a and I want you to say B out loud okay okay here we go what's up with the bus should we keep waiting around we're going to have to get an Uber if if we want to make it on time okay good I trust that you were saying this sentence the saying these sentences and having this conversation with me I want to switch and now I want you to say a and I am going to say B so you are a you can begin now it's your call but I think we may want to we may want to consider other options I'm gonna see if I can find one on the app okay sorry for my my kind of stuttering right there uh but the whole idea is just to help uh give you a better understanding of why people speak and sound the way they do but also G give you a little speaking practice I hope that you were speaking and saying and practicing these sentences out loud and if you were I want to know about it I want you to write the word speaking in the comments so that I know that you are participating but just to remind you one last time in general I do think this is really helpful when it comes to improving your listening comprehension because this is the way that you're going to hear people in the United States speak especially if it's a little more uh of a casual situation and they're going to use linking and reductions and assimilation and elision and all of these different parts of connected speech which is why it it may sound very fast so if you enjoyed the lesson and learned something new please you can let me know by hitting that like button down below as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you

next time so long

LESSON 131 OF 749

AMERICAN FAST SPEECH (Boost your speaking fluency & listening comprehension)

I want to help you improve your speaking fluency. And the way that we're going to do that is by talking about fast speech. So, if you are someone who would like to improve your speaking and listening skills, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way, I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. So, one thing that I often hear is learners tell me, 'Look, when you are speaking, I understand what you're saying, but when I'm watching a movie or TV show, it's really confusing. And if you ever wonder why certain phrases just sound like one long word, mostly it's because of connected speech.

And that's what I want to look at right now. We're going to do a deep dive into some different sentences so that you have a better understanding of uh why people speak the way they do. So I have this short little dialogue which we are going to practice reading it uh saying it together at the end and we're going to go through one at a time. So just so you can hear me say this dialogue and then we're going to break it down sentence by sentence. So I'm going to read both A and B right now. Uh, did you know we're not going to finish on time? I should have seen this coming from a mile away. What do you think we ought to do now? We're going to have to go back to square one. Okay, it it's I think it's rather simple, straightforward. Perhaps that was easy for you to follow. But let's go through this one at a time. And of course, as we do this, I want you to practice. I want you to say these sentences out loud.

Practice your speaking skills. And again, even if this feels a little unnatural, don't feel like you ever have to speak with any sort of accent, I do think this will certainly help your listening comprehension. So, just keep that in mind. Let's look at this first question right here. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? So, when I just said it right there, I was pronouncing each individual word. Let's look at what's going on. And this should give you a little better idea as to what's happening. So did you assimilation is going to occur. This is when we have two sounds. They blend together to create a new sound. In this case, the D and Y, they blend together and you get this JJ J sound. It's almost like we're going to put that between the two words and that allows us to connect them together. Did you? Did you? It's not something you have to force if you're just saying one word right after the other. It's going to occur naturally. And you often come across this in in questions. Did you Did you know we're not going to? This is probably the most common reduction in spoken English. Going to is often reduced to gonna. This is when we're removing or changing sounds. Did you know we're not gonna finish on time? So linking may occur. This is when we can link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word. So finish on. It's you. It's like we're taking that final sh sound and we're moving it over to that preposition. Finish on. Finish on time.

So on time there's a little co-articulation going on. This is when we have overlapping sounds. So basically, just so you're aware of it, again, it's going to help you speak a little more easily and naturally, when you finish making that N sound, think about where your tongue is in your mouth. On your tongue is going to be up behind your top front teeth, but we're going to stop the air and then we're going to release right in to that T in time. That true T on. So when your tongue comes down, we're going to be moving right into that T. So you can see down there, uh, we're stopping it with the N and then releasing into the T on.

I've given you the phonetic spelling so that you can kind of get a better idea and actually see what what it is that I'm pronouncing. So I'll say it slowly and uh I I want you to repeat after me and then we'll do this a few times. So let's say it one time slowly. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? All right. Now, I'll say it at uh a more normal speed. Again, repeat after me. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? And then if you again, somebody were to say this quickly and you can give it a try. It's always good to to practice, you know, positioning the tongue and the mouth and transitioning from one sound to the next. And even though these are this is a simple question, it may be a little challenging. Did you know we're not going to finish on time?

All right. I was really trying to say it say it much faster. We're going to come back to this when we say the dialogue together. If you are actually practicing your speaking skills, let me know. Write that in the chat in the comments. just write the word speaking so I know that you're participating. Now, I forgot to mention with each of these uh because we're talking about American fast speech because I'm from the United States. Each of these pictures is just like a landmark in the US. And I'll I'll I was going to ask you at the beginning like to quiz you where what is this? Uh you can tell me what you think about the next one. This is um from St. Louis, Missouri. This is the Gateway Arch that is a famous landmark in St. Louis.

One thing before we continue, if you would like to practice and improve your speaking skills, you can check out the link down in the description if you want to learn more about my speaking course. This course is for intermediate to advanced speakers. It's all about trying to help you speak confidently, speak clearly, and speak naturally. Check out that link down below if you'd like to learn more about class times and availability. And I actually see some people in here uh taken the speaking course. Good to see you. Teao, Raphaela. Um and excellent. Thank you for participating, Kishna, Sophie. Perfect. All right. I'm going to ask you guys that each time if you're practicing just write that word speaking. So this is the next sentence that I want to uh look at and examine. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. When I say it like that, I sound like a little like a robot. And I'm not gonna say it like that. I'm gonna say I should have seen this coming from a mile away. And in case you're wondering, I put that expression down there. To see something coming from a mile away is an expression. And basically, it means that you are you're able to foresee something that will happen in the future. and you can come you can prepare for it because it's it's kind of obvious that this is coming and you can see it from a mile away. In this case, we're using I should have to express regret. This is a modal. We can call this a modal of lost opportunity. And you're expressing regret for about something. So you're basically saying, well, I should have seen this coming from a mile away. It was obvious, but in this case, I did not see it. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. If you want, you can write in the chat, too. Uh, where where is this? This is another famous landmark in the US. This is a little more challenging. I'll tell you after we we talk about this sentence. So, what's going on with this sentence? First, should have, we can reduce that. that with these modals of lost opportunity should have, could have, would have, we can reduce them and it's going to sound like should have or should have. There's also some over there's some co-articulation overlapping sounds with seen this. Again, we're stopping the air with the n and releasing into that voice th this seen this coming. Now, this is not something that you have to do. I think in places like the United States, it's a little more common. People will drop the G in continuous tense verbs. So instead of coming, I might say coming. Either one is okay, but just so you're aware of it, we can dropping may occur. And then linking, we can link those different phrases down there. From we're going to link that consonant sound with that vowel sound. from a mile away. It's like we're moving that L sound over to that uh that schwa sound in a way. Mile away.

From a mile away. And that can be a little tricky to say quickly. From a mile away. From a mile away. So, here is what uh it looks like. You can reduce should have either should have and you're going to end it with that vv sound or because the next word is a consonant, you could even drop that v and it's going to sound like shoulda. Should have. So let's say it slowly. I want you to repeat after me and let again just repeat it slowly and then we're going to get a little faster. So one time slowly. Uh and I'm going to say shoulda. Okay? just because it's a it's a little more reduced.

I should have seen this coming from a mile away. Okay, now we'll say it uh maybe just at a natural speed. I want you to repeat after me. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. Okay, now I want to challenge you and see if you can just run right through the sentence. Um, ready? I should have seen this coming from a mile away. All right, again, you can let me know. Just write the word speaking. Excellent, Roman. Perfect. I want you guys participating in this lesson. After all, this is interactive English. And I saw an answer in there. Someone says, Kareem, yes, this is a picture of Alcatraz in San Francisco. This is um Alcatraz, the the famous well-known prison. It's now a tourist attraction.

It's not really being used right now, but that's a that's a good eye. Excellent. Um the the next sentence, and once again, you can tell me what what is this landmark? The I've done this lesson these lessons before, and I've I've used more famous landmarks. I think these are a little trickier, but if you've been to these places, maybe I'm sure you're familiar with it. So, the next um qu this is a question. What do you think we ought to do now? Again, I'm I'm not going to say it like that. I'm going to say it I'm going to ask this question. What do you think we ought to do now? What do you think we ought to do now? So, what's happening?

What do you So, the one thing there are two things that I want to point out. Let let's let's skip over the co-articulation for right now. I want to talk about some of these reductions. So the reduction and I'm going to skip to the end there with ought to. So this is another modal. It's like saying should. It's it's not as commonly used. Most of the time somebody would just say should. What do you think we should do now? But I want to mix it up a little bit. You could use ought to as well. And we're going to reduce that to ought to. Now do you. There are phrases that we can reduce.

Now, a few more things I want to point out. Let's go back to that co-articulation with what do so we have, you know, the T and the D. Your tongue is pretty much in the same position and you're going to have that stop T and then release into the D, the D sound in D. But when you have that T and the D, it almost is like the the T just goes away and it elides. You're not really going to hear it. So because of that, it's almost gonna sound like what are you? What are you? If I'm saying it quickly, what do you what do you think we ought to do? Now, I want to mention um the flap T. And this is a distinct part of the American accent. I told you I'm from the United States. When you have the t between those two vowel sounds, often it's going to get pronounced as a flap t. It's going to sound like a soft d. So ought to I'm going to reduce it. It's going to sound like ot. Otter. Now, even though I'm spelling it with o u tta, again, just so you you know, I'm pronouncing it as a flap t. So, here is what the what it what's what what I'm saying basically what it's going to sound like. What do you what do you think we ought to do now? Let's say the question. I'm going to say it slowly. Repeat after me and then we're going to speed it up. What do you think we ought to do now? Okay, let's say it again at a normal speed. What do you think we ought to do now?

And then if somebody were really just to run through the question and you could try and and say it quickly, what do you think we ought to do now? Hopefully as you as you listen to me say this question, you kind of hear that what do you what do you what do you what do you think we ought to do now? So just keep that in mind. reductions. You could have individual words that get reduced when they're unstressed and that vowel sound is going to change slightly. What a What do you think we ought to do now? And then we have um Oh, I forgot to tell you this is a picture of Grand Central Station. I didn't see any uh guesses in there. So, this is Grand Central Station, very uh famous train station in New York City. Okay. So, here's the last one right here and then we're going to practice the dialogue and we're going to say it together again. I want you to speak. So, the last sentence and you can tell me where you think this is right here. We're going to have to go back to square one. That's me pronouncing the individual words. But when you're having just a natural conversation, speaking casually, you're going to pronounce the more as like phrases instead of just the individual words. So I would say we're going to have to go back to square one. We're going to have we're going to have to go back to square one. And I put that expression that idiom down below to go back uh to square one. It basically means to start over from the beginning because whatever you were doing before, it didn't work. You failed and you have to go back to the beginning. It really means the same as to go back to the drawing board. Either idiom. Um, you could you could use either one. Um, I realize right there there is a spelling mistake, so I apologize. Square. Squar

E. I always find these typos when it's too late. That's okay. We're I'm human. We all make mistakes. Okay, so let's uh see what's going on with this one. And then I spell square correctly here. So we're going to I've already mentioned this is probably the most common reduction. Gonna have to I can reduce that to have to. It's a little trickier when you have one right after the other. Gonna have to gonna have to go back to square one. I just mentioned that when words are unstressed, they may get reduced. So to actually has two different pronunciations. When stressed to when unstressed, it's going to sound more like to to square one. To square one. Hopefully you can hear that schwa sound. So here is what it looks like.

Let's practice saying it. I'll say it slowly. Repeat after me. And then we're going to speed it up. We're gonna have to go back to square one. Okay, let's say it a little faster. We're gonna have to go back to square one. And then if I were saying this quickly and maybe there's a sense of urgency and I tell you, oh yeah, we're going to have to go back to square one. All right. So, I saw somebody mention Robbie. Excellent. This is uh in case you're wondering, this is a picture of Pearl Harbor, which is in Honolulu, Hawaii. This is uh the Pearl Harbor National Museum. You can see the the sunken ship down below. I believe that is the USS Arizona. Um you can check me on that uh because I'm not positive. But uh let's go go back and look at all of it. So, we just went through each of these sentences, and now I want you to practice this dialogue with me to to begin with, let's just do a listen and repeat of each one. And I don't expect you to memorize every little thing that we went through. I just want you to listen and try to say it in the exact same way. So, that a right there, just repeat after me. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? And B, I should have seen this coming from a mile away. And then A, what do you think we ought to do now? And then finally, B, the response, we're going to have to go back to square one.

Okay, let's uh let's practice this together. I am going to start out. I'm going to read A. I'm gonna say A and I want you to say B and and then we're gonna switch. Are you ready? Did you know we're not going to finish on time? What do you think we ought to do now? Excellent. Okay. I trust that you were you were speaking. I'm going to ask you about that in just a moment. Let's switch. I want you to say A and I'm going to say B. So, you can begin right now. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. Well, we're going to have to go back to square one. Okay, well done. So, if you were participating and actually speaking, let me know. Write that in the chat in the comments right now. It just tells me that that you were participating in the lesson. I can actually just go ahead and take this as

as a little bit of a quiz and have you tell me a poll. Uh let me put this down right here. Again, this is all about trying to help you not just improve your speaking skills so you have that more natural way of speaking, but if anything, again, some of this may sound a little more natural for you than others. It may you may feel a little more comfortable using reductions like gonna than trying to link some of these phrases together. And that's okay. You should never feel like you have to speak in a certain way, but this definitely will help with your listening comprehension. Well, how let me ask you this. I'm going to pull you this way. I know you guys are excellent. Li Helen, perfect. Ida um how difficult um was it to say these sentences using connected uh speech? All right, that's actually question I'd be more curious to know. It was a piece of cake. All right, tell me it was easy. Um not bad. And then the last one, I need a lot more practice, which in that case, that's perfectly fine. So, you can let me know in the chat right there. I just put that poll in there because I get different response responses. Some people are more comfortable with these speaking activities. Others find it um a little more challenging and maybe they don't feel as comfortable. And what I would tell you if you know you don't feel comfortable, don't feel like you need to force yourself to do anything. It's always good to practice even if this is not something you use. If you feel like, okay, I want to pronounce the individual words, that's perfectly okay.

But in just understanding this, like I've mentioned several times already, this will absolutely help you with your listening comprehension because that's the way that you would hear people say this in a movie or TV show. and they would say this dialogue, "Did you know we're not going to finish on time? I should have seen this coming from a mile away. What do you think we ought to do now? We're going to have to go back to square one." Right? And they just may move right through these sentences rapidly. that people are are feeling or going through. So, for the most part, it's a little bit of a mix. Uh, I'm glad that some of you, many of you found this to be a piece of cake and that it was easy.

And that tells me again you're developing a more natural way of speaking. And once again, if you would like to practice and improve your speaking skills, this is this is stuff we do in the course. Check out that link down below in the description. We always warm up with something related to pronunciation, connected speech. Most of the time we we talk about connected speech and we'll look at some sentences, analyze them, and just have you try to practice them over and over and and just try to say it in that exact same way. So, I want to thank all of you for joining me right now and participating in the lesson. I saw many people write that they were speaking and saying these sentences with me. I love seeing that because the more you the more you do this, the more comfortable you're going to feel and you're going to be able to speak easily and naturally the next time you're having a conversation. So, I hope that you have a wonderful day. Thank you. Um to see a piece of cake now. All right. Thank you for participating, Lolly. Uh I think you're doing great. It's always good to to to get this practice. Thanks to Kaio for being here. I look forward uh I look forward to seeing you in the upcoming lesson. Um and again, I'm going to do more lessons like this in the future because I think this is useful just to get have that understanding of why people sound the way they do even when these are basically some now that you see them. I think they're from some simple and straightforward sentences and questions. Hope you have a wonderful day and a happy Easter as well. Thank you, Angela.

and I will see you next time.

LESSON 132 OF 749

AMERICAN FAST SPEECH (Improve your speaking fluency & listening comprehension)

If you are someone who thinks, you know, in a class like an English class, I can easily understand what the teacher is saying or maybe you easily understand what I'm saying. But when it comes to English in movies and TV shows or just out on the street, it's really difficult to comprehend what people are saying. That is what this lesson is all about. We're talking about fast speech and specifically I'm going to talk about American English because I am from the United States. And as we go through the lesson, of course, I want you to practice with me. And if you enjoy practicing your speaking skills, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way, I can become your teacher. My name is Wes for those of you who don't know me. And if you uh yeah, I J just appreciate you subscribe uh turn on notifications and uh as we go through the lesson mostly I'm going to be talking about connected speech and this is not something that I would say that you have to do. Everybody has different speaking goals but I do think just to reiterate this is going to help with your listening comprehension. And the way that I want to practice is with this mini dialogue right here. And of course, as we go through this, I am going to ask you if you've been practicing. So you can tell me in the chat, just write the word speaking. So I know you've been participating. It's great to see a lot of familiar faces. Lai, Tayo, Vicki, Gustav, Julia, Sleepwalker. Perfect. I'm glad so many of you were able to make it today. And maybe I'll try to again give some shoutouts as we go through the lesson. But here's the dialogue. And right now, I'm just going we're going to take one of these at a time as we go through this. But right now, I just want you to listen to the way that I say this dialogue right here. So, I would say, "He's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. Don't you want to wait until he's done? I'm going to try to stay out of his way." So, think about the context. Let's say again, somebody is cooking in the kitchen. The other person wants to go in there and get something to eat, but maybe they're worried that they're going to bother the person who's cooking. But let's let's take one sentence at a time and look at what's going on. And we're really going to do a deep dive into this. Here is the first sentence. And as we go through this, again, I told you that I'm from the US, so this is more American English. I have these pictures of different landmarks in the United States. And bonus points, if you know where this is or what this is, write it in the chat, write it in the comments. Just another little short quiz when it comes to American landmarks. And then I'll come back and tell you. So the first part, he the first sentence, he's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm.

So let's look at the what's going on. Just that first line, he's been in linking can occur. we can link those two words together. And this is when we can we link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word. So, Benin, you can hear me link that final N sound, that N sound with the preposition. It's almost like I'm moving that over to the next word. Been in. Been in. Been in. He's been in the kitchen. And then the next part cooking up a storm. So cooking a lot of times with uh these verbs in the continuous tense or even some of these jirens gdropping may occur. And I know g-dropping may sound like a cool new dance but it's really we're just well doing what it says. We're dropping that final G. So instead of cooking and you hear that ing sound often with American English that we drop that G and it's cooking. Cooking. So, can you hear the difference? Cooking. Cooking. I want you to say those both with me right now. Again, start practicing. Cooking. Cooking. And often when that G is dropped, it just makes this easier to say because linking can occur. And we can link that final N sound with up. Cooking up. So, it's easier to link the N sound instead of the ing. Cooking up. And of course, we can link the final p- sound in up with that schwah sound in the article.

Uh, cooking up aa. Cooking up. Say it with me. Cooking up a cooking upa. And this is this is the difference between pronouncing the individual words or saying them together as a phrase. So, here we have this first sentence. And I've kind of gone through and put the phonetic spelling. So hopefully you can see the pronunciation and it makes uh it makes it hopefully makes it a little easier to follow. He's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm. All right, I want you to say that after me. Think of it like shadowing. Try to say it in the exact same way. And I think one of the more difficult things to do when it comes to shadowing would be pacing. See if you can keep the same speed. And it's not like I'm trying to say it really fast, but I just say, "Yeah, he's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm."

Thank you for participating. Nice, Alejandra. Um, uh, Tanvir. Perfect. Now, to go back to this slide, if you were trying it, just out of curiosity, if you were wondering, this right here is in Chicago. This is a landmark. It's called the bean because it's shaped like a bean. I have no idea when and why they did this, but if you're in Chicago, this is some place that you may go check out the bean. It's just this reflective bean. So, that's what this is in case you're wondering. So, we just did this first sentence. He's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm. Let's look at the next few phrases. And again, we're going to practice all of these. But if you again are someone who wants to practice and improve your speaking skills, you can check out my speaking course. It is a course for intermediate to advanced speakers and it's just all about helping you speak confidently, speak clearly, speak naturally. Check out the link down below in the description if you'd like to enroll or learn more. And you can use the code speak 20 to get $20 off the course fee. So I'll I may come back to this and mention it at the very end. But let's look at the next part. And once again, if you can just looking at the picture, where do you think this where where is this? What what place is this a picture of? You can write it in the chat and I'll come back and let you know. A little bit of a geography quiz in the United States. So, the next part, if I were to pronounce the individual words, I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. There's nothing wrong with saying it like that. Again, the most important thing is people understand you. But if I were to say this, I would just say, I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. So, let's look at what's going on with this sentence.

I don't want to want to. This is a common reduction and you're going to reduce want to to just wanna. This is when we remove or change sounds. There are many different reductions, very common in spoken English. And I'd say if there's any part of connected speech that is useful to learn and practice to help you sound more natural, it would be reductions. I don't want to I don't want to bother him. Now, I forgot I should have highlighted bother as well because it's a part of this, but let's let's talk about elision first. So, elision is the omission of sounds or syllables. And there are several times when this may occur. And one of them would be like the H. And what's going on? What I would like to say is that you could think about it as like that H gets removed. I would say think about it like we're turning down the volume on that H and you're not really going to hear him and really hear that H. That H elides.

And then once that goes away or we turn down the volume, linking can occur. And this is this is common with words that begin with H like he, him, her, his. When these words come in the middle of a sentence or clause, especially when they follow a verb, I don't want to bother him. So, you don't really hear that h sound. It's not really uh too pronounced. And then we can link that R in bother over. Bother him. Bother him. And I can really move right through it. Bother him. So just that first part of the sentence, that first clause. I don't want to bother him. I want you to say that. Say that after me. I don't want to bother him.

Yeah. I don't want to bother him. And then the next part. But I really want a wanna. So, one thing I want to point out is more elision. Another time this may occur is with the T or D. And for the T, when it follows an N sound, it may elide and you don't really hear that. So, think about this. If I say interactive English, that T in interactive, I don't say interactive, it elides interactive interactive English. This is something that is more specific to the American accent. And there are other words that you have that you're you're not going to hear that T like the word I don't say center. I would say center. Somebody is the center of attention and you don't really hear it. Or right now I'm using the internet.

I'm not going to say internet. Internet. That tides. But again, keep in mind specific to the American accent. So I don't really or but I really wanna when that tides we can then link that n sound over with the schwa sound that uh article uh w to bite to eat. The one thing I want to say about to is again this is another reduction. I I know this preposition to when it's stressed, when it's unstressed and it gets reduced, it may sound a little more like t with thewah. It's a softer sound because this is a word that you don't want to emphasize. You don't want to highlight. It's a function word that's just showing the relationship between, in this case, bite and eat. A bite to eat. A bite to eat.

Can you hear that soft t? A bite to eat. I really want a bite to eat. Just say that that clause with me, but I really want a bite to eat. Okay, again, I trust that you're practicing. Say this out loud. It's going to help you. This is what it's all this is what interactive English is all about. So, one thing I want you to keep in mind is that the reduction want to wanna, it sounds the same as this. I really wanna. So, wanna and wanna, even though they're two different one's the reduction, I wanna do something, you're going to follow it with a verb. I want to go. I want to play. I want to dance.

Or if you really want a something, I want a bike. I want a new phone. Okay, just keep in mind that it's going to sound the same, but there's a difference between want to and want a. So, let's practice this right here. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. So, can you say that after me? I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. All right, good. Let's say one more time again. Try and see if you can keep that same speed. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. Okay, good. If you're practicing, write that in the comments. Write speaking.

Okay, so I know you're participating in the lesson. Now, once again, just to go back, if you're wondering where this is, I saw some great answer. Yes, uh Vicky Gustav, um Nicholas, this is Seattle, the city of Seattle up in the northwest. That is the Space Needle. And I don't know, maybe some of you have been to Seattle and you have seen this before, but it's a it's a well-known city in the Northwest. So, we talked about that sentence right there. Let's look at the next one. So, I have two more that I want to go through and then we're going to practice the dialogue. So, if I were to say the individual words, don't you want to wait until he's done? Okay. And if I want to say it together as like connected speech, connecting these phrases, don't you want to wait until he's done? Don't you want to wait until he's done? Okay. So, the first thing that I want to point out that's going on is assimilation. This is when two sounds they blend together to create a new sound. In this case, the final T in don't and the beginning Y, that Y sound in U, they blend together and you get this ch. Don't you? Don't you. It's not something that you have to force as you say one word right from the next. It's going to occur naturally. Don't you? And then reduce want to to wanna. Don't you wanna? Don't you wanna? Don't you wanna? And then the next part of the sentence, wait until he's done. So wait. The one thing I want to point out is with the American accent. Again, this is specific to the US accent. That T is going to be a flap T. It's going to sound like a soft D. So it this occurs when it comes between two vowel sounds. So even though we're talking about two different words, it still comes between those two vowels. That vowel sound in wait and then the beginning vowel sound in until. So just listen. Wait until wait until. Again, that's more the American accent. You can hear me say that flap t which I can then link to that vowel sound in until. Wait until wait until. Wait until.

And then the next word he's again you can see all this elision going on. Uh if we mute that H. We can link the final consonant sound and until that L sound with that vowel wait until wait until. So can you hear that? I don't want to wait until then done. Again this is a yes no question. So you can hear that rising intonation. Actually I should go this way. Rising intonation at the end. I don't want to wait until he's done or or asking a question. Sorry. Don't you want to wait until he's done? You hear that rising intonation at the end? Don't you want to wait until he's done? So, here is the phonetic spelling right here. So, I've tried to I tried to break down the syllables. Wait until Wait until he's Don't you want to wait until he's done?

Say it after me. Don't you want to wait until he's done? All right, one more time. Trying to hit that rising intonation at the end. Don't you want to wait until he's done? All right. Again, if you're you're speaking, let me know in the comments. I already see like some people participating. That's what I want to see. Teao, uh, Sichu, Vicki, Gustav, Cinderella. Excellent. Perfect. Don't you want to wait until he's done now to go back again? and your little geography quiz, which I'm giving you. I thought I heard somebody say it's not it's not Pikes Peak in Colorado. This is actually in Utah. So, this is Grand Arches National Park. If you travel to the US and you like the outdoors, you love national parks. It's in the summer, definitely hit up Utah. There are so many cool uh national parks. You have Grand Arches National Park. Uh Zion is another one. Bryce Canyon. Uh, and actually, no, wait, I'm sorry. I think this is Bryce Canyon National Park. It's not Grand Arches. It's Bryce Canyon, but there are a lot of great national parks in Utah. That's basically what I want you to know. Okay, let's look at the the next sentence. So, we we we've gone through this one. We did a deep dive. Hopefully, it all makes sense as far as what's going on, what what you hear, and what's happening with this. So, the last one, and again, if you I'll be very impressed if you know where this is right now. So, I'm going to try to stay out of his way.

I'm not really going to say it like that. I'll say it much faster and I'd say, I'm going to try to stay out of his way. I'm going to try to stay out of his way. And I guess one thing hopefully, again, this is all about improving your comprehension. That's what's most important. If if you didn't see this and you just heard me say, "I'm going to try to stay out of his way or would you be able to understand all of those like again pick out those individual words?" If so, then I think that's great. I'm going to try to stay out of his way. But let's talk about what's going on and then I'll come back and tell you well where this where this beach is right here.

Of course going to we can reduce to gonna. I'm going to. If we want to reduce it even further, and this is something that I do a lot in casual conversation when we're talking about I'm going to, we can reduce it to I'm goingonna. So, I'm going to or I'm going to. And again, you'll hear me say I'm going to. That's what I'll practice. You can give it a try. I know when I've taught this in the SpeakUp course and we practice some of these uh some of these reductions and this connected speech, you uh some people are more comfortable than others. But if you wanted to reduce it further, I'm going to I'm going to try to it's unstressed.

I'm going to try to stay out of his way. I'm going to try to stay out of his way. Let's I want you to say it after me and let's do it slowly one time. I'm going to try to stay out of his way. And then if we speed it up a little bit. I'm going to try to stay out of his way. Okay, good. All right. Again, just I want we're practicing one at a time because then I want to go through and actually say this dialogue. So, before we practice the dialogue, let's go back to this picture right here. And I saw a correct answer. Sarasota. Yes. This is actually where I chose this because this is where I am right now. We're visiting family. I'm in Sarasota. This is one of the beaches there out at Siesta Key. Uh, and it's very, again, Florida, I think, along the Gulf has really nice beaches. The white sand, the the ocean is very calm and warm, so the waves aren't big. If you have a family, um, then this is a good spot, uh, with kids because the waves, it's not too rough. Uh, but this is a picture Sarasota, Florida. All right, so let's uh let's look at the dialogue. So, we kind of went through and I know I've done this quickly and asked you to practice, but again, this is just the more you do this, the more you might get you'll get used to it using these reductions, linking these phrases, but more importantly, it's good for your listening comprehension because when you're watching a movie or TV show, this is what's going on. People are using reductions. They're linking words and phrases together. They're blending sounds with assimilation. They're removing sounds uh with elision.

So, I'll read it one more time. I'll say it one more time and then we're going to practice together. Okay? So, just listen the first off. I'll say, "He's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. Don't you want to wait until he's done? I'm going to try to stay out of his way." Okay. So, now you heard me say it one time. Let's do this together. I am going to say A and I want you to say B. We're going to we're going to work on this together. Say it out loud. Are you ready? Here we go. He's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm.

Don't you want to wait until he's done? Okay. Good. Good. Now, let's switch. I want you to say A and then I'm gonna say B. We're just going to read this together. All right. So, I want you to begin. You can begin right now. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. I'm going to try to stay out of his way. All right. So, once again, if you participated in the lesson, I want to know. And I'm actually going to give you a poll. All right. Did you practice your speaking skills? All right. I want you to be honest. It's just a It's just a yes, no. And I just got to get a feel for what everybody's doing. I told you this is interactive English. It's all about trying to help you practice and improve your skills. That's actually what I wanted to say earlier. I had a little bit of a uh I froze up at the beginning after I introduced myself. And usually that's kind of the the routine that I go through. Uh this is interactive English. It's all about helping you practice and improve your skills.

This is not just helping you practice your speaking skills, but I told you listening comprehension because everybody has different goals when it comes to speaking. And I never would say, oh, you have to speak a certain way. You have to speak with a certain accent. I'm from the US. So, I kind of want to help you better understand the American accent and understand why people sound the way they do. Like when you say these different sentences right here, he's been in the kitchen cooking up a storm. I don't want to bother him, but I really want a bite to eat. Don't you want to wait until he's done? I'm going to try to stay out of his way. And you can hear this and say, "Okay, now I know what's happening." People are reducing certain phrases. They're linking their these phrase words together. They're reducing certain sounds or words.

it makes uh a bit more sense. And just looking at the poll, all right, we're about yeah 20 uh 20 80%. Yes, that's good. That is a passing grade right there. And even if you weren't speaking out loud, I imagine you're just taking it all in. Still, I think this is going to be helpful when it comes to your listening comprehension. So, if you enjoy these lessons like this and enjoy practicing, let me know. You can hit that like button. That tells me in the future I should do more lessons just like this. And just to reiterate again, if you want to practice and improve your speaking skills, you can check out the link down below in the description. I'll go ahead and throw it in the comments if you'd like to learn more about the course or see when it's available. The course uh enrollment is now open. So, wait a second. I lost my page here. And I'll just throw it in the chat really quickly. But I do want to thank you guys for participating and joining me today. I think I will well I will be back next week with another lesson and you can all right here check out my speaking course and I'll put the link boom right there in case you're interested. Give some quick shoutouts. Thank you for being here. Vicki Gustav uh participating Lai Miriam Halandra Teao good to see you sleepwalker Ava so sorry if I'm missing some names right here uh Cinderella dude excellent I love it thank you guys uh so much for joining me for today's lesson on fast American speech and like I said I will be Back.

AMERICAN IDIOMS Important phrases you need to know

hello and welcome to today's lesson so I have a fun lesson to test your knowledge of some informal vocabulary and I say the word informal because we are going to be learning some American internet American idioms all right I'm having a tough time speaking today uh I am from the United States so these are some idioms that I think you could use or you may hear in more casual conversation and I I've done this in the form of a quiz lesson so I want you to participate write your answers in the chat or in the comments even if you're watching this later after all this is interactive English I want you to be a part of the lesson and if you would like to get the lesson notes from today's lesson check out the link down in the description you can join our community if you are already a part of our email Community then I've I've gone ahead and I've sent them to you you will find them in your inbox so without further Ado here is the first idiom that I want to teach you or well test your knowledge so to start out with we're going to start easy and then I'm going to try to make it a little more difficult so right now I'm giving you a couple of words in the idiom as well as the meaning so the meaning of this idiom is to do or say something that helps you get rid of strong feelings and energy and what are you going to do so I'll go ahead and tell you that there are four words in this idiom and and that's what it means right there and you could use the picture as a little bit of a hint but let me know if you know what idiom I'm talking about write it in the chat write it uh in the comments I want to hear from you and I'll try to give some shout outs as we go through this if I see some correct answers so any guesses about what this idiom is to um off some um you're doing something that helps you get rid of some strong feelings or energy and typically I would say they're probably it's probably negative energy or you're upset about something and then you're gonna do some activity in order to off some um so all right Reagan excellent nailed it we're talking about the idiom to blow off some steam so I've given you an example sentence down there like looking at this picture I go for a long run if I want to blow off some steam so perhaps you had a tough day at work and you're just frustrated and you have a lot of I don't know pent up emotion you need to get rid of that energy and you do something to blow off some steam and often I think it would refer to a physical activity you're going to go for a run you'll go for it go to the gym and you just need to blow off some steam so hopefully again my goal with all of these lessons is that you learn something new and if that idiom is new for you then that's perfect I'm happy as long as if you learn one thing today then then I think that's a success so the next one again I'm giving you a couple of words that are a part of this idiom and what do you think the the meaning it's referring to someone or something is too good or expensive for someone to have often I think that this is referring to a person so I know it says someone or something but generally someone is too good for someone else you would use this idiom and say wow this person is um out your um I feel like the second word you probably know you can guess that that's a preposition and I'm kind of giving you part of it so what would that final word be out of you oh I just said it out of your what do you think excellent Vidya Manuel you got it and think about when you when I show you the idiom I'll tell you it's right out of your league try to think about a TV show or movie perhaps you've seen and you've you've maybe heard this idiom before and say someone's out of your league so that example sentence down there oh she's definitely out of your league often I think if you hear this idiom I'll go ahead and tell you you probably would hear it in the context of talking about some uh some woman who they you know some maybe some guy is interested in this woman and the the guy's friends are like look she is too good for you she's too attractive she's too smart she's too successful for you she's out of your league so you would probably more likely hear it in that context it could go the other way around in saying some guy is out of a woman's League either way but generally speaking I think you would hear it like some some guy some friends are telling this guy look she's out of your league all right don't even try to date this person she's too successful she's too attractive to date you uh and you'd say someone's out of your league the next one all right I think you guys again you did well on that one excellent uh Ali Yankee Park perfect uh thank you guys participate love it Mina Sid again I'll try to get those shout outs this one down I'm only giving you one word now there are actually four words in this idiom so think about the meaning and consider the picture as well we're talking about a situation it's full of suspense and we're referring to the last minute of something or at the very end and generally you would be talking about some activity perhaps a sport a competition and you could say it's coming down and there are four words and once I know this can be a little tricky I think sometimes I'll probably I'll show you the idiom and then you think oh yes I have heard that it makes sense now so I'm trying to give you a little bit of the context to to better understand it again competition this situation it's at the last minute very suspenseful so it's perhaps a close competition to give you a a more specific example think about the final World Cup match between France and Argentina full of suspense it came down to the very end and you could say it's coming down um the answer in case you have not heard this one down to the wire so if something is coming down to the wire it's referring to the end of this activity and generally I would say often you might hear this being used in the context of like some competition a match because of it's very close then well that's full of suspense you're like well who's going to win we don't know it's coming down to the wire and that's the example that I gave you this is it the game is coming down to the wire and you would often use it with that verb to come to come down to the wire all right excellent uh Ricardo

Julia uh sanjana me uh down and we'll close uh Bahar perfect down down to the wire the next one what do you think I almost skipped ahead and and showed you the answer um again just giving you one word at the very end and you would um this one has three words up and you're asking for some something and I think often you might be asking for money that's why I included this picture someone handing another person some money perhaps they were asking for this money and they were um up they were up for money in this case so let me know if you have any guesses like I said this is a little bit more challenging I'm only giving you that that tiny word at the end up but if you are up you are asking someone for something this is an informal way of asking and I would say no not could you help me up

we're talking about yes NC good job to hit someone up and again you could use this uh you could talk about you're going to hit your friend up for some cash you're trying to borrow money like I said I think often you may hear people using it in that context they need some money they need to borrow it and you're gonna hit someone up for some cash like that a sentence he's always hitting me up for cash but you could hit someone up you could hit him up you could hit her up you can hit them up and you're just asking for something to hit someone up it is a very informal phrase then we have this one what do you think uh the picture again you I'm giving you the word arm and you can see that arm in the picture so it's probably not uh giving you too much of a hint but hopefully the meaning will help you out in thinking about this idiom in which you're trying to persuade someone to do something they do not want to do what do you think what's that idiom we're talking about to um arm again this this idiom has three different words it's going to end with the arm and you're really you're kind of being a little aggressive trying to persuade this person to do something that they're really reluctant to do it's like I'm not sure about this I don't know if I want to do it and then the other person is trying to um [Music] their arm and really trying to get them to do this so if you know the answer write it in the chat or write it in the comments I see one correct answer already in there excellent uh uh Mage you you got it we're talking about the idiom to twist someone's arm again you could say you're twisting his arm or twisting her arm in which case you are persuading someone rather aggressively to do something that they are reluctant to do and I used it down here like again more in the negative like hey there's no need to twist my arm I'll do it like in this situation the person saying yes I'll do it you don't have to persuade me you don't have to try to twist my arm all right there's no need to twist my arm so now I want to switch things up a little bit and what I want to do is I'm going to just give you a picture and I want you to look at the picture and see if you can guess the idiom that I'm talking about and I will give you a hint after showing you the picture once again if you would like to get the lesson notes check out the link down in the description I'll go ahead and throw it here in the chat if you're interested in getting these lesson notes and joining our email community and of course if you if you enjoy learning new idioms let me know hit that like button that gives me an idea of okay people are interested in learning American idioms and maybe I'll do another follow-up lesson in the future teaching some more of these idioms again this is part of building your informal vocabulary so this I think is a common idiom this is one that I use I don't want to say all the time but when I don't want to give you too much of a hint so look at the picture you can see this person is on the couch uh you have that cloud hanging over them and I think you will probably get this because this is a really common idiom I just told you that I use this all the time when I'm feeling this way I generally don't say that I'm sick I would say yeah I'm feeling a little under the weather you guys rock that one so that was I I was gonna give you the idiom and I just told you the meaning it means that you're feeling a little sick slightly unwell so if you're really ill you wouldn't really use this idiom so generally you would use it when you have a cold you're coughing you're sneezing you feel a little sick and you'd say you're you're feeling a little under the weather excellent job uh Wolfgang yong-hee Valentina uh Julia nice uh Dario great job so that one I feel like maybe is a little easier this one's going to be a little more difficult because I don't think this idiom is as common as the last one to say that you're feeling under the weather however what I would say is look at the picture and the idiom is really exactly what this picture is showing so what you see again I don't want to give away all of these words but looking at the picture what phrase would you use to describe this picture talking about this person or someone what do you think it's not as commonly used but again it's still one that you may come across if you're watching a TV show or movie so I'll give you a hint it's not a cucumber it's a pickle that is a it's a jar of pickles and where where is this person what would you say where is this person so you would say someone is um now I know I see many of you using like cool as a cucumber that is another idiom to say that you're you're calm you're relaxed you're you're

Carefree but that that's not the idiom I'm talking about this is a pickle so what would you say someone is um the idiom I'll go ahead and tell you we're talking about the idiom uh to be in a pickle excellent Dario Reagan now what does it mean if someone says I'm going to quiz you again if somebody says wow I'm I'm in a bit of a pickle what does that mean and that's really I think how you might hear it you're talking about some situation and saying yeah right now I'm really in a bit of a pickle or you could use it to describe someone else I don't know what she's gonna do she's she's in a pickle so if someone is in a pickle in case this idiom is new it means that they're really in a difficult situation and you're not sure how to handle this situation and you'd say wow right now I'm in in a pickle and yeah you could say Bahar like you said to be stuck kind of it's it's a problem uh that you're experiencing so the example sentence can you help me I'm in a pretty pickle and I added the word pretty sometimes you may hear people use the word pretty with this idiom that's that's a pretty pickle uh and referring to this difficult situation but in general you could say just someone's someone's in a pickle now let me give you a little more context with this picture and think about well where is this picture and what what's going what's going on so you can see that this is a a bowling alley now I know that this specifically is a bowling lane but the word Lane is not in this idiom I've actually already used the word that was in this idiom I just want you in general to think about where is this picture at and then look at that arrow and what could you say I think this one is a little more difficult to try to think of the idiom even though it's one that you might already be familiar with and and you know so like I said think about where this picture is at and then think about that Arrow so the picture is at well the place would be a bowling alley so specifically if this is a lane at the bowling alley but I said not just in general where's that it's at the bowling alley and that arrow is pointing in which direction it's pointing up so the idiom that I was trying to elicit from you was to say up someone's alley so if you say that something is up your alley do you have any guess what that means that hey I really hope that this lesson is right up your alley and often I think you may hear people use it with that word right something is right up your alley if you don't know or you haven't heard of this idiom before I think it's a good one to describe this specific situation you're talking about something that is you're saying that it is exactly the type of thing that this person knows or likes to do I just mentioned that oh this lesson I really think this is right up your alley if you enjoy building your vocabulary learning new idioms this lesson is right up your alley it is the exact kind of lesson that you like that you enjoy or just to give you another context with that sentence down there the game we're gonna play is right up your alley so maybe somebody does not know what game they're getting ready to play and say oh don't worry this game it's right up your alley I'm sure that you're going to like it you're going to enjoy it it's the the exact thing that you love to do the next one again I started with that easy one talking about a little under the weather very specific this one is a little more challenging uh but there's there's two pictures and I was trying to give you a little bit of a hint with the inside and outside so think about let for forget that person who's thinking for just a moment think about that other picture on the other side it is a circle but it's also what and you're inside that and then the other person who's clearly outside seems a little confused and they're not sure they're not really sure what's going on so I know the word circle is not part of this I'll I'll go ahead and give you a little bit of a hint what I was going for was a loop so a loop is like a circle and now that you know we're talking about a loop and you can inside or outside what would you say and this I think is a I think this is a kind of a common idiom that somebody might use excellent Rose you you nailed it we're talking about out of the loop so what does it mean I'm telling you the idiom now what's your guess what do you think it means if I say look I'm I'm out of the loop don't ask me I'm out of the loop if someone is out of the loop what do you think and then now you could use the picture some people are trying to think outside the box that is another expression you'd say to think outside the box but like I said in this case we're I use that Circle trying to say a loop uh you're describe someone who is unaware and does not know what's happening and they would say that they're out of the loop then uh we have this one and I think this one is very specific and you actually you could use this picture to just say well what is happening in this picture and that is the idiom so of course you can see in the picture we're talking about the pool what do you think what's going on in this picture and I think that will help you guess the idiom even though I would say that it's one that maybe is not as common and maybe you haven't heard of it before or maybe you have and you're not quite sure what the meaning is what do you think is going on in this picture you see the pool you see they're talking about pool you see very clearly that eight ball all right what what idiom and again

there's not there's not I don't know that maybe this may be the only idiom in which they're talking about eight ball so uh yes Jesse great job the idiom is behind the eight ball now again to make it a little more difficult what does it mean if I say look right now I'm I'm behind the eight ball is it a good thing or is it a bad thing just the way that I said it hopefully if I say wow I'm I'm really behind the eight ball you can you can infer that this is not a good situation to be behind the eight ball but if somebody is behind the eight ball all it means is that you're they're in a difficult situation or in a worse situation than other people so to give you that example we didn't start the project immediately that's a problem and now we're behind the eight ball

so if you're behind the eight ball you're just saying that you are in a difficult situation and you got to try to figure your way out of it and you're probably going to need to work harder or think outside the box in order to come up with a solution so that you are no longer behind that eight ball and yes this does have a negative uh connotation it's not a good thing to be behind the eight ball so I want to try to make this even a little more challenging because I know that you love a challenge and right now I am going to just give you the meaning and I want you to tell me what idiom is this referring to I'll the you could also use the picture as a little bit of a hint and I'll give you some letters too uh as we go through this but right now I just want to give you the meaning again

please write your answers in the chat or in the comments uh love love seeing all this the the participation in these lessons and I really hope that some of these idioms are new and that you're learning some new phrases today so this next one refers to a person who criticizes the actions or decisions of others after the fact and what that means after the fact is well something has already happened and someone is criticizing the decision that was made in the past and you're able to look at the situation and because it happened in the past you can oh this was the right decision Ro you should have done this and you have that ability of hindsight but you would say that somebody is doing what and I think maybe that picture was too much of a giveaway however let me give you some hints so I'm I'm giving you the first letter of each word this uh this idiom has three words in it and we're talking about what I see uh yes a couple of correct answers in there excellent so the idiom that I'm talking about and this is definitely an American idiom we're talking about Monday Morning Quarterback so if somebody's playing Monday Morning Quarterback you're you're in that situation you're criticizing a past decision as though like you would have known what to do and of course it's easy to play Monday Morning Quarterback and you you probably use it with that verb to play Monday Morning Quarterback like in this example sentence he likes to play Monday Morning Quarterback he likes to analyze the situation after it's happened and then be critical of others and you're playing Monday Morning Quarterback how about this next one what do you think and the picture I don't think is going to be well too much of a hint because it's part of the meaning but you're talking about taking a risk and doing something that it yeah it may turn out wrong so what do you think what idiom do you have any guesses any thoughts as to what this idiom might be and then I'll I'll give you I'll give you a hint because this one's a little more challenging it is four words you're taking a risk especially one that may turn out uh well to be a problem that is the first letter of each word so I told you there are four words in this idiom and that is the first letter of each word so what do you think what do you what are you doing in this case you're taking a risk it may turn out wrong hopefully not but you're really doing what and if you can think of that first word hopefully it'll allow you to to guess the other parts of the idiom and this is one that I think is fairly I think this is common I think people will you you would definitely hear this and the idiom that I'm talking about is to stick your neck out if you stick your neck out you are putting yourself at risk and it may not go in your favor things may turn out badly and the example sentence that I gave you I stuck my neck out for you at the meeting so there was this meeting you're trying to help someone and you stuck your neck out for them and you may often use this idiom and then follow it with that preposition you stick your neck out for someone so you're taking a risk you're trying to help someone else and you stick your neck out for them or some maybe maybe somebody's asking you for help or assistance and you don't want to take the risk and you could say look I'm not going to stick my neck out for you I'm not going to risk things and you're trying to confess something you feel guilty about it I saw a correct answer in there uh sorry I can't not sure about the pronunciation I don't even want to try but yes I see that correct answer good job uh yes Julia Dario we're talking about the idiom to get something off your chest and you could say like I need to get it off my chest I need to get this something but often people would use something when they're talking about this idiom um and you would say like in the sentence I have something I need to get off my chest I I really have something to get off my chest and I want to confess something that has been bothering me for a long time then there's this one it's another sport idiom and we're referring to an educated guest or estimation so what would you think and I really do think when you when you see that word estimation you can think about numbers you're giving an educated guess use that picture to try to try to give you some idea as to what idiom we're talking about and this idiom I'll go ahead and tell you I know you can't really see it uh using those blank spaces it's two words this idiom is a two-word idiom we're talking about a guess or an estimation and you would just ask somebody so if I'm asking you like hey can you you know give me an estimation I would say hey can you give me a what do you think all right we're talking about a close I see some words in there yes uh I see a correct answer Rose though there are two words that's the first letter of each word sometimes people would just use that first word which some of you just wrote Dario Mage yes excellent um young he we're talking about a ballpark figure and I've put the word figure in parentheses because somebody may just use the word ballpark like hey can you can you give me a ballpark can you give me a ballpark figure you may hear either one but if somebody is asking like hey can you give me a ballpark that's what they're asking for can you give me an estimation a guess and typically it would refer to a number and again that example that question you may hear can you just give me a ballpark figure so let's look let's look at another one all right what do you think again use the picture to to help you uh guess this idiom we're talking about you're you're gonna stop what you're doing because you don't want to do it anymore and you think that you have done enough and you would I think likely use this idiom or hear people use this idiom in the context of work whether it's you're you're doing your job or you're just doing work at home you're working on some project but you're working hard and you're going to stop because you don't want to do it anymore or you think that you've done enough and there are four words in this idiom and I'll go ahead and give you the first letter of each word and actually that third word is just the article uh so what are you going to do if we're working really hard and I say okay it's time to stop I think we've done enough

let's um and again this is one that I think is pretty common I I would hope that you could see these hear these idioms and try to associate it with uh you know an experience that you've had with watching a TV show or movie or listening to a podcast these are idioms that will come up in conversation great job uh everyone we're talking about to call it a day well done Sid nyz Valentina uh Mina mazzitov so if you say let's call it a day or like in this the example sentence I gave you I think it's time to call it a day you're basically saying we're going to stop what we're doing we've done enough I don't think we need to continue we're going to call it a day and there is a reason why I chose to to present this as the last idiom because yes right now I'm gonna have to call it a day but uh there is a little review these are all the idioms that I just went over these American idioms of course some are more common than others I'm sure that you are familiar with some of them already and you've heard them perhaps you use them in conversation I think that's great just bear in mind these are more informal more commonly used in spoken English so if you would like to get these lesson notes again check out that link down in the description if you're already a part of our email Community check your inbox I have sent them to you but this is a good way to practice become I guess a little more comfortable with these idioms not only to help you improve your comprehension if you're yeah watching a TV show or movie but hopefully when you're having a conversation if you experience this and you would tell somebody look I'm I had a really rough day at work I really need to blow off some steam and you can actually use that idiom in context or one that I think is very common we all feel sick from time to time and instead of telling someone hey I feel a little sick you could say right now I'm feeling a little under the weather very very common idiom or again you're in that situation where you're going to take a risk you're going to help somebody out and you're gonna stick your neck out for them so hopefully I hope with all these lessons I just hope that you learned something new thank you guys so much for participating in today's lesson and joining me if you did enjoy the lesson and you did learn something new please hit that like button

AMERICAN SLANG WORDS QUIZ LESSON

Hey everyone, my name is Wes. This is Interactive English, which is all about helping you guys practice and improve your English skills. And today we're going to do another practice lesson. This is going to be a bit of a quiz on American slang. That's right. I have a bunch of different questions for you to test your comprehension of American slang. Now, slang is interesting because I'd say that as somebody who's a teacher, I would tell you that it's not absolutely necessary that you learn slang, American slang or British slang. But at the same time, I understand that many of you want to learn slang because you hear it quite often when you're talking or when you're listening to um maybe a podcast or a TV show or you're watching a movie. So, I understand why it is something you want to learn. It can be important for your comprehension.

So, we're going to go over these words and phrases today that I think are you don't have to go out and try to use them because they can be very specific, but it is good to have for your comprehension. And like I said, today it's all about practicing your skills and this is a great way to do so because you can practice them in real time. So, if you are in the chat, I'm gonna ask you questions. I want you to write your answer in the chat. And even if you're watching this later, I want you to write your answer in the comments and use it like it's a piece of paper and you are writing down your answers. All right.

I will give some shoutouts to those of you that are with me right now. But whoops, I'm getting ahead of myself. Sorry. Wait, you were not meant to see that just yet. I wanted to start out just with this simple um you know just talking about what is slang in case that this is something you are not familiar with. So I will read that in case you're having trouble seeing it. I was trying to find a font color that just popped out but it was a little difficult. So slang that this is its words and phrases that are very informal, very casual. They're much more common in spoken English instead of writing. So you will hear them more often than you're going to read uh these words or phrases and they are typically restricted or limited to a particular group or a particular group of people and this could be a particular group of people in a certain region because slang on the east coast of the United States is different from slang on the west coast of the United States or it could depend on the age group as well. So, younger people might use certain words or phrases that older people like me don't use or we may even be unaware of these words. And this is why I find it interesting because when it comes to slang, I've done some lessons before uh on slang and I will leave a link in the comments if you want to check out some of those lessons because all of the questions that I have for you are based on those lessons. And sometimes when I when I did those lessons, I would receive comments and people, especially Americans, they would be like, I don't use that word. Nobody uses it. And that's the thing about slang. Just because one person doesn't use the word, that does not mean that that people don't use it. Slang is very limited to again a certain region, a certain age group, a particular group of people. So that that is important to keep that in mind, especially when you're talking about, oh, I want to go out and use it because some people the people you're talking to, they may not be familiar with this slang. So keep that in mind. And now let's begin the first question that I have for you. Now this is a bit more common. All right. And I've given you this to try and put it in context and I'd say, "Dude, what are you doing? That's my food." So I put it in quotes because again, we're referring to spoken English. It's more common when it's spoken. So that's the way I kind of want you to think about this. Even though you're able to read it, think about it as though somebody's saying it. And if somebody's saying, "Dude, what are you doing? That's my food. What does dude refer to? Does it refer to a man? Does it refer to a woman? Or does it refer to either a man or a woman? So dude, it's talking about a person. I think many of you know that. You probably have heard this word and you are familiar with it. But what do you think it is referring to? Does it refer to a man, a woman, or either a man or a woman? And this could be a bit tricky. All right. Excellent. Yes. Uh, busorn ramesa uh Chris Albert, thank you for your answer. The answer is C. Either a man or a woman. Now, I will say this, it generally refers to a man. Most of the time that you you're when somebody says dude, they're talking about like maybe a group of guys or or a guy or a man. However, it can be used as a genderneutral uh noun. All right. It can be a girl could say this to another girl and say, "Dude, it does not only have to be for a man." The reason I put this in here is because many of you have asked me this question um from one of our other lessons, and you say, "Well, dude, can it be used to talk about either a man or a woman?" Yes, it can be used in that context, but generally speaking, most of the time it's used when talking about a guy. For example, in that sentence, if somebody says like, oh, you know, it's a dude, then they're talking about it's a guy, it's a man. In that context, if somebody says, oh, you know, it's a dude, they would be referring to, okay, it's a man. But when you're talking to somebody else and kind of instead of saying like, hey, you, you want to talk to that person and say, hey, dude, dude, what are you doing?

It could be a man or a woman. It just depends. All right. So, ju just a quick little that's a quick clarification on the word dude. Most of the time it's talking about a man, but you could it could be used to talk uh to another a woman, a female. And again, this is a word that typically younger people are going to use. Like people like like my grandparents, they're not using the word dude. Okay? I I used it a lot more when I was younger. All right? Now I feel like I'm getting old because I don't use dude anymore. All right, the next one. It's a fill in the blank. All right, I would just tell you guys, you know, you all are great. I really want to give you m for being here today. I really want to give you m for being here today. What do you think? Which word best completes that that phrase? And I've I've highlighted the slang phrase in in red.

So that is the whole part of the slang. Give you what do you think? Uh, which word best completes that? Is that a cred, b props, or c shoutouts? All right, what do what do you guys think? All right. Um, you all are great. I really want to give you m for being here today. Which one do you think uh best completes it? And I'm seeing a a lot of different answers. Wow. Okay. Wait a second. I thought you guys watched our other slang videos. You should have learned this already. All right. So many of you are saying see all right if you know I you could give a shout out but in this case this context when you're talking about the phrase together um yes I want to give some shout outs to yes Mrs. reluctant. Perfect. Claudia, excellent. Esther, uh, miracle happens.

The correct answer is B. You give someone props. All right. Now, when you give props like, hey, I want to give you props. You are giving someone proper recognition or respect or, you know, for doing something like uh in that sentence, you know, I want to give you mad props. Sometimes it's used with that word as well, mad. But to give someone props is, you know, you're giving them respect. you're giving them some recognition. I do think that this is a little more common. You might even hear it used uh in the workplace as well, like yeah, you know, I want to give you props for the work that you did on that project. You want to give somebody respect. Now, many of you said a shout out because a shout out is also uh recognition, but oftent times um you could say I guess you want to give a shout out. But when when I think of this context like I want to give a shout out, it means like I am announcing something.

Somebody is saying something to a wide audience cuz right now there are many of you watching this. So I might give a shout out to you individually. But if you're just talking to one other person and you say like you know oh or even a small group you'd say you know I want to give you props. I want to give you props for uh for doing this thing. You want to give them respect. So, that is the entire slang phrase to give someone props. All right. This this next one. Okay. What do you guys think? Um, all right. This means to expose your butt to others on purpose. And this is very childish. It's something that I I think maybe it's an older term. Um, but it to expose your butt on purpose.

Usually doing it as a joke. And I put that picture. Do you see those zebras in there? Th those pesky zebras. They're showing us. They're showing us their butts. All right. If somebody's showing you your butt on purpose, does that mean to A to show, B to flash, or C to moon? What do you think? Uh what do you think is the correct answer? A, B, or C? Show, flash, or moon. All right. Again, this was in one of the previous lessons, so if you saw that, then you should remember it. Yes. Excellent, Paul. Perfect. Um, who else? Uh, Simo, Cece, uh, Arty, Metate. It's moving really fast now, but yes, the answer is C. Moon. So, to moon someone, you're using it as a verb. It means that to expose your butt to somebody on purpose.

This is when you are joking around. And like I said, it's childish. I think of like teenagers, they would do this and they would moon somebody or like if uh and and again I think maybe this is some kind of childish joke that is just in the United States. I can't say whether other countries that this is happening. Um but I could ask you know have you ever mooned? Have you ever mooned someone or have you ever mooned a group of people? I will admit yes. When I was a child I mooned I think it was probably like a car. the cars are going down the road and I would show my butt or something and that would be like to moon someone. All right. Yes, it is a childish prank. Um, but now you know.

Again, this is probably not as common, but again, that's why it's slang. So, here's the next one. All right, put it in context. Again, I put those uh wait a second so you can see my quotes my quotes up there so you know that I'm talking about spoken English. and somebody would say, "Hey, are you down to go with me to the courthouse? Are you down? Are you down to go with me to the courthouse?" Again, I highlighted uh the slang in red, which is down. So, what does that mean? If somebody says, "Hey, are you down to go with me to the courthouse?" A, are you okay to do something? B, are you happy to do something? C, are you unwilling to do something?

Are you okay to do this with me? willing to do something?" And I might ask you, uh, you know, I'd say, "Hey, you know, do you want to do you want to hit that like button? Are you down? Are you down to hit that like button? Are you okay with doing that that favor for me? Because if you do enjoy these lessons, if you like these quizzes that we do, hit that like button. Let me know." Because then that tells me I should do more quiz lessons. um, grammar, all of it. All right, we can do a bunch of different quizzes. So, I could ask you again, do you want to hit that like button? Are you down? Are you okay? Willing to do something? The next one is a fill-in- thelank again.

So, uh, I would say, "I'm so tired. I just want to I'm so tired. I just want to." So, I've given you that situation, that context. What would best complete that sentence? I'm so tired, I just want to. Is it a crash, B snore, or C plop? All right. What What do you guys think? Uh whi which knowing that uh sentence the situation I'm so tired I just want to m what would you say crash snore or plop? A b or c? Yes. Excellent. Um perfect. The falcon uh simo shilpa. Uh sleepwalker. The answer is Stephano. Perfect. A crash. So if somebody says that they just want to crash, it means that they want to go to sleep. And often it's kind of like sleeping suddenly because they are very exhausted. Maybe they have not slept in a long time and they say, "Oh, you know, I just want to crash." Perhaps they've been working very hard and they're tired and they say, "Ah, I just want to crash." Or maybe you've done something physical like running a marathon. And I could say, you know, after the marathon, I crashed. All right. I was so tired that I just crashed. I went to sleep. And I went to sleep suddenly. Excellent.

Perfect. I think many of you, many of you were able to get that. To crash is to go to sleep. This one. All right. So, this one I I will tell you is more difficult. It's very regional. So, this is not one that many people across the United States are familiar with. It's not even one that I was very familiar with uh until doing some research and actually traveling. We traveled to the Northeast. We traveled to the New York area. Um I think it was yeah about a couple years ago and I heard this word being thrown around. So, this means something is messed up. All right? It's messed up or it's of poor quality.

something is messed up or poor quality. What What word means that? Is it a wicked, b janky, or c bumner? What do you guys think? And you're saying, "Wow, this thing this thing is what? If it's poor quality, is it wicked, janky, or bumner?" And I tried to put those phones in the background. I don't know if you could see it. They're just these phones that look like old, broken phones. They don't work. They're very poor quality. You would say that it is what? What do you think is the right answer? Yes. Uh, excellent. Jasmine, uh, Jessica, Jessica, Ruth, um, Fia, perfect. The answer is B. Jankee. Many of you got that. How did you know?

This was again, if you saw one of our previous lessons, we talked about this slang that is really regional um, on the east coast of the United States. If you're talking about something that's poor quality, you could say it's messed up. It's it's janky. All right? So, it is used as an adjective, but again, many many Americans probably are not familiar with this word. Uh, so it it's something you you might hear on a TV show or movie. It's good for your comprehension, but you don't necessarily, if you are an English learner, you don't need to try and go out and oh, let me use this word because some people are going to be like, what are you talking about? What is janky?

Um, so janky is something that's poor quality. Like this phone right here, this is an old phone. All right, it is not high quality. You could say, "Wow, that phone that that's a bit janky." All right, it's it's not very good. If you guys like these lessons, if you like what we do here, you can check out our Patreon page. It is a great way to support our lessons, support what we do. We offer some cool rewards and I will throw a link in the chat right there in case you haven't gone there and checked that out. If you don't want to, that is okay. We are still going to keep doing these free English lessons because we just like helping you practice and improve your English and actually just growing this this global classroom that we have. It's amazing. It's awesome. So, you can check that out. Let's continue the quiz. Are you ready for the next one? So, I'd say this again. Think about it as, you know, I put quotes there. Somebody's talking. They're saying this. I'm not sure about this. It all seems a bit sketchy. All right. The word, the slang word is sketchy. I've highlighted it in red. So, again, somebody would say, "I'm not sure about this. It all seems a bit sketchy. What do you think that means?" I I think maybe I'm giving it away with my intonation in the way that I'm looking at the camera. Is it a suspicious, b detailed, or c confusing? Which which word if somebody says that something seems sketchy or something looks sketchy? You could even say that somebody is acting sketchy. And I'm really giving away the answer right now because there's really just one one adjective that really describes that.

All right. Is it A, B, or C? Suspicious, detailed, or confusing? Yes. Excellent. Um, Rose, Angela. Um, who is it? Love music. Perfect. All right, Zoe. The answer is a somebody is suspicious or some you could say some plan or situation, some idea. It looks it it's just sketchy. All right, it's suspicious. You shouldn't be trusted. So, it it means that something if something is sketchy, it is suspicious or out of place. And again, you could use it to describe a person. Like this guy right there. This guy.

This guy definitely looks sketchy. All right. I don't know what I was doing in that picture, but I do. I think I look a little sketchy.

Uh you could describe a situation. You know, somebody's plan like, "Hey, let's do this. What do you think of my idea?" And you'd be like, "Yeah, it looks it seems a little sketchy to me." All right. I'm a little suspicious of it. So, sketchy is suspicious. How would you fill in that blank? Okay, there's the car I call. All right, now this one I I don't know if it's still used as often. This one I used a lot when I was younger. I used this word a lot to talk about this situation. Oh, there's the car. I call m a bumper, b lemon, c shotgun. Which word would complete that sentence? So that that makes sense. Oh, there's the car. I call m. Would you call bumper, call lemon, or call shotgun? What do you guys think? This was one of the first slang lessons that we did and I talked about this. And yes, uh Paul, I can. Uh um Simo anonymous, you don't know. That's okay. If you don't know, I will tell you the answer. Perfect. I like your I like your honesty. Um Banini Lai, yes, the answer is C. Shotgun. So this when you're talking about shotgun, of course it would mean like a gun, but the literal meaning would be a shotgun. Uh, but it is a noun and it all it means if somebody calls shotgun, they're talking about riding in a car and they're saying that that they want to sit in the front passenger seat. So, like I said, when I was younger, uh, you know, I'm hanging out with my friends, there's three or four people and everybody wants to sit in front with the driver. So you would call shotgun and you would make a game out of it. Like in order to call shotgun, you have to see the car. So you have to wait until you're outside and once you see the car, then somebody call, "Oh, shotgun." Or they say, "Oh, I call shotgun." And that means that person gets to sit in the front passenger seat. Again, I don't know.

This this slang may be out of date, but you you might hear it if you're watching a movie or a TV show um or listening to somebody old like me talk about when they were younger and they were call calling shotgun. I call shotgun. The next one that I have for you is and this one this one I think is more common. This is more um well known across the United States to me and it says you know this means to borrow something. It's very simple. It means to borrow something. Um, also I'd say not just to borrow, but also just to have something because when you borrow something, you kind of give it back. But in this context, uh, you're not always giving it back. So, I should have added that. So, it means to borrow, but also to get something to to have it. So, you can have it. It's yours. So, what what does that mean? Does it mean a snag, bum, or c buck? All right. Which which of those words means to borrow or to get something? All right. Um, seeing some different answers. Excellent. Um, some more shoutouts. Wait a second. It's going so fast. Uh, Alberto Schilpa, very nice. Um, Zeissors, sorry if I mispronounced the names. Yes, we're talking about be to bum. So if you bum something from another person then you are borrowing it from that person. But it also again you're not you might not just be borrowing it. You might just be getting that person is giving you this thing to borrow something. And I think a very common situation it's used in is talking about smoking. All right. you if somebody smokes and you don't have a cigarette, you might ask your friend or you might ask another person on the street and you say, "Hey, can I bum a smoke? Can I have a smoke?" In this case, you're not borrowing it because you're not going to give it back, but you're asking them, "Can I have this thing?

Can I bum a smoke?" Oh, or maybe you're talking about, and I put no smoking because we don't we're not really wanting to encourage you to smoke or anything. Uh I I just put the no no smoking. There's no smoking in this class. um even though I don't know if you are smoking or not. in this case you're talking about a very low amount. Can I bum a few dollars? Can I bum a few dollars? Uh you know just uh I I'll pay you back. In that case they would you would try to pay somebody back. Can you bum something? All right. Can you bum a smoke? Um so it could be cigarettes. Uh yes. It could also be talking about marijuana too. That that is also a smoke. Can you bum something?

So to bum is to borrow or to have. All right, let's look at the next one. And this one this one is outdated. Not outdated. It's actually one that younger people are using. I I am the person who is outdated. Um but somebody might say, you know, oh this party is lit. All right, this party is lit. What does it mean lit? That is the slang that that people would use. Does it mean that is it describing something that is a exciting, b out of control, or c just getting started? All right. So, I tried to make the the party, which is the situation, I I tried to make the answers applicable, but there is really just one answer. If somebody says, "Oh, this party is lit." What are they talking about? And yes, excellent. Um, Cathi, perfect. Milan, um, Kareem, uh, Roose Zafar. Yes, the answer is a a exciting. So, it is used as an adjective to describe something that you really enjoy like, oh, this party is lit. These live lessons are lit. Yes, they are so exciting, so amazing. At least I hope so. So again, this is something it's not a word that I often use. I feel like when I say it, it just doesn't sound natural. Um because I'm not used to saying it. I think again younger generations say it, people who are teenagers, maybe in their 20s, they might talk about something and say, "Ah, you know, this YouTube channel is lit. It's exciting. It's amazing. It's excellent." All right. The next question that I have for you is this one. It's another fill in the blank. So, uh, to, you know, to give you the situation, say, you know, hey, where where are you going? Don't m on me. Where are you going? Don't m on me. Which word best completes the sentence? These are the slang words. Is it a ditch, B jump the shark, or C bail? All right. What What do you think? Don't m on me. A ditch. B jump the shark. C bail. Which word best completes that situation? Where are you going? Don't m on me. What do you think is the answer? A, B, or C? All right. I'm seeing again, if you guys are just joining us, we are doing a slang quiz. So, stick around, answer some questions. Uh, great way to practice your English skills. So, yes, Ruth, Freddy, hot flesh. Uh, excellent. Um, Louisa Adrian, yes, the correct answer is C. Don't bail on me. So, in that context, somebody says, "Where are you going?" which means that somebody is leaving. Where are you going? Don't bail on me. Don't leave me. Um, ditch means the same thing. Ditch is also to leave, but the difference is you wouldn't ditch on somebody in this case because we're using that preposition. you bail on someone. All right? If you're just using ditch, you would say, "Don't ditch me." So, that is one little thing. I tried to trick you there, but ditch, it also means to leave. And to jump the shark is an expression just to let you know in case you haven't heard of it. It's when you're watching like a TV show and then it just becomes unrealistic. It's just like they after after so many seasons, the show just becomes crazy out ridiculous and you say, "Yeah, they really jumped the shark." But in this case, we're talking about leaving somebody is to bail. It's a verb. And you would often use it with that preposition on. You bail on someone.

right? It means to leave often suddenly or unexpectedly. Like you were not planning to leave. Somebody was not planning to leave and then all of a sudden they bail. That person bails. So, and then I'd say again, I tell you guys, hey, hey, hey, don't bail just yet. There are more questions. I'm going to ask you guys more questions. Don't bail on me, okay? Please, please don't bail. Um, the next question, all right, is okay. Asking about the meaning. All right, I think I think this one is is pretty common. I think many people might use it. I use it a lot. Uh, I think it's used among different ages. Uh, it's an expression. It's still slang. This means that you made a mistake. So if you made a mistake, you might respond and say what are you going to say? A my spiel, B, my bad, or C my wrong. What do you think? So if somebody makes a mistake, if you make a mistake, you are going to say this sentence. All right, very short, very sweet. Many of you know it, I think, because we talked about it before. Um, in our other lessons, yes. Uh, there's just so many answers flying by me right now. I can't give too many. I can't give any shout outs. It's B. My bad. So, if you make a mistake and you want to acknowledge that you made this mistake, you would tell somebody, oh, you know, instead of saying, I'm sorry, you could just say, yeah, my bad. And again, this is much more informal. It's much more casual than saying, "I'm sorry." And you often use it for small mistakes. So, if somebody makes like just a small mistake, like you step on somebody's shoes or foot and you say, "Oh, you know, oh, my bad. I didn't mean to do that." If you're talking about a big mistake, you are not going to use my

bad. You are actually going to be I'm sorry. I'm so sorry. I apologize. Um because this is talking about something that's a small mistake like like that shirt. you get something on somebody's shirt like some mustard say, "Oh, I didn't mean to do that. My bad. That's a mistake. I acknowledge that I made this mistake." All right. So, another way thing I want to let you guys know in case you have not already done so if you want to connect with us and you can access the secret fluency lesson. We will send you some useful resources as well and we will also provide you with some lesson updates so that you know you know uh like well about the lessons that are going to be coming out in the future check out our email list. I will throw a link right there. I know many of you have already subscribed but if you guys want to make that connection with us join our email list, join our community.

Uh link is right there in the chat. So let's do let's do some more slang questions. A few more questions. So, I could say, again, I'm saying this, I'd be like, "Oh, this is so sweet." What does it mean? If I say, "Oh, this is so sweet." Am I talking sweet? That is the slang word. Am I talking about something that is a tasty, bunny, or c nice or good? If somebody says, "Oh, this is sweet." Sweet. You can listen to how I'm saying it. What do you think? Am I talking about something tasty, funny, or nice or good? What do you think? And when I say nice or good, those that's together. And yes, so many of you uh got the answer.

Shilpa, Paul, Rose, Angela, uh Milan, Richard, excellent, Jean, Carlos, the answer is C. You're talking about something that is nice or good. You are expressing that something is nice or good. And you could say it in that content like, "Oh, sweet. Yes, but you could also you may also hear somebody talk about another person and say, "Oh, you know, you're so sweet. You're so nice. You're so good. You're so sweet." So, this is a I think this is a rather common slang word that is used throughout the United States because again, we're talking about American slang. Um, so I would tell you guys, you know, your your comments, you guys write us comments and your comments, they're so sweet. Uh, they're so nice. So again, it depends on the intonation. You might hear somebody just say, "Oh, so sweet." Or if somebody's just like, "Oh, sweet." It means that it's great. It's expressing it. It's like saying, "Yes." All right. You are happy. Uh let's look at the next one. Here it is. Here is my statement, my my sentence. What I would say, I say, "Dude, I can't believe you bailed. You're such a what how would you complete that that sentence? You're such a A no-show, B flake, C weasel. All right. Um, I'm trying to trick you a little bit here. Uh, but again, I'll read it to him one more time. Dude, I can't believe you bailed. You're such a what? You're a no-show, you're a flake, or you're a weasel. All right, which one uh do you think uh which one do you think best completes that sentence? Uh I'm seeing some different answers here. Uh not everybody is in agreement on this one. Yes. Um meat. Excellent.

Krishna. Perfect. Uh hot flesh. Nice. Sajed. The correct answer is B. If somebody is a flake. All right. It means that this person can't be trusted. They do not do what they say they will do. So if somebody bails, it means they leave unexpectedly. You were expecting this person to stay. They're not doing what they say they're doing. So, you would say they're bailing on you. That means they are a flake. It's a noun. A no-show is just somebody who doesn't show up. All right? If I said, "Oh, we're going to have a lesson." And then I don't come and I don't arrive and you guys are just here waiting. Then you say, "I was a no-show." And a weasel is somebody that you just can't trust. All right? They're trying to trick you in some way. You'd say they're a weasel. So again, those are also other terms that you can use, but in this case, we're talking about somebody who is a flake. It is an unreliable person who says they will do something, but they do not do it. And you say, yeah, that person, they're a flake. I cannot rely on this person. So I say, somebody might just be, oh, don't be such a flake. All right? Don't you need to be somebody that that I can rely on. Don't be a flake. And I don't know why I put that picture there of a snowflake because we're talking about flakes. All right, so let's look at another. All right, so this one we're talking about the meaning is affection between two heterosexual men. Okay, what does that mean? This is a word that I think has become more popular over the last 5 to 10 years in describing this situation. If you have two guys, um, they're heterosexual, they're not gay, they're not having a relation, uh, any kind of romantic relationship, they're heterosexual men, but they they become suddenly friends, and they really get along with each other. You can describe this situation as what? A, a bromance, B, tomboy, or C, bffs. What do you think would describe this situation? Affection between two heterosexual men. Um, and I think yes, great answers. Lai Jr., Eloa, um, Shilpa, Rose, Angela, Simo, uh, Jatth, uh, just trying to throw out as many names. Uh, Russian, I forget. It just went just went on through. Yes, the answer is a. We're talking about a bromance because when you're saying bro, you're talking about another guy. It's a it's an

of bro and romance. A bromance. But again, in this case, you're not talking about a romantic relationship. It is just people that are friends. And the way that it's used, I would say the the two men, they are not going to describe their friendship as a bromance. This is something that other people would say about their friendship. And you'd say, "Oh, look. Oh, these guys, they made friends. They became friends so quickly. It's a bromance." Other people would say this to describe their friendship. All right, this is not something that the the two men would say about this, but other people um and I say, "Oh, you know, yeah, it's a bromance." All right, I I do I didn't I didn't have other pi pictures of other people. I could say, "Yes, I do like myself. Um I do get along with myself. Oh, it's a bromance." Okay, those are the only pictures that I could find. So, that is describing that situation right there.

All right. So, let's see what you know. Thank you guys for joining me today. Thank you guys for being here. That is it for your slang quiz. I hope you were able to when when you've watched our other videos that you able to learn these words. And then again, this is good practice because the more you practice, the more likely you are to remember the meaning of these words. So that the next time you hear them in when you're watching a TV show, you're listening to somebody talk on the street, you're going to be able to comprehend the meaning of what they're saying. You'll be like, "Oh, I know this word." And you can follow along with the conversation.

Again, I told you I think slang is most important for your comprehension. It's not necessarily like you need to go out and use these words if you are an English learner. So, thank you guys so much for joining me. Thank you. Thank you. Thank you. Um, let's see. Where is it? Eloa Simo. Um, uh, Farhang, thank you guys. Give some more shout outs. Li, um, Musen, thank you. Well done, dude. Yes. Yes, I am a dude. Sure. Um, Sajid, uh, Neckla, sorry. Yes, I am bailing on I'm gonna have to bail on you guys right now. I know you want to continue, but but I got to bail. I am not a flake though because we will be ne we will be I will be back next Saturday for another lesson.

ANIMAL GROUPS...Do you know these collective nouns? #interactiveenglish #shorts

Watch the original lesson on YouTube

[Music] what do you call a group of deer a herd how about a group of camels this is a caravan and a group of dolphins it's called a pod how about a group of crows this is a murder yes that's right a group of crows is a murder of crows and how about a group of elephants you could say heard or parade a group of ants is called a colony a group of lions would be a Pride and a group of giraffes would be called what I like this one a tower

ANSWERING YOUR DIFFICULT GRAMMAR QUESTIONS

all right hello hello hello what's up everyone my name is Wes this is interactive English which is the place that you want to be to practice and improve your English skills of course so welcome to today's lesson it's going to be it's going to be something new something a little different but in general we are talking about grammar you like you like my picture there so I want to give a quick shout out and hello to the people who are here joining me live L Stephen Franco Thon Wendy Jella gudus uh sorry if I mispronounce names or Miss people Kareem Veronica Sabria hello hello hello uh Diva Len uh lenisha Freddy praim welcome thank you guys for joining me today and even if you're watching this later thank you for being here please write to me in the comments tell me your name tell me where you're from I just want to hear from you guys we love hearing from you and reading all of your comments so what we're going to do let me kind of explain what this lesson is all about it's a little different but it's something that I really want to do in the future and I want to do it more often because these are grammar question questions that I've gotten directly from you so a few days ago I made a post on our patreon page as well as our YouTube Community page asking you well what are some grammar questions that you guys have and I've taken some of those questions I've created some slides gave some examples and and that's what this lesson is all about so I've taken some of your questions that you guys have asked and we're going to go through those today and I'm going to give you some brief explanations because when it comes to grammar there there is a lot that you can talk about so this is kind of just a quick overview but again this is something I want to do in the future and and ask you guys questions and see what questions you have when it comes to pronunciation vocabulary and then we can go through and and do these live lessons and answer those questions so this is kind of a test run a trial run so let's just jump into it if you have some other questions in the chat write them down as long as they're very specific and I'll see if I can get to them but today I want to focus on some of these questions so our first question comes from a patron and that is from Katherine thank you Katherine um said she unfortunately she won't be able to attend today's live lesson that is okay because it's going to be posted on our Channel but interesting she's interested in getting some clarifications regarding time concordance especially for the future um

so I I followed up with her to see a little more specifics and she she's mostly interested in about future time Clauses now we do have another lesson on future time Clauses which I will link up above if you guys want to check that out but I kind of want to talk to you a little bit about just the general rules um when we use future time Clauses and how we use them so of course when when we're talking about future time Clauses it's we're we're referring to it's a statement referring to an event something that's happening in the future and the statement is going to be made up of an independent clause and a dependent clause now that dependent clause that's that's the future time Clause um right there and it's introduced by a conjunction so the one thing I want you to know the one important thing is that sentences you know it can be an independent clause an independent clause is going to have a subject and a verb that verb the verb in the independent clause that is your main verb that is going to determine when the action is taking place if it's the past the present the future that main verb in the independent clause that is you know what's going to determine the time so in that independent clause that is when you use the future tense in the dependent clause that's introduced by the conjunction after before when while um uh what other ones there's there's quite a few of them we're going to use the present simple okay so look at those example sentences boom right there after we eat dinner dependent clause present simple the show is going to begin that is our main independent clause so going to again that is my main verb and again

it's you it's telling us the future is going to begin be going to we use be going to or will when we're referring to the Future so the show is going to begin that is our independent clause that is you know that's what's really showing the time what's get confusing and we've had so many students ask us before they want to say they want to use the future tense in the dependent in the dependent clause and say after we will eat dinner and when we're doing this the rule is again dependent clause present simple independent clause that's your future all right so for example here's another one giving you guys some hints here these these lessons are very suggestive all right when the lesson ends I'll hit the like button all right when the lesson ends again present simple I will hit the like button that that shows the future so right now I want you guys practice write a sentence using a future

all right in becoming a patron you can check us out on patreon links are in the description it's just another good way to connect with us to interact act with us and and this is what we'll end up doing when we do lessons like this and ask questions we we will give them priority um so yes when the lesson ends I will have hit the all right yes you can use it uh with that as well with the future perfect excellent example so again if you're just joining us we're talking about the we're just answering difficult grammar questions questions that you guys had we asked those questions I've taken them and I've put them together in this lesson which we're going through right now um after watching your video I will summarize the key points excellent great um great future time clause and that is just good practice all right good practice summarizing lessons uh reviewing content is a great way to learn so another question that we had is this and this was this is a common one it's one that we get quite often all right and that is so asked like I find prepositions extremely confusing hope you'll explain it um raky also said prepositions all right we need help with prepositions and you are not alone this is one of the most difficult things um when it comes to I'd say really perfecting your English because there are rules and you can learn prepositions it's easy to follow those rules but often times people make little simple mistakes because these are those tiny little function words that are easy to forget

now when you make these mistakes most people you know even if they notice them they will still understand what you're saying okay sometimes it can cause confusion but again don't don't stress out about it don't worry about it th this is really uh a definitely a more advanced form of really perfecting your English but I want I'm I'm not going to go through every single rule when it comes to preposition I just want to show you some some highlights here and let you know so these are the top five these are the most common prepositions in the English language so when you're listening to a TV show or movie when you are reading a book these five prepositions are the ones that you will come across the most of into for with those are the top five most of you are familiar with prepositions because again we learn them and the types of prepositions that is how that's often how we learn them when we are starting to learn English when you are a beginner you might learn prepositions of time for example and and people learn to say in the morning in the evening in the afternoon preposition of time or a preposition of place we can learn those or prepositions when it comes to Direction so when you're learning English and studying often there they might prepositions might be grouped into those categories of time place Direction but again prepositions we find them after verbs we find them after adjectives and that's when people are like oh I I really you know I'm confused when do we use this preposition and the best way again I say this all the time I think one of the best ways to really learn prepositions and internalize that information is to read because then you are reading you're reading the sentences you you see how it's used correctly you're seeing how the grammar is used correctly and you're seeing the prepositions used correctly now that does not mean that that you are going to memorize every single thing that you read but you once as you see it enough as you see these prepositions enough you're going to see of used in in certain sentences with certain words and then it's just going to start to seep in so that the next time you are using the language when you're using it speaking or writing you'll start to use it correctly so when it comes to studying prepositions I think especially as a beginner or intermediate it um even as an advance it's good to review the different types and learn prepositions when it comes to time or place or Direction but overall I think one of the best ways to improve your your grammar when it comes to prepositions is just to read read books read newspaper articles read these sentences that people are writing read our sentences in the examples it's just a great way to internalize it so um again thank you guys for all these comments excellent you guys are writing some great sentences with those future time Clauses perfect when the lesson ends I'll go to sleep all right great sentence Andy thanks for sharing with us so again prepositions they're always going to be tricky they they will always be challenging in the future we are going to do some lessons specifically about certain prepositions and what we'll do is probably put them in those categories and talk about prepositions of time and go over all the different ones from the easy ones to the more advanced ones the prepositions of place there is just so much that we can talk about when it comes to prepositions but I just wanted to show you those top five and again suggest that reading read read read read read that is a great place um to start when you want to improve your skills and and improve your knowledge of preposition so the next question let's go ahead let's keep moving along one of the next questions we have is uh from Shanda um Shanda sure sorry if I mispronounced that transformation please make a video about transformation affirmative uh to negative so there's a few things that I want to say about this this this is great idea uh this is great information great feedback that we're getting because again this topic can be very indepth because a lot of times I think this is probably being asked because it's something that might happen on the AIS uh you might get a complex Advanced sentence and what they want you to do is transform it into like say the same meaning but say it a different way and you're transforming the sentence so there's a lot that we can go into when it comes to transformation again I'm just going to give you this a little quick brief overview um but this gives us uh ideas for lessons in the future to really do another live lesson and to do a deep dive into showing you more examples because again when it comes comes to transformation PE especially on an ielt like you think you have like these affirmative sentences you can have declarative sentences negative sentences exclamatory sentences and you you they just want you to change it and see if you can say the the same meaning but say it in a different way and again it's a way to really test your Advanced uh level of English so let's look at again basically basically when you're talking about transform you're just transforming senten and it comes down to sentence structure at the most basic form so at the most basic form like when we talk when we're teaching students especially beginner and intermediate students you kind of have these these sentence structures right here you'd have a simple sentence with a subject and a verb you'd have a compound sentence which are two independent clauses you're going to have two subjects two verbs connected by a conjunction and then you're going to have a complex sentence down there at the end which like a future time Clause you'll have a dependent clause and an independent clause and when we we're talking about writing or English fluency it's good to use all of these you want to use simple sentences you want to use compound sentences you want to use complex sentences it's great to use a variety because again that's the best way to keep people engaged in in what you're writing or what you're saying so simply like again you can transform a sentence from a simple to a complex and

I said I study English on Sundays and then you could make it a compound sentence and say I work on Saturday and I study English on Sundays okay we've just made it a longer sentence giving you more information and if we want to make a complex sentence again we have that dependent clause I could say after I work out I study English or I could say after I work out on Sundays I study English and you can say things in a different way and often give more information I always tell students give especially when it comes to writing details details details speak using details write using details provide as much information as you can now again this is a great way to look at it again if you're a beginner English learner you you just start out with simple sentences you don't and just speak using simple sentences and then as you get more comfortable learn how to use compound sentences start using those and then complex sentences as you become more of an advanced learner so this is a good topic I appreciate the question because again that's something I think would be a good topic to go into and do a deeper dive and really go over some of those ielt examples which I think is what um you know probably brought about this question another one uh question from Rosalinda all right she has a lot of questions but the most important have problems with the perfect tenses I'm guessing the present perfect and the past perfect um also uh Julia has a similar question that's why I put it up there uh I have a lot of questions in my head but the most ofo when to use have in a sentence and I included this one because we use have often when you're talking when you're talking about perfect tenses the present perfect and the past perfect we also we did lessons on this before and I will link those again we have a lesson on the present perfect we have a lesson on the past perfect if you have not seen those please check those out because we give a lot more detailed information as well as some examples but just simply put we use the present perfect we're it's it's talking about something in the past but it's kind of linking the present with the past because you're having that conversation now and I'd say yeah I have I have traveled to Thailand I'm having a conversation with you guys and I'm talking like oh yeah yeah yeah I've traveled to Thailand I've been there now this is an unspecified time and we do use present perfect when talking about spec unspecified time now if I gave a specific time for example I said last year then that time indicator that would tell me to use the past tense and I'd say oh I traveled to Thailand last year but when we're talking about unspecified time just as an example we would use the present perfect um past perfect okay for this one you are talking again about in the past but you're talking about two events all right and you're linking those events you're linking one event in the past with another event in the past so look at my example sentence right here again this is a complex sentence we have a dependent clause with an independent clause so by the time they arrived by the time they arrived that's my dependent clause in this case in that dependent clause you are just using the past simple like I said the independent clause that is really going to be your your your time uh indicator right there that's where you're going to use the past perfect this is another example where students might they want to use the past perfect in the dependent clause and no it is just the simple past but we use the the past perfect in the independent clause we had already eaten so by the time they arrived in the past all right they arrived in the past we had already eaten also in the past all right it happened before before they arrived so we're talking about these two events and one happened before the other we we had already eaten it happened before we we ate before they arrived that's basically the meaning of this sentence so that's a quick little overview about the present tense the the perfect tenses again please please please check out those lessons uh that we already did to find more examples and to get a lot more information so excellent all right moving right along let's look um kind of trying to check out the comments seeing what's going on um this was another one from KH he said sir please teach us uh about uh used to and causative verbs actually used to I want to do another lesson on used to just about used to so I'm saving that one but causative verbs the reason I this caught my attention is because somebody asked us about this not too long ago and maybe we'll make another video just dedicated to causative verbs but if you don't know what causative verbs are it is a verb used to indicate that some person or thing makes something happen so there's a common list of causative verbs make cause allow help let have keep require and when we use these causative verbs you're basically this this is not how it is for all of them but this is kind of a general format a general structure when we're making these sentences you'd have a causative verb you say the person or the thing and then you're just using that base verb okay so for example made make let's start with that one and my my sentence right here my boss made me work late all right made is a positive verb you see that formula my boss that's the subject made a positive verb me would be the person work is just the base verb work late so it's kind it's a simple sentence all right I think it's easy to understand um but now you know that yes make would be the causative verb the next sentence Wes helped you w to cook dinner uh it's something usually I usually I'm on Dish duty but I I want to cook more that's one of my resolutions I want to be able to cook more this year so West help Yana cook dinner all right helped is my causative verb uh the followed by the person you w to cook is the base verb all right so let's look at the next one we had another question from Olivia she asked all right hi I have grammar question about direct object and indirect object it's really confusing there are a lot of rules want a simple explanation again this is a great topic maybe we'll do more of a deep dive in another lesson but just real quickly if if you're looking to know the between direct and indirect objects okay uh here's a sentence right here Wes gives Yana a present all right and this is something I going to do tomorrow in case you didn't know is Yana's birthday so you guys give a give a shout out in the comments tomorrow uh to Yana or on Facebook if you follow us on Facebook or Instagram uh a birthday shout out so Wes gives Yana a present you know this is our sentence now the direct object all right we we use direct objects and indirect objects when we're talking about transitive verbs so transitive verbs are those verbs that will take on a direct object or uh and and if we have a direct object then you may have an indirect object so give to give that is a transitive verb so Wes gives Yana a present the direct object is going to answer who or whom or what all right so the easiest way to do it and what I always tell students is to make a question take your subject take your verb in this case Wes is the subject give is the verb and make a question all right what does Wes give and the answer to that question is the direct object so we have Wes gives what does Wes give a present so that is our direct object present is the direct object now the indirect object is going to answer the question of to whom for whom or for what so then we can take our we can take this and ask another question all right using the direct object so we've asked the first question uh what does Wes give the answer is a present now we want to know to whom does Wes give a present all right now we're making a question using the subject the verb and the direct object to whom does Wes give a present well to Yana sh she is the indirect object so in this in this sentence right here we have subject is Wes gives is our main verb Yana is the indirect object and a present is the direct object okay so I hope this is a very simple and easy way to follow again there are more complex grammar sentences with direct and indirect objects but that we we'll save that for a longer lesson so again just want to give a shout out what up if you guys are joining us just going through and answering some grammar questions um that you guys asked a few days ago and I'm taking those questions and and kind of just going through them so let's look at this next one so the next question is um hello I'm a pre-intermediate level uh Native Russian speaker have some problems with that okay for example I want you to be happier why don't use that in the sentence it's confusing yes all right when and where to use that again this is it's not a very simple answer it could be long detailed but I wanted to quickly talk to you about the that Clause okay so often times that is probably one of the most overused words in English when speaking and even when writing uh I once had a writing instructor in University told me he said when you're done with your writing go through your paper and just eliminate all like most of the time where you write that just get rid of it all right it's unnecessary we overuse it so when we're talking about the that Clause it's a dependent clause that begins with the ver word that all right now this may follow verbs adjectives or nouns and this is where like my writing teacher has said the Clauses they can be used without the word that we can just take it out and it's not going to change the meaning so it it's a word often it's like a filler word that people tend to throw in there um for example all right he knows that the match is over all right we often follow that the that Clause often follows the verb no all right I know that something all right he knows that they know that it's very common that that Clause will follow the verb no so he knows that the match is over we can just as easily take that out of there and just say he knows the match is over we we don't need to say it but sometimes we just want to say it the second sentence also I'm glad that you joined me for today's lesson it's very true I'm glad that you joined me but in this case again we can take that out if we want I'm glad you joined me for today's lesson but there's often a list of like just verbs adjectives and nouns that are often followed by a that clause and and that is the reason we see this word so much and it comes up so this is just a quick little quick dive into the that Clause but also great idea for a future lesson to really go in there all right so let's look um at that all right so again this is something we just wanted to try out and and see that you know how you guys uh enjoyed this and and for me to be able to get some questions from you because in the future I want to be able to put something up on our community page and say hey tell me your pronunciation questions or tell me what words are difficult to pronounce or tell me uh you know a vocabulary word you want to learn and then I can put use that use your question put together a lesson the same way we did with this grammar so again hope you guys uh found this a little useful even though we went through this very quickly thank you thank you thank you for asking us questions and again please check out some of our other lessons especially grammar we have a ton of grammar lessons up there again I will leave a link to a playlist of many of our grammar lessons so thank you guys so much for joining us please if you enjoy what we do hit that like button share the lesson also there is a link to the secret fluency lesson in the description click on on that if you want to subscribe stay up to date get emails about what we're doing and and new developments because we have a lot planned for this year a lot of new stuff going on write questions in the comments on the vid once the video is posted we love hearing from you guys and join us on social media right up here we're on Facebook Twitter Instagram and of course right here on YouTube so thank you uh Olivia thank you shout out all right you guys here awesome uh tripy Ronaldo Molly thank you thank you thank you um awesome glad you guys would join us today hope you enjoy the rest of your weekend and again please write to us write to us in the comments we love hearing from you guys thank you guys have a wonderful day and I will see you very soon so long

AUTUMN IDIOMS & EXPRESSIONS IN ENGLISH

Welcome everyone! Today, we are in a park in Madrid on a beautiful fall morning. So what we thought we'd do today is take this opportunity and go over a few different English expressions that have to do with the park. So let's begin! So the first English expression that we have for you today is a walk in the park,. And this just means something that is pleasant to do. That it's easy to do. You don't mind doing it. We'd say it's a walk in the park. So for example, usually at the end of these lessons we'll ask you to write a sentence in the comments and practice using these words of phrases.

And maybe it's easy for you. You enjoy doing it. It's a walk in the park So stupid... That was perfect. Let me see. Excellent walk. Excellent walking The next expression is to turn over a new leaf. And this means to start something again. To start anew. it's just a new beginning, basically. So for example, every September in most... ...in most countries, children start school again. They start a new school year. So we can say that they're turning over a new leaf. Beginning a new school year. Just like the leaves are changing every fall, we have a chance to turn over a new leaf and start new things. Learn new things. Improve. It's a wonderful thing.

So the next expression that we have for you has to do with trees. It also has to do with apples, but unfortunately we don't have any apples here to show you, but... The expression is the apple never falls far from the tree. And this just means that a person's characteristics or traits is often similar to their relatives for their parents. So for example, my father is not the best at remembering the names of places, and I am also... I'm actually really, really terrible at remembering the names of places, or statues, or the names of restaurants, whatever. And you could say that the apple never falls far from the tree because we share that characteristic.

What? Tell us about the Ralph Machio's. The Ralph Machio's. Drinking the Ralph Machio's. What's a Ralph Machio's? Those are good. What is it? Ralph Machio is a drink. What it is really though? What is it called? Do you remember? A mocchiato. A macchiato. A macchiato. See I can't even say it now. Thank you guys for joining us today. I hope you learned some new park expressions or new expressions related to parks and autumn. And what we'd like to do now is practice using these expressions. So what we want you to do is take one of the expressions from this lesson, and write a sentence in the comments below because it's always good to practice what you've learned.

Also, remember...share this video if you feel like you've learned something new. And we will see you guys next time. See you.

LESSON 139 OF 749

A Complete Advanced English Makeover: 5 Hours, 250+ Words, Native-Level Vocabulary!

I am getting ready to share with you the best, the most detailed and amazing vocabulary lesson that is going to help you get a step closer to reaching your fluency goals. And if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way, I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. So, this lesson has it all. I've put the lesson together in five 1-hour blocks, and I will be thoroughly impressed if you watch it all in one sitting. But what I recommend is that you take your time. You can watch some now and then come back to it later. I just wanted to put all this together for you in one resource. So, let's start with some descriptive words and phrases that you can use in everyday conversation. Let's talk about some advanced adjectives that you can use to describe places. And let's go ahead and begin. and talk about some words you can use to describe like well the landscape, mountains, beaches, uh lakes. So the first word that I have for you is serene. It just means calm and peaceful. So in this case, it's like you're saying that the landscape looks undisturbed. It's very calm. It's very peaceful. I could say when driving through the countryside, the landscape appeared serene. Now you you can use this word to describe other things. You could say a person looks serene. And so I just want you to know that yes, these adjectives are very useful. You can use them to describe different places, different things. I just want to give you something to associate each word with. So the next word that I have for you is stunning. And if you're describing some some something you see the landscape as stunning, it means it's extremely beautiful. So this word is often used with the word view. And you might talk about a stunning view. I could say that if you go to Yosemite National Park, there are so many stunning views. And this is true. I would highly recommend you visit Yosemite if you ever travel to the US.

Picturesque. This means that something is visually attractive. So that suffix on the end there, that e s q u e e, it means like or resembling. So in this case, you're it's like you're saying something looks like or resembles a picture or a painting. And I could say the view from the mountaintop was picturesque. It looked like it belonged maybe on a postcard. The next adjective is desolate. desolate. If you're describing a place as desolate, it means empty and not attractive. And this this definitely has more of a negative connotation. So, I might think of the desert. It's very empty. It's not a place that that I want to spend a lot of time. So, I could describe it as desolate. Or I could say, after the fire, the forest looked desolate and lifeless. It was empty. It's unattractive. It's desolate. Then we have the word unspoiled. This is a great word. Now, now spoiled means something is ruined. So that has a negative connotation. So unspoiled has a positive connotation. And you're saying that something is is beautiful because it has not been damaged or ruined by by people or development. And you could describe some land as unspoiled. I could say the rainforest is unspoiled which is what makes it so unique. And the next word is pristine. Pristine means well in very good condition. And often people may use this with the word condition. Something is in pristine condition. But if we're talking about a place, I would think that well this place is wellkept. There's no trash. And when I think of the word pristine, I would think of Japan. If you've ever been there and you even you drive outside the city, it looks pristine there. There's no trash.

It's really wellmaintained and it's looks in very good condition. Next, I want I want to talk to you about words that you can use to describe the atmosphere of a place. These are great adjectives to talk about well the mood or the feeling of a place like tranquil. So tranquil means well peaceful and calm really without any noise. It's very similar to serene, but in my opinion, serene would more often be used to talk about the way a place looks, whereas tranquil really captures like that feeling of calm and peacefulness. I could say, I traveled to this picturesque beach with stunning views and it was so tranquil. It was just very calm and and peaceful. The next adjective is vibrant. I I really like this one. It means exciting, energetic, full of enthusiasm. And you could use it to describe like a city and talk about the atmosphere. It's very vibrant. But I think this word is great for describing things like festivals and talking about the atmosphere. I could say that carnival is one of the most vibrant festivals in the world. The colors, the dancing, just the mood, it's just Yes, it's definitely vibrant. And the next adjective is homey. So, if you say that a place is homey, it means that it's just comfortable and cozy. And notice it has the word home in it because I think people often associate home as being comfortable and cozy. But in this case, you're not going to use it to talk about your home. You would really use it to talk about another place like uh a hotel or a room. So, I could say that I stayed in a small hotel along the coast with a homey atmosphere. And then we have the word bustling. Bustling means very active and busy. And you could think of uh big cities. Big cities have an atmosphere that is bustling. For example, Time Square in New York City is always bustling with tourists. All right? just has that atmosphere, that busy mood, that busy feeling. And speaking of cities, let's talk about some adjectives that you can use to describe cities or towns, like renown.

So, if you say that a city or town is renowned for something, it means that it's famous for something. And you're typically going to follow this adjective with the word for. I could say that Paris is renowned for the Eiffel Tower. All right? People think of this landmark when they think of Paris or Italy is renowned for pizza. I think connecting it with food. This is a great way to use this adjective. A place is renowned for some food. Cosmopolitan is a great adjective. It means including people from many different countries. So Hong Kong is a cosmopolitan city. New York City is a cosmopolitan city. Then we have walkable. And I included this one because I like places that are walkable. I like to walk. It means that a place is well easy or safe to walk in. And you have that suffix that able which means able to do. You're able to walk. And I think often you're going to use this adjective and say that maybe a place is easily walkable or it's not walkable. I could say the city had many pedestrian streets, so it was easily walkable. And then there's overcrowded, which means containing too many people or things. And if you're going to use it to describe a place, you're probably referring to too many people. And it's a great word for adding emphasis instead of just saying a place is crowded. I remember traveling to Dravnik, Croatia. It's a beautiful city, but the old town was definitely overcrowded. Next is spacious. This is a word that I really like and it just means large with a lot of open space. And if you describe a city or town as spacious, perhaps you're talking about well like the streets or just the layout. Maybe there are a lot of parks and it makes it feel like it's spacious. Uh parts of New York City are overcrowded, but if you go to Central Park, it is a spacious area.

Another great adjective is charming. It just means pleasant or attractive. And maybe when traveling, I could say, I discovered this charming little street that was very spacious and not overcrowded. Then we have quaint. And this is a little different than charming because it means attractive because of being old-fashioned. So maybe I could tell you that I walked down this charming cobblestone street that had these quaint little cafes on both sides. And now let's talk about describing buildings, structures, or landmarks with adjectives like iconic. And iconic means very famous or popular. And it's often referring to the symbol of something. And you may even use this word with landmark and talk about an iconic landmark. So if you travel to Sydney, Australia, the opera house is an iconic landmark. And then there's contemporary which means belonging to the present.

And often you're going to use this adjective to talk about well the architecture, the way that buildings or homes look. So I could say that well Dubai is a very modern city with contemporary architecture. And I'm really talking about the way the buildings look majestic. It means beautiful, powerful, and causing great admiration. And you could describe a structure as majestic. I could say the London Tower Bridge is majestic. The Golden Gate Bridge is majestic. The Liberty Bridge in Budapest right outside my door is majestic. And those are just some examples. You don't have to describe only bridges as majestic.

Now, let's talk about some adjectives that are well not so good like gaudy. So, if you say that, well, a building or a structure looks gaudy, then you're really saying that it's just unpleasantly bright or showy. So, I think that Las Vegas has some gaudy hotels and casinos. I know some others might think that they look majestic, but I think they look a little gaudy. Then there's another useful adjective, dilapidated, which means old and in poor condition. So, think of like a building that's well, it's starting to fall apart. So, if I said that the neighborhood was abandoned a long time ago and now the buildings are dilapidated. And then I have a few words to talk about. Well, just like a general location when referring to some place, like out of the way. And if you say that someplace is out of the way, it means that it's well just far away from where people usually live or go. And yes, you're probably referring to like a building or structure like uh a restaurant. Uh I could say, "We ate at this out of the way restaurant, but the food was really great." I'm really saying that the location was just far away from where people usually go. And then I have an idiom which is also an adjective phrase and that is off the beaten path or you could say off the beaten track. Both of them are okay. And this just means that a place is well not known or popular. And typically you're going to use this in a positive sense. I could tell you that I went hiking in Cordillera National Park in Costa Rica. It there were not many people around. It was off the beaten path and I really like that. And then we have godforsaken. And you would use this adjective to describe a place that is well unattractive and contains

These are verbs that you can use to describe different types of movement. And what I've done is that I've put them in categories to help you better understand the meaning of the verb, but also give you an idea as to when you might use these verbs. So, let's begin with walking and running. If you're talking about that movement, walking and running, there are different verbs that you can use. You can use strut. And if somebody is strutting, it's talking about the way somebody is walking and it is more of a very confident walk, perhaps even an arrogant walk as well. And you could say that that they are strutting.

The next one is stagger. And to stagger means to walk with great difficulty, almost as if you are about to fall over. And often I think you would use this verb in the the present tense like you're talking about something that's happening right now and you would say he is staggering or she is staggering. And also I think it's commonly used when referring to somebody who who maybe has had too much to drink. They've had a lot to drink. They don't really have a lot of control over what they're doing and they're walking with great difficulty. Then you could say that this person is staggering. Then we have the verb to bolt. And this is just to move really fast, almost like a run. And you might bolt to get somewhere. For example, I I often would use this if I'm talking about trying to get to an airplane and I'm late. And I might say, "Wow, I I bolted to the airplane. I was running behind and I had to run. I bolted to that airplane." The next verb is slip.

And this is talking about moving that you're you're moving quietly so that somebody doesn't notice you. And often you're going to follow this verb with a preposition. So you might slip by someone or slip past someone. Both of those mean the same thing. You're just trying to get by this person without being noticed. You could also slip inside or slip outside of some place. Maybe you forgot something at work and you don't want your boss to see you. You might slip inside the office and get whatever you need to get and then you're going to need to slip outside because you don't want anybody to see you. And then we have the verb to drag one's feet. Now, this is an idiom and it means that you are moving reluctantly. You're moving slowly, but you really don't want to be moving forward. And you could say, well, you know, you're you're dragging your feet. So, for example, let's say that, well, maybe you and I we're traveling somewhere and we're late. We need to get to the gate. And I'm like, okay, we need we need to go. We need to bolt to that airplane. But you just want to take your time a little bit. Maybe you're like, hey, let's go. Let's go get a snack before we get on the airplane.

Maybe I'll say, "Hey, you know, stop dragging your feet. We need to go. We need to bolt." Now, this idiom can also be used in other situations as well. It doesn't always have to be talking about movement. It could be referring to progress as well. So if you have some work that you need to do, but you're trying to avoid doing it, you are procrastinating, you could also say then that you're you're dragging your feet, that you're trying to avoid working on some project, you don't want to do it. I think we've all been there before, but maybe your your colleague, your co-orker, or even your boss might come over and tell you, "Look, you need to finish this project. Stop dragging your feet." Now, let's talk about some verbs that you can use if you're driving or flying.

And this means that you get a free ride with someone in in a vehicle. typically, you're talking uh about driving. You're you're on the road. You're standing on the road. You got your thumb out and you are trying to hitchhike to some location and perhaps somebody would stop and pick you up to hitchhike. Now, I think in I don't think it's as common nowadays. In some places, people might even say it's dangerous. But just so you know, in case you see somebody doing it on the side of the road, they are trying to hitchhike.

Another verb which I think is very common nowadays is carpool. to carpool with someone or carpool with others because it refers to traveling by car in a small group. Either to protect the environment or just to save money, perhaps save on using gas and and people will carpool to work or they will carpool to school and they'll ride together in a small group to carpool. Then we have the verb leapfrog and this just means to take turns moving ahead of each other. So, I think you would use this to describe a situation in which you're driving maybe on the interstate. One person is passing the other and then they pass you back and then you pass them again and back and forth you go.

And you could refer to this situation and you are leapfrogging each other to leapfrog. And I think this this happens uh when people perhaps are driving on an interstate and you want to pass a car and you go in front and then you're like, "Okay, I'm in front now." And then next thing you know, they pass you. They just leapfrog you and then you want to pass them again. That is the situation in which you might use this verb or or hear somebody talking about it to leapfrog. Then there's the verb swerve. to swerve. And you could use this where if talking about driving or flying. And what it means is it's a sudden change in direction, especially if somebody has been moving in a straight line and then they suddenly change directions and swerve to the left or swerve to the right to swerve. And finally, we have the verb soar, which is really for flying because it just means that you are flying high. And you could describe a plane and say that the plane is soaring through the air. It is flying high.

And I almost always I would think of a snake and you would say that the snake slithers. That is how snakes move. They they twist, they slide, and they slither. Or you could use the word wobble. I think of well I think of a penguin because it's talking about like moving. You're like going back and forth from side to side and you're walking with uh you're walking in a way that shows that there is poor balance because when penguins walk they they do they kind of shake and they almost look like they're about to fall over. They don't have very good balance and you could then say that they look like they are wobbling. They're just wobbling along and that is just that's how they move.

Then we have the verb gallop, which I think is often used to describe the way a horse moves because it refers to an animal who is running and all four feet are off the ground at the same time. They're running, the the horse is galloping. And then there is the verb wiggle. And I've included this verb because I think you could use it with if you're holding an animal and you're holding the animal and maybe the animal does not want to be held. So, it's going to start wiggling. It's going to move back and forth from side to side, up and down, and they're just these really small quick movements because maybe the animal is trying to escape. Perhaps you're holding a puppy and the puppy wants to get down and it just starts wiggling to wiggle. Now, let's talk about some verbs that you can use to well talk about situations. So, in this case, it's not really always going to be a physical movement that you're referring to, but we're talking about a situation that you may need to move in one way or another. Let me give you some examples about what I'm talking about. So the first one I have for you is approach. To approach. And this just means to get nearer and nearer to someone or something. Now we could use this verb to describe some actual physical distance, some situation. I could say, well, hey, we are uh approaching our final destination. We are getting nearer and nearer to this destination. But you could also use it if there is some problem or situation that you don't know how to solve. And you could say something like, okay, how are we going to approach this issue? How are we going to get closer to it? And in that case, you could use the word approach. How how are we going to approach this issue? How are we going to approach this problem? What is our plan?

What are we going to do? because we need to well get closer to it in order to solve it or or remedy some situation. How are you going to approach this? Then we have the verb circumvent. And what it means to circumvent something is to basically avoid something usually in a clever way. You're trying to go around some type of obstacle. For example, maybe well a situation that all of us have is well we have to pay taxes and perhaps there is some type of tax we we want to avoid. We want to we want to get around this and you might try to circumvent the tax law. And I could say, well, we discovered this new way to circumvent the tax laws and and we don't have to pay this tax. So if you want to circumvent something, you you're just trying to avoid it. you're trying to go around it in some clever way. And then we have the verb smuggle.

something is to to move something secretly. And often I think you're we're talking about something illegal. So you might hear it being used uh in the context of drugs. People might smuggle drugs. You could also smuggle other people, but in either case, you're talking about moving something secretly. And yes, it's often illegal to smuggle. Next is lag. And this just means that well, you're making slow progress. And it's usually behind some other people. So in that case, it's quite often that you would follow this verb with the preposition behind to lag behind someone or or you're lagging behind. You're making slow progress and well, you're behind everyone else. You are lagging. And then we have the verb spiral which it means that something some situation it's getting worse and worse and it's becoming more difficult to control. And quite often you would probably hear that entire phrase and you'd say that some situation it is spiraling out of control. That's that's not a good thing. You don't want any situation to spiral out of control. So I hope this lesson was easy to follow. I hope it was easy to understand these verbs by by breaking them into these different categories because that is the way I wanted to approach this lesson.

That that is how I wanted to approach this situation because the next time that you see someone moving, I hope you'll be able to identify that. If if you see somebody strutting or maybe you see them staggering or perhaps you see somebody on the road hitchhiking, you'll be able to associate that movement with the correct verb so that you can more accurately express your thoughts, opinions, and ideas. As always, I would encourage you to listen for these verbs. Try to identify them if you're reading something or even use them in conversation if you happen to be talking about the way something moves. I want to teach you 20 different nouns to help you describe people. And these nouns would describe somebody's well their profession or their personality or even their characteristics. So as I go through and we talk about these nouns again, I want you to try to associate these words with a person that you know.

Let's begin with with profession. maybe somebody's somebody's job, what they do for work, or maybe even a a position that they have for their work. And we will begin with the noun amateur. And if you say that someone is an amateur, it means that they they do some type of hobby or activity for fun. They are not a professional. This is not how they make a living. They don't typically get paid for it. And you could say that he or she is an amateur. The next noun is a tutor. Now, this noun, it it's talking about education because it's a person who will help a child uh study outside of school in order to give them extra help. And you would say that that this person is a tutor, maybe in math, in science, even in English. Anybody could have a tutor. Mostly we're talking about children, but it could be a high school student, a university student, even an adult, could have a tutor if they want extra help. Now, let's stick with education. And the next noun is a scholar. This is talking about a person who studies a subject in great detail, especially in university. And if they they study it for a long time and they know it very well, you could say that they are a scholar. Amy is a decorated scholar. She forged a successful career in journalism. Jimmy's met a new young lady.

Look, giddy. A man of letters is your book. The next noun is well, it's actually two nouns that mean the same thing. And that is big fish. Or you could say a big wig. And in either case, it's talking about a person who is powerful and important and it usually refers to a position within a company and maybe you're talking about the boss and they are the big wig or perhaps somebody else in the company and you say, "Wow, you know, this person, they're they're a big fish." All right, they're a very important, influential, and powerful person, a big fish or a big wig. Well, Lois, I'm off to my first day as a corporate bigwig. And we have information that a mobster by the name of Marco O moved to Paris about six months ago, he's the one. He's a big fish. Then we have the noun one's right hand.

And if you're talking about, well, one's right hand, you're not you're not really talking about the hand. You're talking about a person who supports someone else usually at work. And you could say, well, you know, uh, he's my right hand or she's my right hand. She's always helping me get stuff done and she supports my work. One's right hand. You may also use this as well another noun and people might say a right-hand man. And if somebody is like the right-hand man, then that is the person who would help somebody else uh especially at their work. A right-hand man. Then we have the word valid. Why am I having such trouble with this word? Then we have the word validictorian. And this is talking about the the person really the student who has the highest grades at the end of high school. So when high school finishes, the person with the highest grades, that person is the validictorian. And typically they will give a speech at the the graduating ceremony when school finishes. Now, I I don't know if this is the same for all high schools all over the world, but especially in the United States, the the person with the highest grades, they are called the valadictorian, and they would give a speech when when at the graduating ceremony, valadictorian.

I was not the validictorian. That is okay. But it's a word that you may hear if you're watching a TV show or movie and they're talking about somebody who was very smart in high school. They did very well and he or she was the valadictorian. Valadictorian. Yes.

Right now I'm the best student. I'm going to be the Velociraptor.

Now let's talk about nouns that are related to someone's personality. Kind of the talking about the type of person that that they are. So you could say that somebody is a dilotant and this is talking about a person who is very interested in a subject but doesn't really have a deep understanding of it. And I think all of us can relate to this that we might be interested in some area of study or or something in general whether it's cars, fashion, computers and we know about it because we're interested in it but we don't really have a deep understanding because well maybe it's not uh our job and you could say that that you know we are just dilotants in that regard. So for example, maybe somebody they're very interested in politics and you could say they are a political dilotant. They're interested in learning about it but it's not their job and you know they don't have a a very deep understanding of it.

Dilotant. Then we have the noun aicionado. And this is actually a Spanish word that that means fan. But an aficionado is a person who is very interested and enthusiastic uh in in learning about some topic. And you'd say, "Wow, you know, I am really a soccer aficionado. I love it." Or, "I am a cigar aicionado. There's actually a magazine about cigars called aicionado." And I could say that all of you are vocabulary aficionados because you are interested and enthusiastic about learning new words and phrases and you are not dilotants because you have a deeper understanding of these words. You're an aficionado. Then we have the word confidant. And if you say that somebody is a confidant, it is a person that you really trust and you are willing to share your feelings and secrets with that person. You could say that that he is my confidant that he Confidant of mine has told me that when he goes, Sansa Stark goes with him.

Your heart is true. You're a pal and a confidant. [music] Then we have the noun proponent. And this is talking about a person who speaks publicly in support of some plan or action. And you might often follow this word with the preposition of that that he is a proponent of some issue. She is a proponent of saving the dolphins. That she wants to publicly support it and talk to others about it. She's a proponent of saving the dolphins. I think all of us are are probably a proponent of something. If you think about something that you believe in that you want to support, then you could say you are a proponent of this thing. The next noun I have for you is a guru. And a guru is it's more of a spiritual leader if you're thinking about like Hinduism, but it's also somebody who is kind of a teacher as well. And you may hear this word used in that context. It makes me think of somebody who is wise and very spiritual and they want to help others and teach others and you could say that they are a guru. Then we have the noun gourmet. And if somebody is a gourmet then it means that they know a lot about food. They're very knowledgeable about food and they typically like to eat fancy and expensive food. And this person is a gourmet. I like it better than tuna helper myself. Don't you, Clark? You're the gourmet around here, Ed. What else did Lance tell you about me?

You're a real [music] gourmet. Oh, yeah. These sandwiches are delicious, Mrs.

Elton. You really are a gourmet.

Next is the noun humanitarian. And if you say that somebody is a humanitarian, it means that they are interested in in helping other people, especially people who may be suffering in some way. And they may be donating money, donating clothes. they they are involved in some type of activity and you could say well you know this person they're a great person they're a humanitarian personally I think all of us should be humanitarians and and we should try to give back and help others who are in need now let's talk about nouns that pretty much refer to people's characteristics their their their emotions their behaviors and you could say that somebody is well a coward and this is well it's not good to be called a coward because it's talking about a person who is typically afraid of a lot of things. They're they're very scared.

Somebody who is not brave. You could say that this person is a coward. We could also say that someone is an introvert. And if somebody is an introvert, it means that they are not very social. They're often quiet, a bit reserved. They typically may like to be left alone and have time to themselves. And you could say that this person is an introvert. Now, the opposite of an introvert is an extrovert. And this is somebody who well is very social. They like to go out a lot. They like to meet all different types of people. And typically, they're very talkative. And you would say that they are an extrovert. I think if you were to think of yourself, like for example, I I think I can be both. Sometimes I am more of an introvert and other times I might be more of an extrovert. and I like to to go out and try to meet people and I'm a little more social introvert and extrovert. Zelda was the sunny, funloving extrovert. Look at my pumpkin, Mr. Peanut Butter.

Whereas Zoe was a smart, cynical introvert. My pumpkin's throwing up because Halloween encourages excessive consumption of refined sugar at a time when obesity [music] rates are skyhigh.

Then we have the noun perfectionist. And if you say that somebody is a perfectionist, it means that that this person thinks that well everything needs to be perfect that they will not stop until they believe everything is perfect. And you would say that that he or she is a perfectionist. Now a word uh a noun that is a little similar to that but it's still different would be someone who is a purist. And if you describe someone as a purist, it means that that this person believes that things should be done in the traditional way. That we should follow the rules. We shouldn't do them in some other way. Follow tradition. And you could describe this person and say that they are a purist. [clears throat] TRIPLE TWIST. Nice work. You sure this was done by hand? Yeah, she's a real purist.

Hate those guys. As a Sesame Street purist, I don't think Elmo usually tells passing women that they have a sweet dumper. Repeat visitor traveling solo purist getting off on the undiluted experience. And then we have the noun whiz. And if

We also talk about our friends, our families, our colleagues. So many of these adjectives really describe someone's personality. Now when we use adjectives often we might use them before the noun in which case they are called attributive adjectives or they might follow a linking verb in which case they are a predicate adjective. As we go through these I will tell you which ones I think are more common as an attributive adjective before the noun or those that I think are more commonly found in the predicate and would follow a linking verb. So let's begin with overzealous. which means that someone is showing a little too much eagerness or enthusiasm almost to the point where well you you find it a little strange that they are this eager or they're this enthusiastic about something. So you could describe that person as being overzealous. So this is an adjective that you can use either before a noun or it can follow a linking verb either one. So you might describe people and say somebody has overzealous parents. They're showing a lot of enthusiasm for their kids.

They're Yeah. Her her parents are very overzealous. Perhaps perhaps when when our little girl gets older, maybe maybe I will be an overzealous parent and I will be so enthusiastic about everything she does. Or maybe you have some overzealous colleagues that anything that happens, they're always enthusiastic. Perhaps they're always eager to do things and you might think, "Well, they're a little overzealous." I imagine that you guys are overzealous students that you are so excited to build and learn new vocabulary. During the concert, some overzealous fans ran onto the stage.

Next is tenacious. This adjective means that somebody is just not giving up perhaps stubbornly that they just absolutely refuse to give up even though maybe maybe they should. Now when I think of this word I actually think it's used in more of a positive manner when you describe somebody as tenacious and they are not giving up. They refuse to give up. They're being very stubborn but they should keep going. It is a good thing that they don't give up in that sense. If you want to say, you know, well, you know, she is a tenacious student. She refuses to give up. Even though he's short, he always gives a tenacious effort.

Then we have candid. And if you say that someone is candid, then basically you're just saying that this person is truthful and that they are honest. So, we can use this adjective and and describe someone and say that they are a candid person or perhaps they give a candid response to a question. Personally, I think it's maybe more common to follow the linking verb to be and you would describe somebody that he is candid or she is candid. They are truthful and honest. And if you're describing somebody in that way, it's almost like you're trying to say, well, this person can be believed. We can trust this person because they are candid and they give candid responses.

And I guess I just I'm just going to keep using the word candid again and again so that it helps you remember the meaning. This candid photo shows some of the poor living conditions surrounding the city. Next is facitious and this is one of my favorite adjectives. Now, the first thing that I want to point out is the pronunciation. Because looking at this adjective, it it may not be pronounced the way that it's spelled. Facitious. That first syllable is going to have that schwah, that fu. And we're just basically going to pronounce the letter C. Facitious. Facitious. And what it means is that somebody is joking and they're not being serious and perhaps in a inappropriate way. in a in a sense they should be serious but they're joking around they are being facitious and I think it's commonly used just like that that in some kind of situation you're talking to somebody else and you're joking with this person perhaps they don't know about it and you have to tell them and say look I'm being facitious I'm joking I'm not being serious so that is a phrase that that you might often hear with this word somebody actually having to tell the other person say wait I'm being facitious. Or maybe you could say that of another person. If somebody doesn't understand that this person is joking, you say, "Well, look, he's being facitious. She's being facitious.

They are joking. They're being facitious." Sometimes it's hard to take my boss seriously because he's always being facitious. Then we have the word obtuse. Now, this is not a good adjective. You don't want to be called obtuse because what it means is that somebody is lacking in intelligence and maybe they're a bit slow to understand. And you would often use it with the linking verb to be and say that someone is obtuse that that they are slow to understand. And you could describe that person and say, "Yeah, you know, he's a bit obtuse. He's slow to understand. He doesn't he's not a very smart person. They're obtuse." Or if there's a situation and somebody it's like they don't want to hear the truth and they're trying to to deny it and they don't want to listen and you could say well they are being obtuse that they refuse to believe what is obvious what is sensible but they they just don't want to believe it. They're being obtuse.

Sometimes my uncle can be so obtuse he refuses to listen to anyone. Next is the word borish. And again, this it's not a great adjective. You don't want to be referred to as a borish person because it means that someone is rude or insensitive. And often I think it's used before the noun behavior. And this is a commonly used collocation. And you might describe somebody's behavior is borish. Their borish behavior. It's rude. It's insensitive. They may exhibit borish behavior. Keep in mind that this adjective is unrelated to the word boring. That is a very common adjective, but they have different meanings. If somebody is borish, they are rude or insensitive. Borish behavior.

His borish behavior caused me to hang up on him. Then we have jittery. And this is another great adjective and it's used to describe someone who is nervous and they are unable to relax. Often I think it's used as a predicate adjective and you'd say someone is jittery. So there is probably some kind of situation that would make someone nervous. They're unable to relax and you could describe them as jittery. Perhaps uh they have to give a very important presentation and before the presentation you could say, "Wow, you know, he he's really jittery." It's also used in a situation that if somebody just they're unable to relax because they want to leave. For example, I have been in some very long teachers meetings in my life and the meetings just go on and on and on and I just I don't want to sit there anymore and I start to get jittery. I start moving around. I start shaking my legs and I just I want to get out of there. I can't relax. I'm jittery. The boy was so jittery. He had a tough time staying seated. Then we have capricious. Now with this one again, let's first look at the pronunciation. That first syllable has the schwa sound, that h sound, and then the p r i is just pronounced as pre capricious. Capricious. And what this means is that someone or something is impulsive or unpredictable. So you could use this adjective and say that well the weather is capricious. It's unpredictable. You don't know what's going to happen. Or if you describe a person as capricious, it makes me think of somebody who maybe they make a decision and then they change their mind almost immediately and want to do something else and then they change their mind again and want to do something completely different. You could say that they are capricious. Or maybe a person is a capricious shopper.

Capricious shopper. Capricious shopper. That's hard to say. Capricious shopper. Capricious shopper. Capricious shopper. I I I actually would just say that that person is capricious. That they are impulsive. They are unpredictable. And you might describe them as capricious. Because of his capricious nature, he couldn't commit to chewing just one thing. Then we have the adjective gullible. And this just means that a person is easily persuaded to believe something. Essentially, they just believe whatever you tell them. They are gullible. It often follows that verb to be. And I think we've all met people before in our lives who are pretty gullible. Whatever you tell them, they they just believe you. So, this is a great example of when if you are being facetious, they are not going to understand that you're joking.

They will believe you because they are gullible. And then you would have to tell them, look, I'm being facetious. I'm not being serious. I think it's also used to describe somebody in a temporary situation because let's be honest, we've all been gullible at one point or another. So, in that case, I think of perhaps somebody is trying to trick somebody else or maybe there is some sort of scam and you for some reason you fall for it. You're not thinking clearly. You could say, you know, I you know, I was just gullible. I don't know why I believe this thing, but I did. I was gullible. I couldn't believe I fell for this internet scam. I was so gullible.

Then we have adamant. And this adjective means that a person is refusing to change their mind or be persuaded. Often I think this adjective is followed by the preposition about. You are adamant about something that you just refuse to believe anything else. And often I think of maybe some sort of cause that a person is fighting for. They are very passionate about this cause and you could say they are adamant about this thing. I am adamant about protecting the environment. Uh I am adamant about teaching you guys vocabulary. I refuse to believe that you will not learn and build your vocabulary. I am adamant about teaching it to you. I think we can all think of different things that we are adamant about that we we just want this thing to happen. We won't be persuaded otherwise you are adamant about something.

The doctor was adamant she have surgery immediately. Then we have feckless and this is used to describe a person who is weak or or ineffective and just really lacking in the strength of character that this person is feckless. And I think it might be also used to describe somebody's personality or their traits. For example, you might say that someone is a feckless leader. They are an ineffective leader because they they lack that strong character. They are feckless. The coach's feckless leadership led the team to their worst record in school history. So, I want to be honest. I I want to be candid with you that when you are building your vocabulary, I hope that two adjectives that I could use to describe you would be overzealous, that you are just eager to learn new words, and that that you're tenacious, too.

That you are not going to give up for whatever reason. So, that is what I hope for. And I am absolutely not being facetious when I say that. I'd also like you to do a little bit of an association trick right now. If I just say the word jittery, who are you thinking about in your life? Try to associate these words with somebody that you know because that's going to help you better remember the meaning and actually retain that information and you won't forget it. I'm going to teach you some different words and phrases that you can use so that that you can be very specific if you want to talk about another person and describe their personality, their behavior. So there are different adjectives and nouns that we can use to describe people. And I want to start with some adjectives.

So the first word that I have for you is charismatic. other people and they can easily get people's attention. Just because you say that someone is charismatic, that does not mean that it's a good thing. It sounds like a good thing and it can be a compliment, but it does not always mean that the person you're talking about is a good person. It's really just their behavior, the way they act, they have that influence and they can easily get people's attention. Well, because of the way they talk, the way they speak, and you could say that yes, this person is charismatic. The most popular scandal-free athletes of all time. He's heroic. He's charismatic.

And he's retiring. the charismatic guy promising to make America great again. You were the most remarkable person I know and I met Jal White, incredibly charismatic. You mean to tell me this all happened cuz you were messing with the shadow man?

Then we have the word chatty. And if somebody is chatty, it just means that well, they like to talk a lot, usually in a very friendly and informal way. You could say he or she is chatty. Now, the one thing I would say about this word is that it's often used to make an observation about someone else. You wouldn't often hear people say that, "Oh, I'm so chatty." It's not really. It's not necessarily a good or a bad thing, but you would use it more to make an observation and talk about the way somebody else is acting that they are talking a lot. And you could use it to describe a person's uh somebody's personality.

She's so chatty. Maybe my parents are right. Maybe I'd be better off with an Indian girl. Something wrong, boy.

But you can start with clearing those empties. Great. I'll get right on.

Not very chatty today, are you?

I don't know. Is there something you wanted to talk about? And the next word that I have for you, the next adjective is sirly. And this just means that someone is not very friendly and they're often in a bad mood. Let me show you a picture which really captures this word right here. All right. Now, we would often use these words to describe people, but you could use them to describe animals as well. This picture, it is a perfect example of sirly because that that is one sirly cat. Sometimes you can come off a little sirly. What? I'm not sirly.

That's it. She gets very sirly [music] when you disobey a direct order.

You're a different breed than our sort.

You're sirly, suspicious. You don't play well with others. Then we have the phrase levelheaded. And if you describe someone as levelheaded, it means that that this person is calm and they're able to easily deal with difficult situations. And I think this is it's definitely a good thing if somebody calls you levelheaded. I think that all of us probably want to be levelheaded and think that we can solve difficult situations and remain calm. LA's so nice.

Everyone's so genuine and level-headed.

Okay, first of all, women don't like to be called dame. Second, women appreciate calm uh levelheaded and uh responsible.

Mom, I'm not stoned. I'm completely fine. In fact, I'm more clear and level-headed than I've ever been. Then we have the phrase easygoing. And this is used to describe someone who is well they're very relaxed and they they don't easily get worried or upset. And you could say that well this person they're just they're just easygoing. Nothing bothers them. They don't worry about anything because they're easygoing. I've always thought I was pretty easygoing. You know it's not like I have the big issues. Disappointed with you, Margo.

But you seem so easygoing. Thought you'd let me try on a dress.

What can I say? I'm an easygoing gal.

Next is absent-minded. And this phrase

Thought you'd know about it.

And so we do. Of course we do. I'm sorry I was being absent minded. [music] Oh yes. Oh yes, of course.

She is an old dear but a little absent minded. Then I have a couple of phrases that I'm going to put them together. And that is above average and below average. And these phrases are used to describe uh someone that is well higher or lower or better or worse than the usual amount or level. So you would use these phrases just to be a little more specific about your opinion as to this person's perhaps their ability. And you could say that that somebody is a below average tennis player. or maybe I I guess I would like to think that I am an above average English teacher. That's what I'd like to think. But it's a these are great phrases that you can use when you want to describe maybe even your own ability or talk about somebody else's ability, above average or below average.

Wow. With above average height comes above average responsibility. Until then, I'll just keep bringing him his uh below average pancakes and soggy bacon.

Do you think I'm an idiot?

No, I'd say you possess above average intelligence. Corporal Dawson was given a below average rating, committed a crime.

Then we have the adjective grumpy. And if you say that someone is grumpy, it means that they are easily annoyed and maybe they're usually complaining. They're always they're complaining about something. You could say, "Gosh, you're you're always so grumpy." And to give you another example, let's just bring up another cat here. This is a picture of a grumpy cat. Now, let's switch and talk about some nouns that can be used to describe people. And the first one, because we just talked about someone who may be grumpy, is a grump. All right, we can use this word as a noun as well. And a grump is a person who's not a very friendly person and that it's somebody who usually is complaining about something. You could say that this person is a grump. Or you could have a little fun with the word and throw the adjective and noun together and say that somebody is a grumpy grump. They are really complaining a lot. They're a grumpy grump. Stanley Hudson IS A GRUMP. EVERYBODY KNOWS THAT. Miss Melons is off today. So we have Mr.

Cooper teaches us biology. SUCH A GRUMP. NO WAY. I bet you'd make way more money being nice than being a big grumpy grump to everyone all the time. The next noun that I have for you is a jack of all trades. And if you say that somebody is a jack of all trades, it refers to a person that is capable of doing many different jobs and they would typically do those jobs well. And when I say different jobs, I'm talking about a a variety of of really different things. So perhaps somebody is able to fix cars. This person is a great programmer. This person is an excellent cook and they can do all of these different things and they are very capable at doing them. You could say that he or she is a jack of all trades. What if Big Head is sort of like a floating utility player? Kind of like a like a jack of all trades. I listen I'm so much more. Um I'm kind of a jack of all trades, if you will. The next phrase I have for you is a darkhorse. And this just refers to a person who is not expected to succeed or win, but then they suddenly do. They they suddenly do win. And you could say that this person, wow, they were a dark horse, but they won the competition. So often it is used in that context when talking about some competition.

Oo, a dark horse candidate.

Late entry to the race. But what's this? A dark horse is challenging Gany. Any contestants worth mentioning?

Maybe. There's kind of a dark horse in the running. So, uh, here it is one more time. The dark [music] horse for this year's Christmas number one. Christmas is all around. Thank you, Billy. Then we have the phrase black sheep which refers to a person who embarrasses a group or a family because they're they're different in some way and perhaps they've done something they've gotten into trouble or they've done something wrong and because of that and they've embarrassed the family. You could say that he or she is a black sheep. Now it does not always have to mean that that they've done something wrong. It could just be that that they're just different in some way and maybe everybody else thinks it's a little strange. I think within all families there is somebody maybe a brother, sister, aunt, uncle, cousin who is a little different from everyone else and maybe other people think that that it's a little strange. You could say that that this person is a black sheep.

Third brother in the middle, Gary. Yeah, the black sheep. The drunk.

Do you know what's a black sheep?

No. It's like when you're different to everyone else. The cones are like family, Neil.

Maybe they're about to become the black sheep. Everybody [music] thinks I'm the black sheep. Well, I'll show them what a black sheep can do.

Then we have the phrase know-it-all. And this refers to a person that just they think they know everything. and you could describe them and say that he or she is a know-it-all. And this is a phrase that it's you wouldn't use it as a compliment. So, it's not something you would say about yourself, but if somebody else they they're not being very humble and they're they're being a little too proud. They think they're so smart. You could tell them and say, "Oh, you're such a know-it-all." Which means you're not taking your s word like you should. You're such a know-it-all. She's so rigid and demanding or she's a complete know-it-all.

Hey, it's me,

the know-it-all. What are you doing here? Next is the phrase wise guy. And this refers to a person who is trying to be clever in a way that's a little annoying. So typically you would say this to a person, not really to be very mean to them, but really just kind of call them out on the way they are behaving, the way they're acting. They're trying to be clever, but they're really being a little annoying and you're such you're such a wise guy. Stop stop being such a wise guy.

DELIVERY RIGHT HERE. I CAUGHT A BAD PEPPERONI.

The wise guy.

Okay. Okay. Hey, who's the wise guy?

Hey. Hey. Hey, does this look like a petting zoo to you? Huh?

Okay. All right, wise guy, you just started a timeout. Then we have the phrase stick in the mud. And this is this is one of my favorite phrases. Uh it's it's a noun

that's used to describe somebody who is old-fashioned and they just kind of want to avoid having fun. If somebody does not like to have fun and they're kind of ruining it for everyone else, you could say that they are a stick in the mud. Typically, if somebody is a surirly person and maybe they're just complaining because they're so grumpy, you could tell them that that they are a stick in the mud as well.

Why don't you take a few pictures, have a few laughs? Jeez, Eddie, what a stick in the mud. You were a stick in the mud when we judged that beauty pageant and you're being a stick in the mud now.

I am not a stick in the mud. I just want to stop a party from happening.

Then we have the phrase yes man. And this is talking about a person who is always trying to please a superior and they are saying things and doing things in order to please that person. I I I think it's often used in the context of uh work because if somebody is always trying to make their boss happy and whatever their boss asks them to do, they just say yes. And he's a yes man. Not all the time. Sometimes I'll say I don't like something. He says he doesn't like it either. It's very presidential of me, don't you think? Absolutely. You're not turning into a yes man, are you? I'm becoming a corporate yes man. Like, yes, Mr. George Bush. Whatever you say, Mr. George Bush.

Then we have the word sitter. Now, this noun refers to someone who who takes care of of someone else. Now, I I think the word is shortened. Typically, it's used to refer to a babysitter. a babysitter, someone who takes care and looks after a baby. But it could be shortened to just a sitter. You can also use this with other nouns as well. For example, you could say that somebody is a housesitter and they are taking care and looking after another person's house. Or perhaps they are a dog sitter or a catsitter and they are taking care of somebody else's pets. A babysitter, a house sitter, a cats sitter, a dog sitter, a pet sitter. [sighs and gasps] I think that's about it for for for sitters. Three cities in six days. My head is just pounding.

I already got a sitter. Can you cancel her? So, what you're saying is if I can get an acceptable babysitter here before you leave, I can go patrol. Babysitter? I'm 14. I'm old enough to be a babysitter. And thank you for reminding me I can't find a freaking catsitter. I'm not going. A regular dog sitter is ill. Wonder if he'd know enough to go to my brother's place in Paris. Maybe they have a house sitter. So, I hope you learn some new words and phrases, and I'm sure that you will remember them because you are not absent-minded. You You are a very levelheaded person. You will remember these words and phrases. And I I hope that you can use them if you're having a conversation. Maybe you're feeling a little chatty and you're talking to other people and you can practice using these words and phrases and just tell them how much you know, but maybe they will think that you are a know-it-all. Now that you've learned all of those descriptive words and phrases, let's have a look at some vocabulary that is at a C1 level. Now, this is an advanced level and would signify that you are a proficient speaker. But still, even though it's advanced, these words and phrases are commonly used. And that's why it's incredibly important to know how and when to use this vocabulary. And what I've done is I've separated the lesson into different categories based on the part of speech, nouns, verbs, phrases, etc. in hopes that it makes it a little easier for you to understand and follow along. So, without further ado, let's learn some C1 vocabulary.

this lesson is going to be helpful and useful. And all things considered is the first phrase that I would like to teach you. So you would use this phrase when you're trying to say that something is true or good in general when you consider all of its aspects. And like you're saying that a situation's not perfect, but in general it's pretty good. And often I think you may use this phrase when you're referring to an event, like the success of an event. So, if we're talking about a wedding, I could say, "The wedding was a great success, all things considered." There's a lot of planning that goes into a wedding. Some things may go wrong, but you could say, "All things considered, it was a great success." I also want to teach you the pronunciation of these phrases so that you can say them accurately and clearly.

And with this phrase, the only thing that I'd like to point out is that there's a bit of co-articulation going on with that final dark L and all. And then you move right in to that voiceless th in things because the tip of your tongue is going to be behind your top front teeth. And it's like we can just connect those two words. All things. All things considered. lucky Dwight was there. Bit by bit is the next phrase that I'd like to teach you. So this is a binomial pair which is talking about an expression that has two words joined by a conjunction and that conjunction it's often and or or but in this case it's not. We're talking about by bit by bit.

And what this means is gradually you're going to do something gradually. Often I think that you would use this when talking about something you're going to grow or develop or even just the opposite, something that you're going to destroy or take apart. So I could say that I am trying to grow this channel bit by bit. I'm doing it gradually and hopefully it'll get bigger and bigger. You may be thinking is there really any difference between bit by bit and little by little which is also another binomial pair and they really have a similar meaning. Uh, I would say that little by little is more commonly used. It's actually a B2 phrase. But if you know that binomial pair, then you should have no trouble using bit by bit. And for pronunciation, there's not really anything too difficult going on here. There's a little bit of alliteration. When you have the same sound said again and again, bit by bit, you hear that B sound. So, in that case, it's pretty fun to just say bit by bit, bit by bit. Then I sat back and watched Mariati destroy my reputation bit by bit.

Let's just stay with the B sound with our next phrase, which is before you know it. And this just means very soon.

So when you use this phrase, you're emphasizing that something is going to happen quickly and suddenly. And before I give you some examples, I I want to talk about the pronunciation. And I really want you to pay attention to the linking that occurs at the end of this phrase. So you have that wconsonant sound in no. It's going to get linked with the vowel sound in it. That beginning vowel sound. No wit. And people will generally say this phrase together. They'll say it quickly. So linking will occur when you use this phrase before you know it. First she's texting at work and then she's not doing her homework and then she's hanging out with the bad kids and before you know it she's pregnant. To give you a few more examples, I could say, "I know flying gives you some anxiety, but the plane will be on the ground before you know it." Or perhaps someone's pregnant and you say, "Congratulations.

Last week, out of the blue, she said that we should move in together. And I didn't know that our relationship was that serious. It just happened out of the blue. So, I use this adverb phrase once at the beginning of the statement and then at the end. You can kind of move it around a little bit. And once again, this phrase has a similar meaning to another phrase, which is out of nowhere, except out of nowhere is a B2 phrase. But when you're building your vocabulary, it's good to get a little variety when you're having a conversation or in this case, when you're telling a story, and you can use different phrases. For pronunciation, the one thing that I want you to keep in mind is that final T in out. I'm from the United States.

So with the American accent, I'm going to pronounce that T as a flap T. It's going to sound like a soft D. And then I will link it with the vowel sound in of. It's going to sound like out of. Out of the blue. And because you're emphasizing something that happens, people will say this quickly and they will link those words together.

Everything was going great until he suddenly reappeared out of the blue, but that dumb dumb ran his mouth. The next phrase is at a glance. This means to see something immediately or quickly. And people may use this phrase with the word quick and say at a quick glance. You're just adding a little emphasis to the speed. Or someone might say at first glance. That's another collocation with this phrase, saying that you looked at something quickly, but then you had to look at it closer. Or maybe you looked at it again. To show you how it's used in context, uh, I could say, "I could tell at a glance that something was wrong. Everyone looked worried." Or, "I recognized her at a glance. She was the woman from the party." And for pronunciation, once again, that t in at, I'm going to pronounce it with a flap t. And then I will link it with the vowel sound in uh, that article. At a at a glance. At a glance. We're going to line the front seat and the back seat and the floorboards with some blankets. Cop stops us and starts sticking his big snout in the car. The subterfuge won't last. At a glance, the car will appear to be normal. Then there's the phrase to have something against someone. And this just means to dislike someone for a reason. And even though the meaning is pretty simple and straightforward, the usage of this phrase can be a bit challenging because the something is your reason. And let's say you don't like someone because uh they stole something. I I would not say I have stealing against him. That just sounds awkward. Instead, the reason that something it's often well, it's not going to exist or it's going to be unknown. So, let's talk about a reason that just doesn't exist. In this case, you're basically saying that you have no reason to dislike someone. And people may use this with the words nothing or anything. So I might say I have nothing against him. We just don't have anything in common. So I don't have any reason to dislike him.

The reason it just doesn't exist. But maybe you don't have anything in common and therefore you're not friends or using anything. I don't have anything against her. We just don't get along. So once again, the reason why I dislike this person just doesn't exist. But maybe again with some people, you don't end up getting along and you're not friends. If we're talking about a reason that is unknown, well then people may ask a question and use this phrase like why were you so mean. What do you have against her? So again, it's unknown the reason. So that's why I'm asking the question, what do you have against her? Or you could just use this in a statement if I'm asking you like, well, look, I don't know what you have against me, but we really need to find a way to work together. So again, what you have against me is that noun clause, but I'm still talking about a reason that is uh that is unknown. I don't know what you have against me, but I know that's that's just an example. You know, we're friends. We get along. I think we work well together. But if we're talking about the pronunciation of this phrase, uh I'd like to point out that elision may occur if the someone is him or her. And elision is when you remove uh a certain sound or even syllable. So in this case, we're talking about that h in him or her. And if it gets removed, well then we can link that final t in against with the vowel sound. So it'll sound like against him or against her. What do you have against him? What do you have against her? And elision may occur when you're pronouncing this phrase. You don't care very much for our community, do you, Mr. Walsh? I have nothing against your community, Mr. Puit. The next C1 phrase that I have for you is to look on the bright side. And this just means to find good things in a bad situation. And you would tell someone to look on the bright side. So think about it in the context of trying to cheer someone up and there's a bad situation and you tell them look on the bright side and then you would follow it with a reason and that's really important. So you're telling them to cheer up, try and stay positive and then you got to give them a reason why. If you just say look on the bright side and don't say anything else, then it's going to seem a little strange. So, let's say you tear your new shirt and you're really upset about it and I'm trying to cheer you up and I say, "Hey, look on the bright side." Now, you get to go shopping for some new clothes and you get to find a new shirt and you can look on the bright side. When you're pronouncing this phrase, just keep in mind that once again, linking will occur.

Look on the bright side.

What's the bright side? Only nine more months to ComicCon.

Oh yeah.

To take issue with. So this just means to strongly disagree with someone or something. And you could just use this instead of saying I disagree. I take issue with that. And it just gives it a little bit of emphasis. I take issue with teachers who use corporal punishment. Or we took issue with the changes they made to the contract. Or you're not going to hit the like button. I take issue with that. Okay? I just I disagree with that. And of course, I'm just kidding. You you can do whatever you want. But when you are pronouncing this phrase, keep in mind that we can link the final consonant sound in take with the beginning vowel sound in issue.

Take issue. And you can start to see a theme here that linking commonly occurs in many of these phrases.

Daddies thought we already are.

Cool your tongue, airman, because I intend to take issue with your performance.

Then we have to keep a low profile. And this means to avoid attracting attention to yourself. And I think that we can all relate to this phrase right now. Can you think of a time when you were trying to keep a low profile? Perhaps you go to some social event, maybe a party, and you really don't feel like talking to many people, so you try to keep a low profile. Or or perhaps at work, maybe you showed up late or you forgot to submit something. You don't want to attract attention to yourself, so you try to keep a low profile. And for pronunciation, yes, more linking. We can link that consonant sound in keep with that schwa sound in the article uh keep. Keep a low profile. Advice for me on my new position.

Keep a low profile.

If I had a gold dragon, for every time I heard that joke, I'd be richer than you are. Then we have the phrase in accordance with. And this means in a way that agrees with or follows. And typically you're talking about agreeing with or following a rule or a law. And because of the meaning that you're following a rule or a law, I think it's likely that you may hear this phrase being used in a more formal situation. So I could say the Justice Department acted in accordance with the new law. or to be honest, I could get banned from YouTube if I am not in accordance with YouTube's terms of service. So, in both of those examples, it's a little more formal because I'm talking about following a rule or a law. Now, when you pronounce this phrase, of course, we can link those first two words. We can link that consonant N and in with the vowel sound in accordance in accordance. And keep in mind that final syllable in accordance even though it's spelled d a n c e. You're not going to say dance. It's going to have that schwa sound. It's going to sound like dunce. In accordance with in accordance with FAA rules. The first two people to the front will be upgraded to first class.

Okay. You two. The next couple of phrases are more related to driving. And the first one is back road. So, a back road refers to a small road that does not have a lot of traffic on it. So, maybe you're just trying to avoid traffic or avoid those busy streets and you take some back roads. And one thing I want to point out is that I think you'll often use this with the plural roads because when you're driving, if you're trying to avoid traffic, you're probably not just going to stay on one road. You may take several different ones. And that's why people often talk about back roads. I know some back roads that we can take in order to avoid rush hour traffic. And the pronunciation of this phrase is pretty simple and straightforward. You just say those two words as they are back roads.

I'm glad we took the back roads.

Then there's bear left or bear right.

This means to change direction slightly so that you're going in a particular direction. in this case, left or right. And I think these phrases are very useful, especially if you're giving directions and you want to be specific because some roads, especially some of those back roads, uh, they they may not always have a full left turn or right turn. And I would say, hey, up ahead, you're you're going to want to bear left. And then after that, the road's going to intersect with another one. And when that happens, you should bear right. All right? I'm just trying to be a little more specific. And I also want you to keep in mind that the word bear, this is a homonym. Do not think about the animal.

it means to change directions slightly. And again, we're just going to provide that extra bit of information to bear left or bear right. And for pronunciation, the only thing I want to say about well, just one of the phrases, bear right, you have that overlapping R sound. That final R in bear and the beginning R and right just allows you to move from one word right into the next. Bear right or maybe we'll bear left.

That's cute. Huh? Now, I know some of these phrases may be challenging, but I want you to look on the bright side. As you continue to build your vocabulary bit by bit, well, then you will continue to develop your overall English fluency.

You just need to keep reviewing these phrases from time to time and before you know it, they'll become a part of your active memory and you'll be able to use them easily and naturally. agree with me and you don't take issue with what I just said. I would love it if you write to me down in the comments, unless you're trying to keep a low profile. In that case, I understand. And sometimes it can be difficult to differentiate between two words. But that's why I'm here. I want to teach you some of the slight nuances to help you be more precise and easily differentiate between different words and phrases. So let's begin with a verb that I have mentioned twice already. Differentiate.

This means to show or find the difference between two things that are compared. So, it may be difficult to differentiate between American and British English, software and hardware, facts and opinions. And you're often going to follow this verb with the preposition between to differentiate between two things. Transporter cannot differentiate between Dr. McCoy and the torpedo.

Michael, I cannot differentiate between the hostages and the guards.

A program that could differentiate between foreign and domestic. When pronouncing this verb, there are five syllables and the stress is on that third syllable. Differentiate.

Differentiate. Keep in mind that the t i a t e at the end of the word has a shate sound. So this is when the spelling and pronunciation don't really match. Differentiate. And if you are someone who would like to be able to differentiate between words and phrases that are similar, then let me help you develop your vocabulary. The next verb is broaden. This means to increase the range of something. And there are some great collocations with this verb. These are words that are frequently used together. So you can broaden your horizons. This is an idiom that means you're increasing the range of things you know about or your experiences. You can also broaden your mind. In this case, you're increasing the knowledge that you have about something. You can broaden the scope of something. And if we were talking about politicians, they may need to broaden their support. Let me show you some news headlines so you can see how this verb is used in context. Local historian urges town to broaden horizons when it comes to school names. Does travel broaden the mind? Not according to new research. US and China agree to broaden talks in bid to ease tensions. When pronouncing this verb, there are two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. Broaden. Now, one thing I want you to be aware of is that you may hear people pronounce this with a glottle stop. So listen to the difference between broaden and broaden the the sounds coming from the throat down here. Broaden broaden. It's something that you may hear and hopefully it's easy for you to differentiate between the two pronunciations of this verb. But generally you can just stick with broaden to broaden your horizons. And if you would like to broaden your horizons when it comes to pronunciation, then I think it's very important that you practice. And the next one that I have for you is grasp. It has two different meanings. The first one is to quickly take something in your hand or hands and hold it firmly. So this is a very descriptive verb. He grasped my hand or she grasped my arm or the child slipped from my grasp. There are some other phrases that have a similar meaning. You can grasp an opportunity. You're taking it eagerly. And there's an idiom, grasp at straws. It means that you're trying to find a way to succeed, but whatever you choose, it's probably not going to help you. So, think about the situation. You are holding tightly or grasping something weak like a straw. And because of that, it's not likely to save you. I tried going back to work like you.

Honestly, I'm just grasping at straws and Cooper was one of those straws.

Mr. President, it doesn't matter where we debrief this man. The fact is we're grasping at straws here. The other meaning of this verb is to understand something, especially something difficult. I could tell you the child was able to grasp the main idea of the story. Or if I am able to explain these verbs well, then you will be able to easily grasp the meaning of these verbs and know how to use them correctly. When pronouncing this verb, I think it's pretty simple and straightforward. Grasp. But just say it with me, grasp. Excellent. Then we have the verb diminish. This means to reduce or be reduced in size or importance. So, you can diminish something. As we get older, our muscle strength tends to diminish. At least that's what's happening to me. But you could also diminish someone. And this has a little bit more of a negative connotation. I could say his careless mistakes diminished him in the eyes of management. So, in this case, the mistakes reduced his importance.

Just makes things seem small. It diminishes them. You must prepare for life and whatever it will throw at you.

The opportunities will diminish.

I am shocked, sir. I like the hell you are.

Diminish you? Laying the groundwork for a challenge in 2016. For pronunciation, the verb has three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. Diminish.

Diminish. To diminish something or to diminish someone. Fall flat. This is an idiom, but we're going to use it as a verb to fall flat. This is said when a joke, suggestion, or idea does not have the intended effect. Now, most of the time you're going to use this when talking about jokes. So, right now, I'm going to tell you a couple of jokes, and you can let me know in the comments if they fall flat. If I am what I eat, then I'm fast, cheap, and easy. It's a little ridiculous. Here, here's another one. You know what they say, never go to bed angry. Stay up and fight. So, I suppose one or both of those jokes fell flat. It did not have the intended effect of laughter, but you can let me know. For pronunciation, I don't think it's that difficult. Fall flat. The only thing I want to point out is that there is alliteration. An alliteration is the repetition of the initial consonant sound in two words that are next to each other or close to each other. Fall flat. I hope that my jokes did not fall flat.

For your attempts at mockery fall flat.

Let's call it a joke that fell flat and leave it at that. Robert and Sarah's textures fell flat.

A huge performance tomorrow where a man's joke is going to fall flat.

Next is the verb contradict. And it also has two meanings. It really depends if we're talking about people or statements, but if we're talking about people, it just means that someone is saying something that is the opposite of what someone else said. And people can contradict each other. This happens all the time. Her testimony contradicted the policeman's story. You could also contradict yourself. And often you may follow this verb with that reflexive pronoun. If I were to say, I can tell you everything that you need to know, but I don't know anything about that. I just contradicted myself in saying the opposite. When using this verb to talk about a statement or a fact, it just means that some statement or fact is so different than another statement or fact that one of them must be wrong. I could say new evidence contradicts the established theories on this subject.

They're so different that yeah, one of them must be wrong. Just keep in mind that when someone or something contradicts someone or something else, it's not really telling us which one is right or correct. It's just saying that they're either opposites or different. To give you a little more context with this verb, here are some more news headlines. Video evidence appears to contradict Lauren Boowbert's denial that she was vaping at Beetlejuice show. OPEC figures contradict Iran's oil production claims. Opinion: Liberal climate policies are fine on their own, but contradict each other when together. When pronouncing this verb, it has three syllables and the stress is on that third syllable. Contradict. I will try not to contradict myself. Then I have another idiom for you which we'll use as a verb and that is to set foot in some place. This means to go to a place or to enter a place. And you're really going to use this idiom when you want to add emphasis and there's some emotion involved. I could say, "I'm afraid to set foot in my hometown because it's no longer peaceful and quiet and I'm just afraid to go to this place." or I'm so angry at my brother I refuse to set foot in his home and I refuse to enter his home. So hopefully you can sense that emotion. I haven't set foot in a bar in years.

If you set foot in this store ever again, I will bring hell down on you.

Unless Cersei grants us an audience and is somehow convinced not to murder us the moment we set foot in the capital.

When pronouncing this idiom, it's pretty easy to say the individual words, but I want you to say it as a phrase. So, I want you to think about that final T in foot. I'm from the United States, so I am going to pronounce this as a flap T. It's going to sound like a soft D. This is very common with the American accent when the T comes between two vowel sounds. And then we can link that final consonant sound that flap t with the beginning vowel sound in in. And it's going to sound like foot in to set foot in. Just listen for it. I refuse to set foot in there. Then we have the verb allocate. And this means to distribute something for a particular purpose. And there are some great collocations with this verb. You can allocate resources or allocate money or allocate funds or even allocate blame. I could say the city allocated money for disaster relief. Or the company's profits were allocated to its shareholders. And in these sentences, I want to point out that this verb may often be followed with the preposition for or to. to allocate for something or to allocate to someone.

For every $100 we allocate to research, we spend nearly 30,000 on care.

In response to your repeated inquiries, it has allocated the enclosed funds for your library project.

For pronunciation, the verb has three syllables. The stress is on the first syllable and that second syllable has that unstressed schwa sound. Allocate.

Allocate. Then we have the verb collaborate. I like this verb. It's a great one when talking about work because it means to work with someone else for a special purpose. And often you may follow this verb with the prepositions with, on, to, or in. I collaborated with my friend. Collaborate with someone. We collaborated on a project. collaborate on something. We collaborated to create new guidelines for the company. Collaborate to do something. We collaborated in implementing the guidelines companywide. Collaborate in doing something. For pronunciation, the verb has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. The first and third syllable have that unstressed schwa sound, that uh sound. Collaborate.

Collaborate. I'm sure that at work we have all collaborated with someone.

Do you want to collaborate on something?

I collaborated with my designer. It was a match made in [music] heaven. The aliens are thinking as we are to collaborate in producing explosion.

Next is the verb generalize. This means to make a statement that something is true in all cases based on what is true in some cases. I think we can all relate to this verb because people often generalize when talking about groups. So, I'm generalizing when I say salespeople often lie to make more money or dogs are more affectionate than cats [sighs] or politicians are Okay, I'm I'm generalizing and I'm joking, but perhaps that joke didn't fall flat. Let's look at some more news headlines to see how this verb is used in context. Let's not generalize about the kids these days. Don't generalize the LGBTQ community. Smart brands won't generalize when it comes to Gen Z. For pronunciation, there are four syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. Generalize.

Generalize. One one thing I'll say is that you may hear people say the word without that schwa sound and that schwa sound will elide and it's going to sound more like it has three syllables. Generalize. Generalize. Keep that in mind. Then I have another phrase for you which is also an idiom and that is lose your head. This means to lose control and not act calmly because you're upset. You're angry. And often you're going to use this idiom when talking about troubling situations. I could say, "It's a stressful situation and now's not the time to lose our heads." Or, "When my car broke down, I lost my head and didn't know what to do." Now, this idiom may sound similar to another idiom, lose your mind, but that has a slightly different meaning. If you lose your mind, you become mentally ill, you become crazy. So, I want you to be able to differentiate between those two idioms. Lose your head, lose your mind.

But let's just stick with lose your head. When pronouncing this idiom, once again, I would like you to say it as a phrase. And when you say it, assimilation may occur. This is when two sounds blend together to create a new sound. So the final consonant sound in lose may blend with the beginning consonant sound in your and you get this slight sound. It's like we're going to put it right between the words and that allows us to connect them together. It's not something you have to force if you say these words one right after the other. It's just going to occur naturally. Lose your head. Hopefully you can hear that slight sound. Just listen for it.

Don't lose your heads.

Then why did you fall in love with her?

Well, you know, you lose your head sometimes. And then we have the verb facilitate.

This means to make something possible or easier. And there are some great collocations with this verb. You can facilitate growth or facilitate learning or facilitate access or even facilitate communication. I create these lessons to facilitate learning and your engagement when you like and comment on these videos. Well, that is going to facilitate the channel's growth. So, please do that. For pronunciation, the verb has four syllables. The stress is on that second syllable. Facilitate. And just keep in mind that the C has more of an S, that S sound. Facilitate. I hope that you help facilitate the channel's growth. Now, for a little review, I hope that I was able to broaden your horizons and teach you some new verbs, and I truly believe that if you are able to allocate more time to building your vocabulary, learn new words, review old ones, that's going to help you more easily grasp the meaning of different words and phrases, and it will help you facilitate clear communication. Because let's be honest, as we get older, our brains, our memory, it starts to diminish. And the next thing you know, you won't be able to differentiate between the mafia and government. But I'll tell you, one of them is organized. That was supposed to be a joke. I don't know. Perhaps it fell flat. So, I need to get going. I'm going to wrap things up. Please don't lose your head. You are welcome to watch another video lesson and continue building your vocabulary. I have a cutting edge vocabulary lesson for you to help you improve your English. Let's just begin with a word that I have already mentioned cutting edge. And this just means very modern with all the newest features. And there are some common collocations with this adjective. Really words you would think of when you hear very modern like cutting edge technology or a cutting edge design or cutting edge research.

To attract the top headeds, we'll need to make a recruitment film picture that showcases our cutting edge technology.

When pronouncing this word, the stress is going to be on that first syllable. And that T, I am going to pronounce this as a flap T, which is very common when talking about the American accent because that T comes between two vowel sounds. So, I'll say it as a flap T, which is going to sound more like a soft D. Cutting. Cutting edge. And that DG combination. And edge has that J sound. Cutting edge. And if [clears throat] you are someone who appreciates cuttingedge vocabulary lessons, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. And throughout the lesson, I'm going to talk to you about the pronunciation of each adjective because I tried to choose words that were a little trickier to pronounce, like this next word, affluent. This means having a lot of money or owning a lot of things. A and you could use this word to describe a person, but often I think you would use it to describe a group of people. Perhaps you're talking about an affluent neighborhood or an affluent country or an affluent family. And in order to demonstrate how this adjective is used in context, I have some news headlines for you. Savvy travel to open new branch in affluent area. Addressing poverty in an affluent society. How can luxury travel companies attract affluent travelers on digital channels? When pronouncing this word, the stress is going to be on that first syllable, affluent. Now, that is the way you're going to find it in most English dictionaries. However, you may hear some people stress that second syllable, and in that case, that first syllable is then going to have that schwa sound, that uh sound. Affluent. You may hear both of these, but I think more commonly, people are going to stress that first syllable, affluent. Then there's the word competent. It means that you are able to do something well

When it comes to pronouncing this adjective, the only thing that I want to point out is the weak to. When unstressed, it's going to sound more like t with that schwa sound. The other thing that I would say is that t with the American accent. I told you I'm from the US. When it comes between two vowels, I'm going to pronounce it as a flap t. So, it's going to sound more like a soft d. Day to day. The stresses on the words day to day. Day to day. Just just listen for it. How does the schedule of an orthopedic surgeon compare to that of a fetal surgeon? Mode varies day to day.

Day-to-day administrative responsibilities are to reside with the deputy ops if they don't already.

Actually need written authorization from the Pentagon to be able to discuss the program with anybody who [music] does not have day-to-day clearance.

Then we have an adjective that I I think we all try to avoid and that is monotonous. So if something is monotonous, it means not changing and therefore it's pretty boring. And I I think often you would use this word to talk about task that you have to do routinely either at work or around the home. Uh I could say typing numbers into a spreadsheet can be monotonous. Or sweeping around the home may be monotonous. At least I think it is. When pronouncing this word, it can be a little challenging. It's a longer word, monotonous. The stress is on that second syllable and the t it's going to be a glottle t. This happens when you have the t followed by a vowel sound followed by the n sound. Words like mountain, kitten, monotonous.

And really it's just a glottle stop and it's almost like you're just swallowing the sound. That's the best way I I can describe that glottle stop. Monotonous. Say it with me. Monotonous. monotonous. Excellent. Then there's the word alleged. This refers to something bad or illegal and is believed to be true but not proved. And there are some common adjective noun collocations with this word perhaps talking about an alleged crime. And you can really talk about an alleged any criminal activity you fill in the blank. Alleged thief, alleged drug dealer. He has been arrested for the alleged crime. So, the stress is going to be on that second syllable. But you may hear some people add an extra syllable because of the ed and they're going to say alleged and then it becomes three syllables. And I think that may be more common in the US, but but let's hear both. So, you can hear the the two syllables alleged. He is hereby absolved of all his alleged crimes.

Alleged, but not proven.

Since blackmailing is a felony, even when you do it to alleged drug dealers.

I'm an alleged killer.

And now you can hear the three syllables. Alleged. See if you can identify this alleged killer. I've represented mobsters like this for years. Alleged mobsters.

Either one is okay. I just wanted you to be aware of this. The next adjective is fruitful and this means producing good results. So it really has a positive connotation. Often I think this word describes an outcome that involves some sort of interaction. So I could say my boss and I had a fruitful talk about my contract or there was a fruitful discussion at the meeting. Or how would you describe the negotiation? Fruitful. Okay. It's a It's a positive word, positive connotation. It's good to learn these words. The pronunciation is pretty simple and straightforward. The stress is on that first syllable and that T in fruit, it's a stop T. Fruitful. Fruitful. Then we have the word conservative. And this means not usually liking or trusting change, especially sudden change. And and really this word is often associated with politics. So, it can be emotionally charged, but but I could say that people who are older tend to be more conservative. I recently tried to talk to my parents about cryptocurrency and they they really were not interested. They don't really trust it. So, I could say in that case they they're definitely more conservative. Now, that is a nonpolitical example, but most of the time you'll hear this word relating to someone's politics, their conservative outlook, referring to the way they view social or economic changes. When pronouncing this word, the stress is on that second syllable, and the T, I'm going to pronounce it as a flap T.

Conservative. Conservative.

Now, because we're talking about the word conservative, let's go to the other end of the spectrum and talk about the word liberal, which is also a C1 adjective. This means respecting and allowing many different types of beliefs or behavior. And I'll use the same example. I'll just replace the word older with younger. People who are younger tend to be more liberal. When pronouncing this word, the stress is on the first syllable and you may say it with three syllables, liberal. However, because of elision, which is when sounds get removed, that schwa sound in the middle may elide and now we're left with just two syllables. Liberal. And I think often you will hear people pronounce this word with just two syllables and they'll say liberal.

My mom says you're just going through a liberal phase. What? My mom says you're going through a conservative phase. There's no such thing. Conservatives only get more conservative. Then we have the word idealistic. This means believing that very good things can be achieved often when other people just do not think that it's likely. So this is a great adjective to describe a person. And once again, let me give you some context with some news headlines. What urban planners can learn from this idealistic coffee shop. Utopia isn't just idealistic fantasy. It inspires people to change the world. This is an opinion. Are young social activists too idealistic? And do some have an overly idealistic view of internationalism? For pronunciation, there are five syllables.

The stress is on the second to last syllable. Idealistic. Now to give you a syllable stress rule. When a word ends with IC, the stress is going to come on the second to last syllable. Electronic, strategic, idealistic. Next is the adjective preliminary. This means coming before a more important action or event, especially introducing or preparing for it. So think about a courtroom. uh you have a hearing which is a meeting that is related to the the legal problem and I could say there's going to be a preliminary hearing. You could use this with other nouns as well. Here are some examples. The preliminary hearing set for next Friday. We'll have to do some preliminary evaluations.

Preliminary investigation suggests that this was suicide. Michael, my preliminary calculations indicate that 15 minutes are needed to break that code. When you pronounce this word, the stress is on the second syllable. Preliminary. But it's a longer word, so it can be a bit challenging. Let's break it down and say it together. Preliminary. Preliminary. Preliminary. Excellent. And then we have the word genuine. This refers to people or emotions that are honest and sincere. So, this is another great adjective to talk about a person. Perhaps you make a mistake. You apologize. I accept your apology because you are a genuine person. And and I like to think that I am a genuine person as well. But you don't always have to use this word to talk about people. Perhaps someone makes a genuine apology. And and then the last thing I would say is that people may often use this with the negative not to talk about something that is not honest or or not sincere.

His apology was not genuine. When pronouncing this word, it has three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. And just keep in mind that the ne at the end of the word is pronounced in genuine. Genuine. So, let's get a little review. I hope that you did not think the lesson was monotonous and I hope you go on to watch another video lesson because it really doesn't matter whether you are in the preliminary stages of building your vocabulary or if you are highly competent when it comes to using different words and phrases. It's good to learn new words and it's good to review old ones. And and I'm really being genuine when I say this because building your vocabulary should be a part of your day-to-day routine, especially if you want to continue developing your English fluency. So, if you enjoyed this cutting edge vocabulary lesson and you found it fruitful and you learned something new, I'd really appreciate it if you hit that like button. I know. I think it's only appropriate after learning that C1 vocabulary that we take it up a notch and make it a little more difficult. And I want to teach you some C2 vocabulary.

And this is even more advanced and would really signify that you are highly proficient and have near native fluency. And once again, I've put them into different categories to make it a little easier to follow along. Now, I don't make many guarantees, but I'm going to make one right now because this vocabulary is more advanced. I guarantee that you will learn something new. I am going to teach you some advanced phrases that I think are common and I'm going to tell you the meaning, talk a little bit about how these phrases are used and I'm also going to teach you how to correctly pronounce these phrases because if you're going to use them, you want to make sure that you are saying them correctly. And if you enjoy building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way, I can become your teacher. My name is Wes.

The channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. So, let's begin with our first phrase, which is clear the air. people. And you might use this if you have a couple of friends who are unhappy with each other or maybe some family members and there are just some bad feelings and then someone else the person who wants to get those feelings removed that's the person who's going to use this phrase. So if I have a couple of friends that are have been arguing and there are some bad feelings and I am the one who wants them to make up then I might tell them you know it's time to clear the air. We we really need to clear the air and we need to just remove these bad feelings. Now as far as pronunciation goes the the one word that I want to focus on is the article 'the'.

[laughter] OKAY. OKAY. we are just going to clear the air. And then we have trial and error. And this is a way of solving a problem by trying a number of different methods and then learning from the mistakes that you make. And I think often this phrase is used when talking about science because perhaps somebody is doing an experiment and you could say it's just a matter of trial and error before we get the result that we want. These words are frequently used together, a process of trial and error. And I could say that well learning new vocabulary, it's also a process of trial and error because you're learning these phrases. You're going to try to use them in context. You may make mistakes, but that's okay. You'll learn from those mistakes and then you keep practicing until these phrases are a part of your speaking vocabulary. For pronunciation, what I would tell you is that with and

I'm going to reduce it so it just sounds like n. Trial and error. And then error is it's a little challenging on its own. The word has two syllables has those two R sounds. Just remember that the stress is on the first syllable. Error. error, trial and error. And I can tell you relationships are just trial and error.

Something else that's a little bit of trial and error is pronunciation. And that's why I've been talking to you about how to correctly pronounce these phrases. And the next phrase that I have for you is to be at odds over or to be at odds with. You can follow it with either of those prepositions. This just means to disagree or be different from something. So, I could say, "My siblings and I are at odds over the family estate. We just disagree." Or, "I'm at odds with his version of the story." Okay? My version is different. So, as far as pronouncing this phrase, I want you to look at that word at. Okay? Okay, typically it would end with a stop t. But in American English, because I'm from the United States, that T comes between two vowel sounds. So I am going to pronounce it as a flap T, which is going to sound a little more like a soft D. And then I'm going to take that soft D and link it with the vowel sound in odds. At odds. So, you should hear that flap t and then it's getting linked with the vowel sound in odds. I'm at odds with his version of the story.

Some people say your immigration policy is at odds with your jobs program. How would you respond to that? Then there's beyond a doubt or beyond a shadow of a doubt. And in this case, you are just expressing certainty that something is true. I could say I think it's beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Earth's climate is changing. In law, you may hear someone say beyond a reasonable doubt. And this just means that the argument presented shows that someone is guilty and it just must be accepted as fact. So a person might say, "We have shown that the defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." In order to correctly pronounce this phrase, keep in mind that the article is just going to be pronounced as the schwa sound. It's just going to sound like uh a and then we can do some linking and link some consonants with that schwa sound. Beyond a shadow of a doubt. So two things beyond a of a beyond a shadow of a doubt. So hopefully you can hear that linking occurring. Beyond a shadow of a doubt. Beyond a shadow of a doubt. I can say beyond a shadow of a doubt that Clark Kent loves Lois Lane.

The next phrase is one that I use quite often and that is play it by ear. I really like this one. It means that you are deciding how to handle a situation as it develops instead of acting on some well previous plan that you had. So, I think I would often use this when traveling that I like to have an idea of what I'm going to do, but I also want to be able to change those plans as the day develops. So, I could say, "Yeah, you know, let's just play it by ear. I know we're going to try to do these things, but you know, we can make some changes if necessary. We'll just play it by ear." And when it comes to pronouncing this phrase, there's also some linking going on. The final consonant sound in play can get linked with the vowel sound in it. Play it.

Play it. Let's play it by ear.

So, when are you getting back from Florida? I don't know. Play it by ear. Why?

Go with the flow. This means to do what other people are doing or just agree with other people simply because it's the easiest thing to do. So, you may hear somebody tell you, "Hey, you should just relax and go with the flow." Or I could talk about myself and say, "I'm just going to go with the flow. I really don't have a strong opinion about things. I just want to do what's easiest, so I'm just going to go with the flow." And when saying this phrase, keep in mind there are some overlapping sounds, those th's. So, that final th in with is going to overlap with the beginning th in 'the'. The only difference is that in with that th is voiceless and in 'the' the th is voiced.

Then we have the phrase to put one's foot down. And this just means to use your authority to stop something from happening. And often I think people would use this phrase in the first person talking about something that's happening at that moment, in which case they're going to use the continuous tense. I'm putting my foot down. So think about somebody who is more of an authority figure. Like parents would say this to their child. If they want to go out to some party and the parent doesn't want them to go, they could say, "No, you're not going to that party. I'm putting my foot down. I'm using my authority to stop this from happening. I'm putting my foot down." There are two things that I want you to keep in mind when pronouncing this phrase. The first is that if you're saying it in the continuous tense, the T in putting comes between two vowel sounds. So again, being from the United States, I am going to use a flat T. So it'll sound like a soft D. I'm putting my foot down. The other thing I want to say is that foot down, there's some co-articulation going on because the position of your tongue when you say foot, all right, that stop T, your tongue is going to be at the top part of your mouth. But then when you move into saying down, your tongue with that duh sound is also going to be at the top. So you're not going to touch it twice and say them as two different words. You're really going to say foot and then move right into that d sound in down. Foot down. Foot down. And your tongue is really just coming up to the top part of your mouth one time. Foot down. I'm putting my foot down. Come on, you guys. I'm putting my foot down. Either the dog moves out or I do.

Then there's down the drain, which is it's not a good phrase because it means that work or money has just been wasted.

So, if I were to say all that work down the drain, that the work was well, it wasn't used, it was wasted, maybe it was destroyed, just down the drain. or the money that I won went right down the drain. Okay, I I used it all up probably carelessly. It's gone now and it just went right down the drain. The pronunciation of this phrase, it's pretty straightforward. The only thing I would say is that the article is going to be pronounced with that schwa sound. It's that weaker sound down the drain. I bought you a ticket for the my pad raffle, Dad. Oh, that's tooth fairy money down the drain, sweetie. I never win anything.

Next is to come under fire. And this just means to be criticized. And really, someone or something comes under fire. I could say the government has come under fire after the failed response. People are angry. They're upset. They're criticizing the government. So, the government has come under fire. Or the CEO has come under fire after the latest scandal. Again, people are angry and they're criticizing and someone has come under fire. Now, when pronouncing this phrase, again, there's a little bit of linking going on. That final consonant sound in come is going to get linked with the vowel sound in under. Come under. Come under fire. Take a look.

Cam Brady has come under fire. Getting it on with this woman, Shaina St. Cro, a former professional cheerleader. The next one, and it's also one of my favorite phrases from this lesson, and that is jump to conclusions. And what this means is that someone is just guessing the facts about a situation without having enough information. And you would say someone is jumping to conclusions. Often, I think people may use this with not. In that case, you're telling someone, let's not jump to conclusions. Let's not guess until we get more information. So I could say let's not jump to conclusions. Uh we need more evidence that is beyond a shadow of a doubt. So in the meantime, let's just not jump to conclusions. For pronunciation, the only thing that I would say is that preposition to. It can either be pronounced to, but sometimes it's pronounced with that schwa sound and it's going to sound like t. And often I think you will hear people say t when they're using this phrase. Jump to conclusions. Okay, I'll say it slowly again so you can hear that t. Jump to conclusions. And then when I say it quickly, jump to conclusions. So, it's a very subtle difference, but I'm still using that schwa. Jump to conclusions. This was stolen from there. We're accessories to a federal crime.

Let's not jump to conclusions. A lot of things start with you. Then there's out of one's depth. And this means that a person is not having the knowledge, experience or skills to deal with a particular situation or subject. I I think you would often hear somebody saying this phrase to another person, in which case they're saying, "Look, you're out of your depth. It's too difficult. You don't have the experience or the knowledge. You're out of your depth." A few things when it comes to pronunciation out of. So that t again it comes between two vowel sounds. So I'll pronounce it as a flap t and then I will link it with the vowel sound in of out of out of. And then just just keep in mind depth. It ends with that voiceless th. It's very slight but you should pronounce that voiceless th.

Depth. Out of your depth. Out of your depth. I know what I'm doing. You don't. You're out of your depth, Ruth. And I'm not going to let you drag Jonah down with you. Okay. And then there's to do someone or something justice. And this just means to be accurate or fair by representing someone or something as that person or thing truly is. And let me let me give you a couple of examples. I think it'll make more sense. So, this phrase is often used in the negative and with the pronoun it. Doesn't do it justice. So, it's like I'm I'm talking about a situation and then saying that it's just not an accurate representation. Like the the book is so much better than the movie. The movie doesn't do it justice or the Grand Canyon is breathtaking.

Pictures don't do it justice. That pictures are just it's just not a fair or accurate representation of the Grand Canyon. you really got to go there. The pictures, they just don't do it justice. So, when you say this phrase, if you're using the pronoun it, then there's going to be some intrusion. Intrusion is when you are adding a sound in between two other sounds. So, in this case, we're going to add a slight W sound between do and it. Do it. This allows us to link those two vowel sounds together. It doesn't do it justice. It just doesn't do it justice. doesn't do any justice. I'll tell you that.

You always said you like my nose.

I love your nose. It's real big up there.

So, I hope that I have demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that these phrases are useful. And I I truly think that when you are learning advanced phrases like these, you are not out of your depth. You have the experience. You have the knowledge. You just need to learn them and just get a little practice using them. But I I do not want to jump to conclusions. Only you can tell me how much you understand and how much you have learned. And I would appreciate it if you let me know down in those comments. In today's lesson, I want to teach you some advanced C2 verbs. Let's begin with the verb to relish. What this means is to like or enjoy something. And really, you're just adding a bit of emphasis. So, as I just said, I I'm sure you relish learning new vocabulary. You enjoy it and and you know that you're enjoying it. And you can follow this verb with either a gerand or a noun. So, to give you a couple of examples with jirens, I could say, I relish traveling to exotic locations. Or, I relish eating ice cream on a hot summer day. And then if you're going to follow it with a noun, there are some common collocations and these are words that are frequently used together. So you may relish the thought, prospect or idea of doing something or you may relish the chance or the opportunity to do something. And those are some useful collocations. When it comes to pronouncing the verb, it has two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. Relish.

She won't survive. [music] I don't relish hurting anyone, Steven, but she's not a child.

H. Well, Victoria relishes her status as queen bee, right? Pathologically coincide. So, this verb has two meanings. The first one is to happen at or near the same time. And often you're going to follow the verb with the preposition with. So, you would say that something coincides with something else. And uh you're not really talking about everyday activities like going to the coffee shop coincides with this. You you're talking about events that may not occur regularly. So I could say, "Look, I'm sorry I can't go to your birthday party because it coincides with a business trip that I have to take. It's happening at the same time." It also means to be the same or similar. So I could say, "If our schedules coincide, then we can plan to travel together." We'll we'll take the train. If our schedules coincide and they're the same.

For pronunciation, the verb has three syllables. The stress is on that third syllable. Coincide. And just keep in mind the co o i n. It's not pronounced as coin. Two different syllables. Coen. Coincide. To coincide with something. And then we have the verb squander. I like this verb even though it has a negative connotation because it means to waste money or supplies or to waste opportunities by not taking advantage of them. So in the United States which is where I am from I could say many people feel that the government squanders taxpayer money and they just waste that money. You may also hear people use this in a statement and say, "Hey, don't squander this opportunity." That is a collocation to squander an opportunity.

For pronunciation, the verb has two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, squander. And keep in mind that sqa has that sqa sound. To squander something. Screw you, Dean. You squandered your gift. Squandered my gift. Made 68 albums. Did I want to be made manager? Sure. A great opportunity squandered? Absolutely. A crushing blow? Yes. And the next C2 verb that I have for you is commemorate. And this means to remember officially and give respect to a great person or event, especially by some public ceremony or by making a statue or a special building. And I thought that I would show you some different news headlines so that you can see how this verb is used in context.

Events to commemorate Martin Luther King Jr. or to lane to host campus celebration to commemorate historic cotton bowl win. That's talking about American football. Museum to commemorate 70th anniversary of 1953 floods. Democrats commemorate January 6 attack with tears and silence at US capital. So, these are just some random news headlines that I found on the day that I created this lesson. And it's just using the verb in context. So, hopefully that gives you a better understanding. When pronouncing this verb, it has four syllables. The stress is on that second syllable. Commemorate. Commemorate. And just keep in mind that first and third syllable have that schwa sound, that unstressed vowel sound which sounds like uh commemorate.

Commemorate. And the next verb. [gasps] That's that's your hint. What verb is that? And the verb that I'm talking about is gasp. Gasp.

And it it has two different meanings.

And it's really a difference between talking about well one breath or many breaths. So the first meaning is to take a short quick breath through the mouth because of shock, pain or surprise. It's just that one breath. Gasp. And people may use this as an interjection and saying something surprising like and he never returned home and saw his family again. Gasp. or it's used in storytelling with those dialogue tags to describe speaking. Help me, he gasped. It also means to breathe loudly and with difficulty, really trying to get more air. And in this case, it's several breaths and often people may end up using it in the continuous tense, gasping. Uh I could say that the wave knocked me over and I was gasping for air. That is a common collocation with this verb to say that someone is gasping for air. When it comes to pronunciation, I think the most challenging thing about this verb would be saying it in the past tense. Gasp. It's a regular verb. So in the past, it's going to end with ed d. And because that final p sound is voiceless, the ed d is going to take on a t- sound. So, we have the P sound followed by the T- sound, which can be a little difficult. It's going to sound like T- gasped. Gaped. Give it a try. Gaped. Excellent. The next verb is intervene. And this means to intentionally become involved in a situation in order to improve it or just prevent it from getting worse. So, if there is an argument or a fight, someone may intervene. I could say that the referee intervened to stop the fight. They just did not want it to get worse. I could also say the Federal Reserve has intervened in financial markets in order to stop inflation and they're getting involved in the situation to try to improve it. Now, for pronunciation, the verb has three syllables. the stress is on that third syllable. Intervene. One thing I want to point out when it comes to the American accent, because I'm from the United States, is when the T follows an N sound, especially in unstressed syllables, it may elide and people may drop it. So instead of intervene, you may hear someone say intervene. So just keep that in mind. In the United States, you may hear both pronunciations. One with the T. Intervene. Go ahead. Intervene all you. I'm just afraid you might be interfering while we're intervening and one without.

I want to say something terrible to someone I love. I curse my tongue.

I'm going to intervene here.

And then there's to label. This refers to a word or phrase that's used to describe the characteristics or qualities of a person, event, or thing.

and really in a way that's unfair. So, you may label someone as something. That is a common phrase to label someone as something. In my lifetime, I have been labeled as a troublemaker uh at school when I was younger. I've also been labeled as a slacker, which is a noun that means someone who does not work very hard. And of course I would disagree with this, but it happens if we get the wrong impression of someone or something and we may label them as this thing, which is usually negative. Now, for pronunciation, the word has two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable label. The other thing I'd like to point out is the second syllable, it ends with that dark L, which is that sound. And then if we're following it with the word as, I told you that's a common phrase. Well, then we can link that dark L with the beginning vowel sound in as. Label as.

They imposed struggle and hardship on us. They labeled us as criminals for pushing back. The mortgage officer had messed up Miranda's application. They had inadvertently labeled her as separated.

pointing to that thumbs up because I'm implying that you should hit the like button and I think that you are probably able to guess that. So, when it comes to pronouncing this verb, it has two syllables. The stress is on the second syllable, imply. Now, I I don't think the pronunciation is too challenging. What I think is difficult about this verb is that it's sometimes confused with another verb, which is infer. And that's the next C2 verb that I want to talk to you about to infer something. This means to form an opinion or guess that something is true based on the information that you have. So if you see me and I'm just soaking wet, what might you infer about the weather? I imagine that you would infer that it's raining outside. Or maybe you see me and I'm really happy and I'm smiling, grinning from ear to ear. What might you infer? I

I really don't know. You can you can let me know down in the comments. The verb, it has two syllables. And once again, the stress is on the second syllable, infer. And I don't think the pronunciation is too challenging. Just try not to confuse those two verbs. To imply to infer if by me you are inferring that I have BO.

Michael, he wasn't inferring. He was implying you. You were inferring.

Was I? I see you guys are inferring that I'm stupid. That's not correct. We were implying it.

You then inferred it. The next verb is to speculate. And I think this is a very useful verb because it's pretty common. People do this all the time to speculate. It means to guess possible answers to a question when when we don't have enough information to be certain. So we do this quite often because well I think people just like speculating about different things when trying to explain something that happened and we don't have all the answers and we may speculate or we're trying to guess what will happen in the future and we can only speculate. To give you an example, I could say journalists are speculating what the president may say in his upcoming announcement. And I think in general, it's well, it's not always good to speculate or at least we should tell people that that is what we're doing because sometimes people will speculate and then others will just take that as the truth and it can cause some problems. Now, the verb has three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. Speculate. And I really think this verb is well pronounced the way it's spelled. It's pretty straightforward. To speculate, succumb.

So to succumb has two different meanings. And once again, I'll show you some news headlines so that you can see how this verb is used in context. So the first meaning is to lose the determination to oppose something. And really, you're just accepting defeat. visit these popular tourist traps before they succumb to climate change. This is how Israel's economy could succumb to populism. Samsung is first to succumb to a slowing economy that is crushing semiconductors. The next meaning is to die or suffer badly from an illness or injury. Battling Morocco eventually succumb to injuries. And in this case, they're they're talking about their football team. to succumb to injuries sustained after falling from mobile tower. When pronouncing this verb, it has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. Succumb. And just keep in mind there is a silent b at the end of the verb to succumb. And then there's the verb trudge. To trudge means to walk slowly with a lot of effort, especially over a difficult surface or when carrying something heavy. And often you may follow this verb with a preposition. Trudge up, trudge down, trudge over, trudge through. Maybe you had to trudge up a mountain. Or perhaps you had to trudge through the snow. And in both situations, you're walking slowly with a lot of effort. For pronunciation, it's just one syllable. That dg has that J sound similar to the word judge. These are rhyming words. Trudge. judge. The other thing I'd point out is that if the verb is followed by a preposition that begins with a vowel sound, then linking may occur. Trudge up. Trudge over. Right? Something to keep in mind. Let's do a little review.

Now, I am not going to speculate as to whether or not you will watch another video lesson. I I'm sure that you relish building your vocabulary. And because you're still here right now, then I'm just going to infer that you will watch another video lesson because I don't think you want to squander this amazing opportunity to continue improving your overall English fluency. And I really don't want you to succumb to any feelings of inadequacy when it comes to your language abilities. I want you to stay positive. I want you to stay motivated. And I want you to continue learning new things. All right, that's a little review using these verbs in context. I think you will be in awe of the nouns that I'm going to teach you.

And I'm sure that you will learn something new. And awe, this is the first word that I want to teach you. That's right. This is a noun awe and it's referring to a feeling of great respect sometimes mixed with fear or surprise. And often you're going to use this word in the phrase in awe of someone or in awe of something. So I I could say the children were in awe of their grandfather. Okay, they had that feeling of respect. Or we watched in awe as the lion attack the buffalo. So again, it's like you have respect for mother nature, but it's also mixed with a bit of fear and surprise. When pronouncing this word, it's just that vowel sound a like you would have in the word saw. And when talking about the phrase in a of, we can link that final consonant sound in in that n sound with the vowel sound a in awe. In awe of someone or in awe of something. And as we go through the lesson, I want to talk to you a little bit about the pronunciation because I I tried to choose words that are a bit challenging like this next one, bureaucracy. So, this is talking about complicated rules or processes used by an organization, especially when they do not seem necessary. And this noun, it really does have a negative connotation. And frequently you may use this when talking about larger companies, uh, governments or institutions. And you may even emphasize it with a phrase like a lot of. There is a lot of government bureaucracy or the company is so slow to change because there's too much bureaucracy. With all the bureaucracy in a hospital, sometimes you have to bend the rules to help a patient. No, I didn't. I didn't do it for Leslie.

I did it because I hate bureaucracy.

I'm giving you both the IPA and phonetic spelling so you can actually see how the word is pronounced in bureaucracy. It has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. Bureaucracy. Bureaucracy. Frenzy. This is talking about uncontrolled and excited behavior or emotion that may sometimes be a little violent. So, I could say Black Friday is a shopping frenzy. It's busy. It's a bit aggressive. Or you may hear this noun being used in the collocation feeding frenzy, which refers to a group attacking a prey. But you really could use feeding frenzy when referring to a situation in which people are trying to get as much of something as they possibly can. Your brother is creating his own media feeding frenzy and all of it is negative. Store in the village had one of those crazy sales. It was a footwear feeding frenzy. You could use this noun in the phrase to whip someone into a frenzy. And what this means is like you're causing someone to feel this way, this uncontrolled emotion. As the crowd that had gathered to hear Herbert Love speak was whipped into a frenzy. As far as pronouncing this word, it's pretty simple and straightforward. It just has two syllables. the stress is on that first syllable, frenzy. But for the most part, I I really wanted to share with you those phrases that you can use this noun with. And the next one that I have for you is cliche. This is a saying or remark that is often used and therefore it's not interesting and it's not original. So I I could tell you something like, well, look, you know what they say, opposites attract. That phrase opposites attract. It's pretty common, well-known. It's It's not original. And maybe you tell me, "Come on, Wes. That's so cliche." And if you were to tell somebody, "Look, oh, it's so cliche." It it kind of has a bit of a negative connotation because basically you're saying that, "Well, you're you're just not impressed with what somebody's saying to you. It's just not interesting." Or maybe I I start out by saying something like, "Hey, I know it's cliche, but time heals all wounds." All right. So, I'm basically admitting that what I'm the saying that I'm using, it's cliche. So, there there are many different sayings in English that you could say are cliche.

I really just want him to be happy. And I know that sounds cliche. And I know saying it sounds cliche sounds cliche.

Maybe I'm being cliche. I don't care. I know that you're just looking at this word and thinking, "Wait a second. There are no accent marks in English." Well, this is a word that English has borrowed from French. And that's why again the spelling and the pronunciation don't really match. Cliche. It has two syllables. The stress is on that second syllable and the ch e with the accent mark sounds like shay. Cliche. The next word is paradigm. So this noun is talking about well a model of something or just a very clear and typical example of something. And I thought well a good way to give you an example is just to show you some different news headlines so you can see how this word is used in context. A paradigm shift EUR Russia relations after the war in Ukraine. Are we witnessing the emergence of a new paradigm? And and this article goes on to talk about the the mental health system. But what I really want to point out are the words that are being used with this noun. These are collocations, talking about a paradigm shift or a new paradigm. When pronouncing this word, it has three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. But it's that third syllable that can be a little tricky because once again, this is when the spelling and pronunciation just do not match. So the third syllable has a silent G. And the vowel sound, it's a long I sound, not a short vowel sound. Paradigm. Paradigm.

But our society has undergone a paradigm shift. In the information age, Sheldon, you and I are the alpha males.

Let's just keep the momentum going with our next word, which is momentum. So this is talking about the force that moves an object or an event developing or making progress. So, if we're talking about the force that moves an object, think of, well, physics. As the car goes downhill, it gains momentum. If we're talking about an event developing or making progress, well, then you could think of a competition. The home team lost momentum when their star player got injured. And and once again, I want to point out those collocations, those words that are used with this noun, to gain momentum or to lose momentum. The word has three syllables. the stress is on that second syllable. Momentum.

one thing I'll say, and this is really about the American accent. Sometimes when the T follows an N sound, it may elide and it gets removed. And this happens with words like internet or center. So, if you're in the United States, you may hear somebody drop that T and it's going to sound like momentum.

So, I figured we start out local just to get our momentum going. Now, again, this is specific to the US, and I'm only telling you this because that's where I'm from, but in general, you can't go wrong pronouncing that T, momentum.

Why are you taking so long between fireworks? I'm building momentum, man.

Then we have morale, which is a great noun to know. It's talking about the amount of confidence felt by a person or group of people, especially when in a difficult or dangerous situation. And once again, there are a lot of great collocations with this noun. So, you could use them with certain adjectives like high morale or low morale or employee morale or you could use them with uh some different verbs as well. To raise morale, to boost morale, to bring up morale. I really hope that these video lessons boost your morale, and just make you want to continue learning.

I think I should, don't you? Absolutely, sir. Sure. force boost morale. Trying to keep morale high. Just trying to raise morale.

The pronunciation can be a little tricky. Just know that the stress is on that second syllable. Morale. And don't be fooled by that e at the end. It's not a long vowel sound, but a short vowel sound. Morale. Then there's withdrawal. And this just means well taking money out of the bank. And there is a common verb noun collocation to make a withdrawal. I need to make a withdrawal. Can I make a withdrawal? And really, I chose this word because of the difficulty with the pronunciation. Because I've had many learners tell me that they really have trouble pronouncing this word. It has three syllables. The stress is on that second syllable, that draw. But it's that third syllable that I think people have trouble with that dark L. So you're going to stress that second syllable and move right into that dark L which is has that sound. Withdrawal.

Drawal. Withdrawal. Just keep practicing. Give it a try. Say it a few times and I think you'll start to feel a little more comfortable saying it. The next noun is deterrent. And this is something that stops people doing something because they're afraid of what may happen. And you may use this noun in the phrase and say that something acts as a deterrent to something else. Like the teacher's strict punishments act as a deterrent to cheating. And there are also some useful adjective noun collocations uh saying that well something is a strong deterrent or talking about a nuclear deterrent or an effective deterrent. This word has three syllables. The stress is on that second syllable deterrent. Now one thing I want to quickly point out uh and this also has to do with the American accent and that is the flap t. A flap T is going to sound like a soft D. And Americans, we love the flap T. Often this occurs when the T comes between two vowels like water. Now the T in deterrent, it also comes between two vowels, but we are not going to say this with a flap T. And this is because the T comes at the beginning of a stressed syllable. So when the T comes at the beginning of a stress syllable, then you're going to say it as a true T and not a flap T. And that is why you would pronounce this and say deterrent. Just thought you should know. How will the Umbrella Academy ever become an effective crime deterrent?

Ambiguity. I like this noun. It's talking about something that may have more than one meaning and can therefore cause some confusion. And you may also use this word as an adjective. It's quite common, ambiguous. But we're talking about nouns, so let's use it as a noun. And I could say there is ambiguity in the new law. In this case, I'm saying that the law, you know, may have different meanings. Or perhaps I tell you, hey, be specific so there's no ambiguity. All right? I I I want things to be very specific and clear so there's no ambiguity. All right, time for Fast and the Furious 1 through 7. This is a 14-hour meditation on the importance of family, fast cars, product placement, racial ambiguity, and family.

The word has five syllables. And if you want to learn something about syllable stress, when the word ends in I ty, the

if you're in the doctor's office or perhaps you may even need to write it down if you're trying to write some of your symptoms. So, it's important to keep in mind the spelling and try to remember how this word is spelled. For pronunciation, the word has four syllables. The stress is on that third syllable, diarrhea. But really, I just wanted to highlight the spelling of this word. And then there's whereabouts. This is just talking about the place where someone or something is. And often you would use this talking about someone's whereabouts. The police don't know the criminal's whereabouts. Or or perhaps uh I could say we're unsure of her exact whereabouts. That is a collocation with this noun. You may hear people use this in a question like whereabouts in the US are you from? This is a question that I sometimes get and I tell people well I grew up in the south but there are quite a few different places all over the country where I have lived. And this is also a C2 word. And I use the word also because when you're using it in a question like this, it's not a noun, it's an adverb. But we're we're talking about nouns. And in this case, you're often going to be talking about someone's whereabouts.

We need his whereabouts. And her whereabouts are unknown.

The pronunciation, it's pretty straightforward. There are three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable. Whereabouts. Let's try and do a little bit of review. I hope that I was able to avoid any ambiguity when explaining the meaning of these different nouns. And you know, now that you probably feel good about building your vocabulary, I hope that you can use that positive momentum to go ahead and watch another video lesson because I try to make these lessons easy to follow and understand because I think that's what's really going to help boost your morale. And even if you find a word confusing and you don't completely understand it, please don't let that be a deterrent when it comes to building your vocabulary and just trying to learn new words. And [laughter] you can let me know your whereabouts down in the comments. I was just trying to use some of these nouns, get a little review, and use them in context. learn some advanced C2 adjectives to help you build your vocabulary. And I will be very clear with my explanation and I will not be ambiguous. And that's the first word that I want to teach you in today's lesson. Ambiguous. It means having or expressing more than one possible meaning. And often this is done intentionally. So let's have a look at this image right here. Is it a rabbit or is it a duck? What do you see? A rabbit or a duck? I could say that this image is ambiguous. All right, it has more than one possible answer. And mostly you're going to use this adjective to refer to something that someone says or perhaps the way that something is worded like uh a contract. I could say the contract is ambiguous and open to interpretation that it may have more than one possible meaning. It's ambiguous. I'm looking over my text correspondence with Beverly and I don't see anything that would have given her offense. Nothing's ambiguous. I spell everything out. Then we have complimentary. So this word has a couple of different meanings.

The first one is praising or showing admiration for someone. I could say that well sometimes you are very complimentary about some of my vocabulary lessons and I really appreciate that. Now the C2 meaning the more advanced meaning for this word it refers to well tickets, books or any item that may be given for free especially by a business. So in this case I want you to think of uh a hotel or a flight. So if I go to my hotel room I might say oh I was given a complimentary bottle of water. All right it was already in the hotel room. it's free. Or on an airplane, when you fly, you may be offered complimentary snacks.

Now, when it comes to pronunciation, very quickly, I just want to let you know because I'm from the United States, sometimes people will drop that T because it follows the N sound and it's going to sound like complimentary. Okay? So, complimentary or complimentary if you are in the US.

Hi, what's the damage here?

Nothing.

Yes, for these free these are complimentary complimentary free whatever you want. Handy is the next adjective that I want to teach you. If you say that something is handy, it just means that it is useful or convenient. Mostly I think people are going to use this adjective to talk about items in which they can well use for a variety of reasons or just items that are really helpful in a difficult situation. You could say, "Wow, this is just really handy. My wife thinks that her Apple Watch is pretty handy because she can use it for a variety of things. And you can also use this adjective in the idiom to come in handy. And if you say that something comes in handy, that just means that it's useful. Oh, that's the latest liquid crystal TV.

Very handy. Indispensable. Now you will use this adjective when you want to say that something or someone is so useful, so reasonable or acceptable. So I could say her argument was legitimate so we refunded her money. That the argument was reasonable and we gave her a refund. It was legitimate. And with the pronunciation of this word, that first T, because I am from the United States, I will pronounce it as a flap T, which is going to sound like a soft D. Legitimate. Legitimate.

You assert that Mr. Rose harassed you.

How do you know he didn't have a legitimate reason to be in your office?

Then there's questionable, which means not certain or wrong in some way. And questionable, it has that able suffix, which means you're capable of something. In this case, it's like you're capable of asking questions. Is this right or wrong? Is it good or bad? And really, yes, it implies that something is just it's just wrong. So, my wife would say that my sense of fashion is questionable. And to be honest, she's she's right. It is questionable. Uh but you could also say that, well, something may be ethically questionable. Is it the right thing to do? Or you could even refer to the way food tastes and say, "Wow, this food, it tastes questionable. I don't I don't know if it's still good." And yeah, if food tastes questionable, then you probably should not eat it. There's a solid chance I may have insulted the owner.

That doesn't sound like something you do. She has very questionable taste.

Next is grim. And I probably shouldn't be smiling when I say this adjective because it means worrying and without hope. So, it's not a good thing if you say something is grim. And typically, you're talking about the way something looks, appears, or seems. So, I could say, "Wow, the weather today looks grim. I don't think we should go outside." Or, you know, to be honest, the future of American politics right now, it looks grim. People are very divided. There's a lot of misinformation out there. And, yeah, I think a lot of people would agree that it looks grim. Son of a beasting. She's turning the entire office against us. This is grim. Real grim. What are we going to do? The next adjective is coherent. This also has two different meanings. Both of them C2. And the first meaning is referring to an argument, plan or idea that is clear and each part connects to each other in a reasonable way. So really, you're just saying that something is very easy to understand. I could tell you that the lawyer made a coherent argument. The next meaning refers to someone who you understand what they're saying. And in this case, I think most of the time people will use this in the negative to say that you don't understand someone. Uh I could tell you he's he's not coherent at the moment. Or I could just use the antonym and say incoherent. But just keep that in mind when talking about a person. I think often you will use this in the negative to say that someone is not coherent or incoherent.

You don't hear that loud high-pitched incessant humming coming from the vents that is making it impossible for me to think straight, let alone string together one coherent sentence.

Dubious. And I like this adjective mostly because I just like saying dubious. All right, that sounds dubious. And it means that something is just not completely true or just should not be completely trusted. And I think we can all relate to this one. Think about email scams. And I would get an email with this subject heading. Congratulations, you've been selected. And it just it's all it just looks dubious. And these are actually legitimate emails that I have received just this past week. And I did not open them. I did not click on anything because they're dubious. It didn't compress the whole thing. It should be twice that size. I mean, 24 gigs, that's less than a fourth the file size. That seems dubious, Richard.

Then there's compulsive. And this means that you are doing something a lot and you're unable to stop it. And this is often used as an attributive adjective, which means it's going to come before the noun. I could say that my neighbor is a compulsive gambler or my colleague is a compulsive liar. And because of the meaning that you're doing something excessively and you just can't stop, it really often refers to things that are not good like compulsive gambler or compulsive liar. Read it. Uh personality overview. Mr. Stark displays compulsive behavior. In my own defense, that was last week. Then we have pushy. And this is another adjective that I just like to say pushy. But it's also not a good thing because it means that someone is behaving in an unpleasant way by trying too much to get something or to make someone do something. So it's not good if somebody's being really pushy. And I want you to think of a salesperson. They want to sell you something. And sometimes they can be very aggressive.

You people are so pushy.

What? Israeli people are pushy.

Then there's carefree, which means having no problem and not worried about anything. And I think you would often use this to describe a person's uh personality. And I could say he is young, carefree, and just wants to travel the world. And I think we can all relate to this word uh thinking about a different time or a period in our lives where maybe we didn't have much worry. And I could say, well, remember those carefree days back in high school? Those were some carefree days. See, before when I was just another employee, I was happy, carefree, the guy who hung out in the break room making fun of the boss. Then we have conceited which means you are too proud of yourself and your actions and abilities.

And I think that well we can all think of someone who we might describe as a little conceited. And that's what I want you to do right now. I want you to think of someone and make an association with this word. And I am thinking about an old colleague of mine from a long time ago who was a great teacher. But typically you don't go around just telling everyone this and they would sound conceited. And because this is pretty common that someone is acting too proud, there are several other synonyms. You could say arrogant, proud, superior. But this is a great way to build and expand your vocabulary by learning a word like this. Conceited.

Friends wouldn't mind because they look up to us. So conceited, Clint, you're so conce you're like full of yourself. Why are you like that? I'm not saying that to be conceited.

Then we have the word rigid which means stiff or fixed, not able to be bent or moved. And I will try to give you an example of each. So, think about well a metal uh you could say that it's rigid. You're not able to bend it. If we're talking about fixed, I think people might be referring to well something like a set of rules. The teacher's rules were so rigid throughout the year that they were just fixed and and very strict in that case. If we want to say stiff, then I think you're probably describing uh a person and this that they're very stiff perhaps because they're scared or afraid. We were all so scared of the new boss. We were rigid in our chairs. All right. And you're just very stiff.

Do you have any idea how rigid you can be? I have to be rigid to hold things together in the face of Armageddon.

Then we have the adjective feeble, which means weak or without energy, strength, or power. And you could use this to describe a person especially as someone becomes much older. I could say that well in the future like far away in the future I hope I will become a feeble and helpless old man. All right that's probably what will happen in in the distant future. Or perhaps you're describing an institution or government that just does not have much power. Uh, I could say it didn't take long to discover that the new government was feeble and corrupt.

The first year, by sheer dumb luck, Jake eaked out a feeble victory. And last year, I let the captain win because he's old and sad.

So, I hope that I was coherent throughout this lesson and that my explanation was clear and that nothing was ambiguous. But I will say that uh these words are legitimate and you will hear them from time to time. So I think they're very useful when it comes to building your vocabulary, but at the same time I don't want to be pushy. I don't want to tell you like, oh, you have to learn these words. It's all about just getting that exposure, learning a little bit at a time. And I just hope that you learn something new in today's lesson. And if you're doing great, we've covered a lot so far. And right now I want to switch gears and focus on idioms which are more casual, but we still use them often in everyday conversation. And I've talked about some idioms already, but I'd really want to do a deep dive and teach you some useful idioms that I definitely think you should know.

And when it comes to using idioms, it can be a little tricky figuring out how to use them and in what context. and you really just need to practice and it's going to help your overall speaking fluency. I think it is very useful for your listening comprehension because you are definitely going to hear these idioms in movies, TV shows, or if you're just out on the street. So, let's have some fun and learn a lot of useful idioms. I want to talk to you about some common idioms and expressions that that you can use in everyday conversation. And this will really help improve your your comprehension and overall English fluency.

Starting tomorrow, I am turning over a new leaf. Time with you is my number one priority. I'm turning over a new leaf and my good luck starts now.

The next idiom is the autumn years. And well, autumn is another word for fall. And if somebody's referring to the autumn years, they're talking about uh the later point in someone's life. They would refer to it as the autumn years when somebody gets older. And yes, this this is not your autumn years. That's our little girl Emmy. She she's just a little baby. But when you're talking about later on in somebody's life, you may hear you may hear them refer to it and say the autumn years.

You're getting a little philosophical for me. I suppose so. They say it happens in the autumn years. I may teach, I may write a book, whatever the hell one does when one approaches the autumn of one's years.

Then we have the idiom to drive someone nuts. And this is relevant. I think of fall. I often think of nuts.

You can find them on the ground. And nuts is also an informal word, kind of slang that means the same as crazy. So if you drive someone nuts, it just means that you are making them crazy. Perhaps a person could be driving you nuts or maybe a situation is is just driving you nuts.

Hey, uh, I'm not going to mince words.

Mitchell is driving me nuts.

You better think you're lucky stars. I'm not in this competition because I would eat you for breakfast.

You're driving me nuts.

Babe, you your mother drives you nuts.

Then we have one of my favorite idioms cuz I like I like using it from time to time when especially when I feel sick.

And that idiom is under the weather. And you say that somebody maybe feels a little bit under the weather. And what it means is that person is kind of starting to feel a little sick. So it's not like they're really sick. It's just maybe they're a little sick or they're starting to feel sick. You say, "Yeah, I'm feeling feeling a little bit under the weather right now." Yeah. Um heard you were under the weather. Oh, I uh I didn't think I was going to get to see you until tomorrow.

Yeah, well Bernardet's a little under the weather. Manubis, you sound unwell. Well, I have been feeling a little under the weather, but I'm feeling much better now.

Next is neck of the woods. And if you hear somebody talking about like, oh, for example, what are you doing in my neck of the woods? They're talking about a particular area or maybe even a particular neighborhood. So, that's what it means, neck of the woods.

A few errands. I'm going to be in your neck of the woods soon. And um it would be very nice to see you. Well, if you ever get down in my neck of the woods, you got a place to stay. Another idiom with woods is not out of the woods. Because when I think of the fall, I often think of the woods. And if you say that you are not out of the woods, it just means that you are not out of danger. So out of the woods is talking about out of danger. And I think most of the time you hear it with the word not. Somebody is trying to say that they are not safe. They are still in a dangerous area. They are not out of the woods just yet.

I think you might hear this in like TV shows and movies. If somebody is being chased by another person or a group of people and they they haven't lost that group, they're still being chased. They say, "You know, we're not we're not out of the woods just yet. We need to keep running." Mike's going to be okay.

Can we see him? Not out of the woods yet. I guess one of you could go in for just a minute. The heartbeat's stronger, but we're not out of the woods.

Then we have to get wind of something.

And if you get wind of something, it just means that you hear some rumor about something. It could be a rumor about something or a rumor about someone and and you get wind of this information. You learn about it. You hear about it. You could say, "Yeah, you know, I got I got wind of that. I heard about that rumor or I heard that piece of information." To get wind of something. Thought the publicity would really help. Zip couch. Once the press gets wind of this, you know, Bolivians get wind of this, you know what they're going to say? They're going to say, "You wear pissy pants." If the pervert community gets wind of morning jogging, oh god, help us.

Then we have the apple of someone's eye.

And if if you're talking about the apple of someone's eye, it just refers to a person who is loved the most by someone else. So for [laughter] for example, yes, I could say that that Emmy right here, you are the apple of my eye. That yes, she is loved the most by me. She is the apple of my eye. Um as well as you want to. They are both they are the apples of my eye. So if you describe someone as the apple of your eye, it just means that they are loved the most by you.

What are you doing? [laughter] It is.

Oh, look who it is. My husband, the apple of my eye.

Hello. Oh, apple of my eye. Love of my life.

[singing] Night [music] and day. The apple of your eye.

I mean, his household was a joyous place. And his wife Dolly, well, she was the apple of his eye.

Then we have the idiom cold turkey. And you you just got to include this because turkey Thanksgiving it is a very very popular word around the around fall. So if somebody you might talk about quitting cold turkey and what that means cold turkey is that somebody stops a bad habit immediately and and maybe suddenly as well and you would quit something cold turkey. Often I think of smokers. Somebody is a smoker. They've been smoking for years and then they just suddenly quit. They would say, "I quit cold turkey." So any kind of bad habit that somebody might have, whether it's smoking or drinking, and then they suddenly stop, you could say that they quit cold turkey. No, no, it's not your fault. No, it's partly my fault cuz I made you quit cold turkey. You're right, Lisa. Love isn't about fixing someone. I'm just going to give her up cold turkey.

You need to prove to Tara that you can be trusted. Cold turkey, Jacks. No booze, no weed. I'm serious. The world can't just quit on oil and nuclear power or cold turkey. You'll dismantle our entire economy overnight. So, there you have it. Those are some great idioms that you can use in everyday conversation. They are all related to the fall, but you can use them in a variety of different situations and context. If you are someone who loves sports, then you are definitely going to love this idiom lesson. I'm going to teach you some idioms that are related to sports. That doesn't mean that you can only use these idioms when talking about sports. They can be used in a variety of different situations. I'll give you some example sentences as well as show you some videos so you can see how these idioms are used in context.

The first idiom is a tennis idiom and it is the ball is in your court. And what this means is that it is up to you. it is your responsibility to do something or to make a decision. The ball is in your court. So, example, when when you're playing tennis, you hit the ball to somebody else and then the ball is in their court. It's up to them to act. So, this can be used in a variety of context. It could be used in business in a negotiation. For example, maybe you make an offer to buy something and then you'd say, "Well, okay, here's my offer. The ball is in your court. It is your responsibility to make a decision now or tell me what you want to do. And we often use this idiom as just a standalone statement and you would tell somebody, you know, the ball is in your court now. It's up to you. The ball's in your court. Call me back if you want. Ball's [snorts] in your court. I said no. Which be right back in the driver's seat.

So the ball is in his court.

So, for example, when I think of this idiom, because I'm a teacher, I I think of students that when they don't do their homework and maybe there's a punishment and they're trying to think of an excuse, I might tell them I'd say, you know, you're you're not going to get off the hook that easy. You are not getting off the hook that easy, mister. And that is a common sentence in which you might hear this idiom being used. That you would tell someone you're not going to get off the hook that easy. That you you need to be held responsible for for something that happens. You're not going to have it completely removed. You're going to have to suffer the consequences a little bit.

You're not going to get off the hook that easy. Then we have a baseball idiom. Go to bat for someone. To go to bat for someone means just to defend somebody. So in baseball when you go to bat for another player that that you're basically helping that person out. They don't have to bat because you're going to do it for them. You're going to help that person. You are going to defend them. Just go to bat for them. I'm tired of going to bat for you and your show. I want to thank you for going to bat for me last week.

Next is a hunting idiom. And this idiom is used quite often and it is to give it your best shot. And often people would just say it as a sentence and just say give it your best shot. And this means that you should just try your hardest. Do your best. So when you're hunting, even though I'm not a hunter, you are shooting something and you want to give it your best shot. You tell people this all the time, whether they're doing sports or or business, you would tell them and encourage them and say, "Give it your best shot." Well, go ahead and give it your best shot. Come on then, Nigel.

Okay, Okconor, give it your best shot.

So, for example, I would tell you guys this. If you're thinking that learning English is too difficult, I don't know if I could do it, I would encourage you and say, you know, give it your best shot. Just try your best. That's all that we're asking you do. Give it your best shot. Next is an idiom that comes from horse racing. And that is the home stretch. And if you're talking about the home stretch, you're talking about the end. So when talking about horse racing at the end of the race, you might hear somebody say, "The horses are coming down the home stretch. They're getting close to the end." And you can use this when you are getting close to the end of something. Specifically, when you're about to complete something or finish something. So, with this lesson, I'm just about halfway through it. I'm not quite in the home stretch just yet.

We're almost done. Home stretch.

This is the home stretch. All we got to do is focus. Tough. You're in the home stretch.

Next is a golf idiom, and that is not up to par. So in golf, you you have a score that you try to get for each hole. And if you match that score, then that would be par. So that's your the average score. That's what you want to do. If somebody's not up to par, then that just means that they're not good enough to do a a job or a position. And you you just don't have the skills or abilities to do something. And somebody might say, you know, uh yeah, it's you know, this work it it's not up to par.

There's a thing called Proposition 48.

Says that if your grades aren't up to par and take the SAT, if you score 700 or more, you can get into college. I hope these video lessons are are definitely up to par for for you guys. I hope so. Next is a boxing idiom. To throw in the towel. And in boxing, if somebody throws in the towel, then that just means they give up. the match is over. And that's exactly what it means to give up something. So, if you're tired of doing something, you don't want to do it anymore, you'd say, you know, I'm I'm just going to throw in the towel. I'm done. I give up. Or you might hear it being used that somebody's, you know, they're trying to encourage you and tell you not to give up.

And they'd say, don't throw in the towel. Don't throw in the towel just yet. Keep working hard. They're throwing in the towel. He says once the debts have paid, there won't be too much left. Round after round, I kept getting Frankie to patch me up. He's talking about throwing in the towel, but he ain't my manager. He can't throw in nothing. Maybe it's time to throw in the towel. If you guys are thinking, you know, I I'm done learning English. It's too difficult. I don't want to do it. I would tell you, don't give up. Don't throw in the towel just yet. And I'm not going to let you off the hook that easy.

I'm always going to encourage you and tell you to keep going and give it your best shot.

We're coming down the home stretch, which means we're getting close to the end. But don't leave just yet. I have some more great idioms for you. And this next one is a football idiom. It's an American football idiom. And I'm sure some of you might be rolling your eyes like, "Ah, American football. Nobody watches that." But this idiom is a good one. And it is blindsided. And if somebody is blindsided, it just means that they did not see something coming. They did not expect this thing to happen. You were blindsided by something. So, for example, somebody might tell you some news that is shocking, like, "Oh, they're getting a divorce." You're like, "Oh my goodness, I was just blindsided by this." Like, you were as blindsided by this as I was. I can't believe she blindsided me like this, being so nice and and friendly to my face.

So when you're blindsided, it's not really a good thing. It's something that you weren't expecting and you would be blindsided by something. So we often use it with the preposition by. good and I was surprised. I was blindsided. Then we have a basketball idiom, slam dunk. This is probably a phrase that you've heard before, especially if you're a basketball fan. In basketball, a slam dunk is when you take the ball and you slam it and hang on to the rim. Yeah, I can't slam dunk the basketball. I can't jump. So, if something is a slam dunk, then it just means it's a sure thing. It's easy to do. It's easy to accomplish. You know that you're going to do this thing and you say, "Well, you know, it's a slam dunk." So, you're watching this video right now and I'm thinking like, hm, I wonder if they're going to hit that like button, but I know, you know, it's a slam dunk. It's a sure thing. You're going to hit that like button, right?

Unless you think this lesson's not up to par. It's a slam dunk. I hope it's a real slam dunk.

To me, this decision is a slam dunk.

The next idiom is call the shots. This is a billiards idiom because when you're playing billiards, you often have to call your shots and point to the pocket where you want to shoot the ball. So if somebody calls the shots, it just means they are making the decisions. You might often hear this idiom in business because there's a hierarchy of people from the boss, the manager, and then you and your boss would call the shots. They would be MAKING THE DECISIONS. I CALL THE SHOTS. I DO WHAT I WANT TO DO. So you're calling the shots now.

That's going to have seen nothing but the bench this year. You ain't calling the shots, you'll play. So, I'm a bit curious if you knew some of these idioms already. I hope that you weren't completely blindsided by these idioms, and I hope that you can go on to use them and try to use them and give it your best shot. Right now, we're going to walk right out that door and I'm going to find some super useful and common idioms to help you improve your fluency. Let's go. Today, I am out and about. I'm outside and I'm going to try to find some different idioms to help you improve your overall fluency. So, let's just go. Let's go. Let's get out of here. Second, I should probably take you with me and the camera. Here we go. So, here we have some bushes. And [laughter] the next uh idiom that I want to teach you is to beat around the bush. And what it means if somebody is beating around the bush, it just means that uh let me have a seat real quick. It means that somebody is not speaking directly or they're speaking indirectly. So instead of saying what's on their mind, instead of just saying it straightforward, they beat around the bush and they kind of maybe give you clues. And sometimes the reason you do this and you don't say things directly is because you're trying not to upset someone. And I think this is very common in certain environments like work or home. If you're talking to a colleague and you don't want to upset them and you have some news that you need to tell them, you might beat around the bush. or at home something happens and it's bad news and you don't want to tell your mother, father, husband, wife, you might uh beat around the bush instead of just coming right out and saying it directly. So, I think this is something that well I think a lot of us do it. Uh some of us I think are very direct and we don't beat around the bush. But I think a common way this idiom is used is somebody is speaking indirectly and the other person would say stop beating around the bush. Just tell me tell me what you have to say. Stop beating around the bush.

Please. I would never beat around the bush like that in. Have a seat. I'm not going to beat around the bush here. Will, you don't have to beat around the bush. I know exactly what you're getting at. Another great idiom is to bark up the wrong tree. And what this means is that you're trying to tell someone that they're making a mistake, that whatever they're saying or doing is wrong. And it's almost like you know what the right answer is or what this person should be doing. And they're making a mistake. And you could tell them, "Look, you're barking up the wrong tree. This is a mistake. You shouldn't be barking up this tree. You should be barking up that tree over there."

Confucious. [music] Boy, have I been barking up the wrong tree. So, you can see right behind me here is the river. And a river. Well, a river will flow. So, the next idiom that I have for you is to go with the flow. And what this means, if you say, well, I'm going to go with the flow. It means that you are going to accept a situation and kind of relax. You're not going to try to change things. You're just you're just going to go with the flow. So, I think this is a great idiom that can be used if somebody might be asking, well, what are you going to do?

You're going to enter a situation and what what's your reaction going to be? And say, well, I'm just going to go with the flow. I'm not going to try to control things. I'm going to relax. I'm going to see what everybody else is doing, and I'm just going to accept what is going on. I'm going to go with the flow. When I'm traveling, especially with a group of people and everybody maybe they want to do different things, I like to just go with the flow. But you know what? We're not going to rush this time. We're just going to go with the flow. So, you're on board now? Yeah.

A good fighter needs to know how to improvise to go with the flow.

Oh, I don't care. You know me. I just go with the flow. All right. So, let me show you. This right here is a bud. All right. And that's going to help you understand the next idiom, which is to nip something in the bud. So, if you think of like um well, like a flower like we're looking at right now before a flower blossoms, it it's in these the bud and then the bud will blossom. So, to nip something in the bud is to stop something at an early stage. and you're stopping it before it becomes established. And most of the time, you're going to use it and say, "Okay, you know the situation. You know what you need to stop." And you might say, "We need to nip this in the bud. We need to stop it. We need to stop something at this early stage before it develops, before it grows, before it becomes a thing, something that's established, and then you cannot stop it anymore, and you want to nip it in the bud." I never should have let her do this maximum thing in the first place.

Going to nip this thing in the bud. Is going to make a public apology tomorrow on Hard Ball. Yeah, I I got to nip this in the bud.

This has catastrophe written all over it. And you can expect the same thing from everyone in this office. If you don't nip this whole employee of the month situation in the bud.

So the next one that I have for you, it's actually an expression and that is to knock on wood. And if somebody says this, it means that they are just hoping for good luck to happen. And you could say it to somebody else and just say, you know, knock on wood. And actually, I don't know if this is real wood, but but you you will hear this quite often if you want to well wish someone luck or hope that they have good luck for a performance or a test or basically anything. And you just say, you know, knock on wood. Or maybe you want to you're you want to give hope to yourself for something you're getting ready to do. Say, I I wish for the best. I hope I do well. Knock on wood.

Actually, this would be my first feray into the trial process.

I haven't had to go to court yet. Knock on wood. Let him see. He's not the only one who builds solid houses, you know. I think you'll be pretty impressed. Knock on wood. So, all along right here, these are Well, these are rocks. Actually, they're kind of like uh they're [laughter] more like pebbles, but it really has to do with the the next uh idiom that I want to teach you. And that is if you say that someone is living under a rock. And if somebody says this, if you hear it, it means that if somebody has been living under a rock, it means that this person is ignorant to something that is wellknown. that there is some event, something is happening that you think everybody should know about. And if somebody says, "Well, I don't know about this thing." Then you could ask like, "Whoa, what's wrong with you? Have you been living under a rock?" So, if you hear this expression, it means that yeah, they're referring to somebody who is ignorant to some news, some information that is very wellknown that you think everybody should know about to be living under a rock. They all work together. God, have you been living under a rock? No. David Geta, have I been living under a rock? Yeah, that song is my jam. I am the beast master from the [music] movie Beast Master. What rock have you been living under? What's this? What have you been living under a rock? This is the new meme. Cat breaded Taylor Swift reporting. So, we're outside having a little bit of a picnic right now. And you can see that this right here is grass. Uh there's there's quite a bit of it. And I have it's it's actually not an idiom. It's a phrase that I want to teach you and that is grassroots because I think this is a very useful uh phrase to know and especially it's something you may hear if you're listening to the news and what it means is it's talking about the the basic level of some activity or organization or even some cause and I think that's how uh people use it quite often if you're talking about some grassroots campaign and it's happening at the most basic level um people getting informed, people becoming motivated to create some change and you could say that their their campaign it's it's grassroots. It's happening at that basic level. So I wanted to teach you that phrase because well we're outside and there's plenty of grass.

The Tea Party presents itself as a grassroots movement uh which means it should be fiercely resistant to central control. I understand that grassroots activism actually runs in your family. So, I opted for a more grassroots approach to get the word out. So, I'm not going to beat around the bush. Those are all the idioms I have for you this lesson. And I hope you learned some new ones. If you did, please hit that like button. We are now going to play in these fountains right here. Thank you guys so much for watching and I will see you next time. Do you love [music] idioms? Today we're talking about love idioms. Today we'll talk to you about 10 love idioms. And these are idioms that don't necessarily have the word love in them, but they are used to describe [music] love and relationships. So the first love idiom is to fancy someone. And this is mostly used in British English and it means [music] to like someone and their company. So it's not just to like someone but to enjoy spending [music] time with them. So if you enjoy spending time with someone and you really like them, you [music] would say that you fancy them. You fancy that person. The couple is on their [music] first date. It seems like they fancy each other. Number two [music] is to fall for someone. And to fall for someone means to develop romantic feelings for someone over a period of time. [music] It could be a short period of time or it could be a long period of time, but that's how you say that you fall for someone. I fell for Wes when we first started working [music] together. So number three is head over heels in love [music] with someone. So this one can be either head over heels in love or just head over heels. And it just means completely and deeply [music] in love with someone. When somebody's head over heels in love with someone else, they cannot think of any other person. This is the only person on their mind. It's all that you think about. You're very, very, very, very [music] into this person. So you would say that you're head over heels. He fell head over heels in love with her and they got married within a month. [music] Number four is loveydovey. Have you heard this one before? Loveydovey. [music] I hear it quite a bit and it's a kind of a way that people act. It really describes how people act and how people are. So you can say that two people act very loveydovey with each [music] other. Uh that means that they're very affectionate and they really show their affection towards each other [music] but very strongly very much and sometimes it's more viewed as a negative thing like oh they're so loveydovey. It can be almost a little too much but it's an act. It's how you act towards [music] each other.

Number five to be smitten. It [music] means to be strongly attracted to someone. It's almost like you were smacked by love and now you're super in love [music] with this person or very very attracted to them. He is smitten with her smile. Number six, to get hitched. This is used quite a bit and it means to get [music] married. To get hitched. To get married. Wes and I got hitched in New York at the [music] courthouse. Number seven, to tie the [music] knot. This is another one that's just a synonym for uh to get hitched. So, it also means to get married. [music] To tie the knot. My parents tied the knot in a beautiful church.

Number [music] eight, to go through a bit of a rough patch. Now, this can be used as to go through a bit of a rough patch or to just go through a rough [music] patch. What it means is when a couple is having trouble, a period of problems in their lives, you know, something goes bad and then they're constantly fighting or arguing or they just have some issues, we're saying that they're going through a rough patch or a bit of a rough patch. Number nine, double date. [music] Double date means an activity that two couples do together. So, it can really mean any kind of activity, but many times it just means like a date, like going some somewhere to a picnic or to the movies or to a bar. Just [music] two couples hanging out with each other. It's a double date. My parents always went on double dates with my aunt and uncle because all four of them were best friends. And finally, number 10, [music] on the rocks.

On the rocks is a relationship experiencing difficulties and is likely to fail. [music] On the rocks doesn't necessarily have to describe a relationship between a couple, but it can really be used to describe [music] any kind of relationship. Like if you don't get along with your mother or your father, you can say that your relationship with them is on the rocks. [music] The man is sad because the relationship with his son is on the rocks.

respect and you want to be polite, but for some reason you really need to say this bad word that use this offensive language. So you would follow it with pardon my French. It's like you're trying to say that, well, hey, this is not the way I normally speak. I usually I do not use this language. and you would say something that might be offensive and then follow it with, "Pardon my French." Now, this is not to say I don't get a ration of in every conversation. Pardon my French. Pardon my French. Today's been a gosh dang sugar show. The fact is the industry is all of us by the balls.

Then we have to weasle out of something.

And I like this idiom because, well, I like idioms that have animals in them. And to weasle out of something, it means you're trying to avoid something by being dishonest. And I think we could all relate to this idiom. If you have some housework to do, I know that I have housework that I have to do. Sometimes my wife might ask me to do something and I'm like, "Well, wait. I got I got to go somewhere. I'll be right back." And yeah, I try to weasle out of doing the housework. I think again, we can all relate to this one. To weasel out of something. Hey, stroker. 10 bucks for the cake.

Don't weasel out on me.

I'd be taking an even bigger risk if I didn't hand this to you personally.

You're not going to weasel out of my deal again. If you can weasle me out of this physical.

I will blow your mind by doing something incredibly holy at some point. Amen. Hold your horses. This is well, I think this is actually probably one of the more common idioms. [clears throat] And it just means that you're you're telling somebody to be patient, to wait a moment, calm down, relax, hold your horses. And I it is a very strange idiom because I have no idea how hold your horses somehow became be patient. But that's the way it is. So this is a good idiom if you want to use it and tell somebody, "Hey, just be patient. Just calm down. Wait a second. Hold your horses. Hold your horses. I'm coming."

Well, apparently it is cuz you know this is taking forever. It's forever.

Hold your horses. Contact.

This is dispatch. Come in.

Yeah. Hold your horses down in front.

Come on, sweetie. Hold your horses, buddy.

The next strange idiom is pot calling the kettle black. And this idiom is used to point out a hypocrisy. So, if there's a situation and you're you're trying to point out this hypocrisy, you would just say that that statement. you'd say, "Well, that's that's the pot calling the kettle black." So, to help give you a little more context and meaning, say that you are trying to weasle out of something and I tell you like, "Hey, you should not avoid this. You should do it. You should not try to weasle out of it." And then later on you you learn that I am also trying to maybe weasle out of the same thing or something else. And then you would tell me, you point out that hypocrisy and you would say, "Well, that's the pot calling the kettle black.

Why don't you go put some clothes on?" "Well, isn't that the pot calling the kettle black?" Or, "Uh, African-American." Suddenly, she's thinking of filing a restraining order. Well, isn't that the pot calling the kettle black? Drinking while at school is just stupid.

And most importantly, any of you guys drinking at all is illegal. It's a fair amount of the pot calling the kettle black. Then we have kitten kaboodleoodle. And this this weird idiom means well the whole group uh of something of people the the entire amount all of something. And I think people would use this maybe to to give emphasis when you tell somebody that you want well everything. I want it all. I want the whole kitten kaboodleoodle. That'd be all you. That's the whole kitten kaboodleoodle. Got you ladies. Got you. LAST WEEK MY STOCK WAS WORTH TWICE what it is now. I think about getting out in a whole kitten kaboodleoodle boy. I see a vast improvement.

Not too late to change your mind. A lot of good cops want to drop the whole kitten cool. And who wouldn't? Then we have tongue and cheek. And this idiom, yeah, it's really it's the meaning is very different than those individual words because this idiom means that you are just not being serious. You're making a joke, but maybe you're you're saying it in a serious way, like you're being sarcastic. And you could say that, well, it's just a little tongue and cheek. And I think often you might hear people use it in that way. They're telling somebody else. They're explaining that they're just joking that they're being sarcastic. And you would say, "Yeah, it's just it's just a little tongue-in-cheek." After he was threatened by a group that somewhat tongue and cheek called itself the gay, you're as straight as an Oklahoma highway. Seems like kind of an opportunity missed. Would have been funny.

Well, I I feel that they were just trying to be tongue and cheek. Ah, a winky face. I guess that could be helpful if I'm saying something tongue and cheek. wet behind the ears. And it has a pretty well straightforward meaning. If you would describe somebody as wet behind the ears, you're basically saying that they're inexperienced. And I don't know, well, I don't know how this came about that wet behind the ears became somebody who's inexperienced, but it's it's good to know. And I could say that, yeah, when I first started making these video lessons, I was wet behind the ears. I felt a little uncomfortable being in front of a camera. The the quality of the videos were not that great.

And yeah, it was because I was wet behind the ears. You graduated 6 years ago, so you're 27, 28? Uh, yeah. I don't look at Thank God. My last assistant was only [music] 23 and still wet behind the ears. In fact, even you and some wet behind the ears FBI agent decided to put some informant in my cartel. Next is gung-ho. are gung-ho, it means you're very excited and eager to do something. I am always gung-ho to teach you guys new English lessons each week, especially ones that help you build your vocabulary. That is something that I am gung-ho about. And I hope that you are gung-ho to hit that like button.

Why don't you let your new assistant take all this down?

Wow, you're gung-ho. You're getting a new assistant. We were all pretty happy when Jeff came around. He became really gung-ho about Avid's documentary. Yes, his arm is paralyzed. Yes, his legs are paralyzed. Why is everyone so gung-ho to connect those two conditions?

Then we have a very weird idiom which is mind your P's and Q's. And [laughter] I I in my opinion I think this idiom is perhaps a bit older. It's not one that I have heard in quite some time. And [snorts] what it means if somebody tells you to mind your P's and Q's, they're really telling you to mind your manners, to be careful about the way that you behave. And I I think people might use it more often if you're talking to somebody perhaps a child or somebody who's just really being very immature. You could tell them to to mind their P's and Q's. That's right. Capital City Tissi and former member of the Soviet Union. And we kindly request y'all mind your P's and Q's. Now I want everybody to mind their P's and Q's. That means no effing and jeffing. The next idiom is a bull in a china shop. And often you you would say that perhaps you're talking about a person and you would say that someone is like a bull in a china shop. And what that means is that this person is not really careful in the way that they move around or even behave. And the idiom, if you think about it, it it makes sense because if you have a china shop, China, it's very uh very fragile, very delicate. A bull is not the animal that you would want to have in a china shop because everything's gonna break. So, in a way, it's almost like you're saying that somebody is just not delicate in a particular in handling a particular situation. And you could say that that they were acting like a bull in a china shop. Like an elephant in a china shop.

Bull in a china shop.

Anyhow, hey, I am Kurt.

Get out now. Get out. Bull and china shop. Out of my house. Temple. This is why I come to find peace, dog. You're coming in here like an emot bull in a china shop.

Then we have this strange idiom to bite the dust. And I really like this idiom because I am a fan of Queen and they have a famous song called another one bites the dust. And if you say that someone or something bites the dust, it means well to die, to come to an end or to fail it. So, if you don't succeed at whatever you were attempting to do, you could tell somebody, "Yeah, like I I was trying to to jump over this on my bike and I just bit the dust. I did not succeed. I failed." Or if you want to talk about well something dying, probably more common, you would refer to uh maybe an insect as opposed to a person because you don't want to talk about people that way. You don't want to act like a bull in a china shop. You want to be a little more caring. But if we're talking about like a mosquito and you kill a mosquito, then yes, that mosquito bit the dust.

[laughter] I'm laughing because yeah, this next idiom I think is very strange. I have no idea where it came from, but Bob's your uncle. And this idiom, you may hear it in the US from time to time, but I think it's more common in the UK and Ireland. And what it means is it's really just a way of saying, "Well, there it is. It's done. That's it." And often I think people would use it after giving a set of instructions. You're telling somebody to do something and then once you're finished telling them what to do, you could just end it with Bob's your uncle.

Sit down. Big smiles. Plant the bug underneath the table. Easy peasy Japanese. Bob's your uncle. That's that.

So, I I could give you guys some instructions and say, you know, first, watch this entire lesson. Second, hit that like button. Third, write to me in the comments and Bob's your uncle. There you have it. It's done. It's over. Bob's your uncle. Do you like shopping like I do, cuz if you do, I have some new shopping idioms for you. And because this is a very, very common subject, you are going to hear these idioms all the time. time. So, what I'm going to do is I'll give you the idioms, a little bit of an explanation of how and when they're used, and then an example sentence. So, let's get to it. Our first idiom is window shopping. To windowshop means to just look in the window of a store without buying anything and just kind of look and see what what is there. And this is probably the one I like the least. And the reason is because when you window shop for something, you don't actually shop. You don't actually go inside the store and and buy stuff. You just look, which I guess it can be fun sometimes, but most of the time I think it's more fun when you actually buy things. We've got a lot of window shopping to do. Plus, this is the perfect time to catch up on my window shopping.

I'm very well aware that there are many people who like to window shop and I the only thing I like to window shop for is I think like furniture and interior design stuff. That can be kind of fun.

It gives me ideas. I like to window shop for antiques. So, how about you? What do you like to window shop for? Do you like it? Is it annoying? What do you think? The next idiom is ripoff. A ripoff. And this is used as a noun or a verb. So, something can be a ripoff or somebody can rip you off. And either way, it's not a good thing because when something is a ripoff, it means that it costs way more than it should. Way more.

What? What a ripoff. I GOT RIPPED OFF.

A ripoff is kind of an informal way to say that um somebody's stealing from you. So if something's a ripoff, you almost feel like somebody was trying to steal money from you. That's that's how much you're paying for this particular item. It's a ripoff. $4 for an avocado. That's a ripoff. The next idiom is shop till you drop. You may have heard this one. Uh, I I hear it in movies all the time. Everyone always talks about how they like to shop till they drop. I think it's a it's a catchy idiom because it rhymes. It It just means to shop for a really really long time until you become exhausted.

So, if you have ever shopped till you drop, you know that feeling of the end of your shopping day when you're just like tired and ready to take a nap or something. At Christmas time, I usually shop till I drop for the perfect gifts. The next idiom is retail therapy or shopping therapy. You could say either one. They mean the same thing. What this means is to shop to make yourself feel better. So, just kind of like what it sounds like. This is just something that we do if we've had a bad day or if you've had a rough time. Sometimes we just need a little retail therapy or shopping therapy.

I had a bad day at work, so I did a little retail therapy on my way home. The next one is bargain hunting. And when you bargain hunt, you are looking for deals. That is what a bargain is, is a deal. So bargain hunting means actively searching for really, really good deals on things that you shop for.

Anyway, now we are going bargain hunting. I'm not going to blow this by bargain hunting. I like finding good deals, but I don't think I have the patience to always go bargain hunting. My mom loves to go bargain hunting on Black Friday. The next idiom is to shoplift. And this is a little bit of a bad one because, you know, it involves a crime, which is never good. To shoplift means to steal something from a store. You shoplift it. You take it and hide it and walk out with it without paying for it. It's not a good thing. Don't Don't shoplift. The girl shoplifted some candy from the store. Fit like a glove is our next idiom and we usually use it for clothes or some kind of article of clothing because when something fits like a glove, it means it fits you perfectly. It looks like it was meant for your body and you know it's the perfect size, the perfect shape for you. Fits like a glove.

68 years since I wore this uniform.

You're coming in here like an emotional bull in a china shop. The idiom kind of means the same thing.

If somebody behaves like a bull in a china shop, they are acting recklessly. They are acting clumsily. They are causing trouble. He marched into the meeting like a bull in a china shop. Our next idiom is a shopping spree. And a shopping spree is kind of a short period of time in which somebody buys a lot of things. The word spree, it just means kind of a short period of time and it kind of shows like a lot of things that are happening in a short period of time. When I got pregnant, I went on a shopping spree for baby clothes.

Our next idiom is pay through the nose. And this one's really funny for me for some reason. Just imagine taking out money out of our noses. It's actually not that funny in real life because when you pay through the nose, it means you end up paying a lot of money for something. Usually more than the fair price. Make them pay through the nose.

In fact, they'll pay through the nose for it. So, it's it's not really a fair price that you're paying. You're paying a lot more than that. So, it's not such a good thing. We waited until the last moment to get our plane tickets. So, we had to pay through the nose.

I'm going to teach you some very common and useful American idioms and expressions that you might hear if you are talking to somebody who is from the United States or maybe you can use some of these if you plan to visit the US.

So, believe me when I tell you that this lesson, it's going to be a piece of cake. And that is actually the first idiom that I want to teach you. Many of you are probably familiar with this. I wanted to start with something a little easier and then it'll get a bit more challenging. But if we say that something is a piece of cake, it just means that something is very easy. So I told you that this lesson it's going to be a piece of cake. I'm going to teach you these idioms and expressions. And after I explain them and tell you how to use them, I think that you will have a better understanding and like I said, it's just going to improve your overall fluency. So, this lesson, it's a piece of cake.

Piece of cake. No, Bart. It's a 3,000-y old riddle with no answer.

And every task you undertake becomes a piece of cake. What about a race based on merit?

Rank each person individual. Mhm. Piece of cake.

Then we have the phrase run late or run behind. And they they both mean the same thing. It just means to be late for something. Now, I I guess I could say that I use this phrase quite often and I would tell people that that I'm running late and I would use it often because yes, I am sometimes late for appointments or if I'm going to meet somebody, but I would call ahead and tell them, hey, you know, don't worry, I'm I'm just running a little late. So in that case, I think it also implies that you are on your way to to get somewhere or if you're talking about perhaps like a project and you say you tell your boss, you know, I'm running a little behind, you're telling them that it it may be late, but that you're working on it. So again, this is a great expression. I think uh especially if you are somebody who who tends to be late for things, you could just tell somebody, "Hey, you know, I'm running a little late, but I will be there." It's only 4:00, [music] but they are so slow. I'm running late, too. We're running late. We're always running late. We're running a little behind schedule.

Hi. Sorry I'm late. I've been running behind all morning. Then we have the expression to get the hang of something.

And this just means to learn something that's not quite obvious. So, for example, I think often you would use this when talking about some type of game or activity. You're trying to learn it and and get a little bit better at it. And in that case, you could you could tell somebody, you know, I'm I'm starting to get the hang of this. I'm starting to feel a little more comfortable. I understand it a little bit better, and I'm starting to get the hang of it. One thing I would like to point out with this expression is that it is often going to end with that pronoun it. So, in that case, it's almost like you know what it is.

learn it a little bit better, then you're trying to get the hang of it or starting to get the hang of it. Or you could say he he is getting the hang of it, but you know the activity. So, it's often going to end with that pronoun it. Don't worry, you'll get the hang of it.

We'll help you. How's he doing? hadn't quite gotten the hang of it yet. Then we have the phrase all set and this just means that that you are ready and you are everything is in order. So it's something that maybe you could ask to somebody if you want to know if they're ready and you could say hey you know all set or you could tell somebody if you want to say that you are organized you're prepared and you are ready to go and you'd say you know I'm I'm all set. We're all set. We are ready. We're organized. We're prepared. You could also say, just to throw in another expression, good to go. It means the same thing. If somebody says, you know, I'm good to go, that means that they are ready. They're all set.

Ready?

Ready. All set.

Okay, we're all set. Let her rip.

Is it okay if I put out some key that Pam brought back from Puerto Rico?

Sure. Thanks for asking, Pam. We're all set.

Let me know what you got, Ela. Good to go. Weapons good to go.

You're good to go. Then we have the expression to sound like a broken record. And it really means well kind of exactly what it says and that is that somebody is just repeating something again and again. Especially when it's not really necessary and you would say to another person like, "Oh, you know, you sound like a broken record. You just keep repeating the same thing again and again and again." Especially when you don't want to hear it, then you could use this expression and say that someone sounds like a broken record. I hope that I don't sound like a broken record because I do.

You know, I know I sound like a broken record.

You're going to murder me like you murder my father. You people sound like a broken record. Babies, babies, baby.

You sound like a broken record.

Next is the phrase pitch in. And this just means that you start doing something as a group, especially something that is helpful. So if you are working with a group of people, maybe a team, you want everyone to pitch in. You want everyone to do some work the something that's helpful for the group or the team. And in that case, you want everyone to pitch in. But it's used in in that context that you might ask someone who may not be helping, and you would tell them to pitch in or say you need to pitch in. But it is to to do something that's helpful.

Everyone here has a job. We all pitch in.

Glad you could pitch in. He needs all the help you can get. By the way, if you need help with that, I'm more than happy to pitch in.

Then we have the idiom to blow off some steam. And this just means to to do something or to say something that helps you get rid of of some energy, often some some negative energy that if you're you're angry or upset, you might try to perhaps you go for a run and you just want to blow off some steam. You just want to want to get rid of that energy. So, you could use it when talking about a a an activity that you do something physical in order to blow off some steam. Or maybe it's something that you you say to someone. Perhaps you even might yell at someone and you're just you're trying to blow off some steam.

No, let him go. He needs to blow off some steam. I've never seen him like that.

Give the big logo a break. Even he needs to blow off some steam. I've been working so hard this semester. Really need to go crazy. You know, blow off some steam. You still seem stressed.

You want to blow off some steam?

something is not really difficult and it's it's should be easy to understand. And you'd say, you know, look, it's not rocket science.

Barb, it's not rocket science. You just tell your parents you're going to stay at my place afterwards. Then we have the expression to table something. And this just means to postpone a discussion until a later time.

And often, I think it might be used in business. Perhaps you're having a meeting with a group of people and and you have a list of items that you're going to go through, but you want to discuss one of them at a later time. You might say, you know, let's let's table this item for right now and then we will discuss it later. So you could table some item if it's on an agenda or maybe you could just table some discussion and you will talk about it at a later time to table something. I think what the Dana is trying to say is uh there'll be time to talk about that. We can table that for a later date. What is your job exactly besides making balloon animals? Protecting your reality. Okay guys, can we can we table this discussion right now? The fact is is that we have this stone. Next is the idiom to jump on the bandwagon. And this just means to start supporting something or to even start doing something because it's trendy or fashionable. often I I think I would use this idiom uh when talking about sports that if there is a sport team that just suddenly started winning and then everybody they they like this team all of a sudden they're they're a huge fan then you could say look you know uh he he just jumped on the bandwagon he only likes the team because everybody else does he's supporting this team he jumped on the bandwagon of course this has happened to me if I'm living somewhere and then that that city has a sports team. They become really great. Yeah, I jump on the bandwagon. Everything's echofriendly this, echofriendly that.

I just haven't jumped on the bandwagon yet. Millions of people got on the anti- Denmark bandwagon. Show me some kind of kindness. Not jumping on the Let's Get Meg family bandwagon. Let's stick with sports for right now because the next expression is to sit in the nosebleed. Or you could say to sit in the nosebleed section. And what this refers to is that you are sitting in seats that are that are very high up at the the very top of a stadium and you're very far away from all of the action. Because you're so high up there, you are sitting in the nosebleed section. And the reason why we use this is because if you are at a very high altitude, then maybe your nose would start to bleed because of the altitude.

So, if you're high up there in the stadium, then you could say, you know, I'm I'm sitting in the nosebleed section. When I jump on the bandwagon and I want to go see uh a sports team play, typically I don't have a ton of money to spend, so I have to find the cheapest tickets, which are usually high up there in the stadium, and I would sit in the nosebleed section. Can you take me to a concert with my new friend Harper? Sure, why not? It'll be nosebleed or obstructed view seat. But you know what? I have a friend. Uh he's got a couple of seats. If uh if you don't mind the nose bleed section, they're yours. No, we don't care. WE JUST WANT TO GO. Then we have the idiom to fall through the cracks. And this just means to overlook something. So if you are perhaps doing some project, you don't want to overlook the details. You don't want anything to fall through the cracks. I need you to be sure that things don't fall through the cracks. Basically, I needed to be more like Dean here.

You do it every week and you forgot.

Things are falling through the cracks. I'm pretty sure you've worn that sweater four days in a row. This whole uh single parent thing, everything is just falling through the cracks. So, what did I tell you? Those idioms and expressions, piece of cake, all right, it's not rocket science. And I'm sorry. I know that I sound like a broken record because I keep repeating these these same idioms and expressions over and over again. I hope you're not upset with me. But if you are a little upset and you think you need to blow off some steam, then I would suggest that you check out another video lesson. I hope that you enjoy these lessons and that you just you jump on the interactive English bandwagon.

Jump on the interactive English bandwagon and [laughter] because okay, I I can't think of anymore. I just trying to review as much as I can. Now, you just learned many idioms, and they can certainly be confusing because the meaning doesn't really match up with the individual words, but that's not all that can be confusing. After all, English is a kind of a crazy language. because they either have the same spelling or the same pronunciation or even both. And I really want to highlight some words, talk about the difference, why they're confusing, and hopefully just clear up any confusion that you may have. So, let's do that right now. English is full of confusing words like these first two words that I have for you, between and among. They're both prepositions, but you're going to use between when you're you're talking about, well, two things or two people.

There there's a one- on-one relationship. use among when you're talking about well more than to and and it's not really distinct. So, I I could say, you know, the information in this lesson, let let's keep that between you and me. Talking about a one-on-one relationship between you and me. Or there there's an idiom that is between a rock and a hard place. This is talking about uh a difficult situation. A rock, a hard place. You're between it. It's It's not a good place to be. It's a difficult situation. Now, with among I I know I told you to keep this information between you and me, but I I'd rather you share it among all of your friends.

So, in that case, I'm I'm talking about that group. And you you may also hear people use amongst instead of among. And they they mean the same thing. I think it's more common to use among, especially in the United States. Amongst it's a little bit of an older word, but there are still some phrases, statements in which people are likely to use amongst. If you're in front of a group of people and maybe you're talking to them and you have to leave the room, you could say talk amongst yourselves. That is that is a statement that you may hear in which people may use amongst. My name is Wes.

The next two confusing words that I have for you, reluctant and reticent. They're both adjectives, but you're going to use reluctant to to refer to something that maybe you are hesitant to do or you're unwilling to do this thing. Use reticent when you're you're really talking about somebody's manner that they're shy or reserved. So, in that case, I I think it's more common that you're going to hear people use reluctant when when talking about things they're unwilling to do in general. Reticence's going it's going to allow you to be more specific. So maybe if we're talking about somebody shy to speak and they don't want to speak, they're reluctant to speak, then you could describe them as being a bit reticent because we know that they're a little shy. Um, if I were talking about maybe a team that had to do a presentation and I could say, well, well, she was reluctant to put together the presentation. She was unwilling to do it. Maybe it was very difficult. But then he was reticent to give the presentation. So in that case I'm talking about well his his willingness to speak. He was reticent. He was shy. He didn't really want to do it. Here are another couple of confusing words achieve and accomplish. And these are great words to know. So you're you're going to use achieve when talking about well you want to succeed in something. If you use accomplish, then that means well you you finish something often successfully. So if I were to say like I want to achieve my goal, it means that I I I want to reach this point and I want to do it successfully. That's a little different than if I say I accomplish my goal. Well, then it's finished and well perhaps I I was successful. Think of it this way. I I always talk about trying to achieve English fluency that you want to be successful in in learning English.

And it's not something that you're probably ever going to finish. So, in that case, I'm not going to use accomplish. But if I'm talking about like a mission or a task, well, then I could say that I I want to accomplish this mission. Or maybe I already accomplished this mission. It's done. It's complete. And I did what I needed to do. Then we have customers and clients. So customers refer to people who who are buying a product or service and clients refer to people who need some type of professional support or help from another person or a company. So I am going to to tell you I'm going to give you a situation uh talking about some people and I want you to think whether I'm talking about customers or clients. I'll give you a moment and then I'll I'll tell you the answer. So if I am talking about well shopping at the mall those are customers. If I need to hire a lawyer and I need to use their services then I am the client. If a company uses services from another company then they would be this is a little tricky because you they could be either clients or customers. So in some instances they may be used interchangeably. It really just depends on the relationship maybe between these companies. But that's another reason why they can be a bit confusing. And finally, if I were to talk about, well, people at a people at a restaurant, those are customers. Yes, those are customers. Here are another couple of confusing words figuratively and literally. They're they're adverbs. We use figuratively to refer to well, using words or phrases in an imaginative way, talking about something that that is not realistic. you would use literally to talk about something that well is realistic, something that happened. So there there's a phrase that people might use with figuratively and they may say figuratively speaking at the beginning of their statement and then go on to say something that is not realistic.

Figuratively speaking, people were kicking down the doors to buy the new iPhone. So it's not realistic. It's just an example. And people would would do this really kind of to emphasize their statement. If I want to use literally, and this does happen, maybe you're you're talking with a friend about another friend and that person shows up and you say, "Hey, we were literally just talking about you. So, this was realistic. It happened." The reason why these words may be confusing is because people use literally instead of figuratively. And I know that may seem a little strange because their meaning is it's pretty much the opposite. And I there are people who say this is incorrect. This should not happen.

Somebody might say something like I I literally have not slept in weeks. Of course, that's not true. It's not realistic, but they they may use literally just to try and emphasize the fact that they have not been sleeping at all. Or I could say people have literally been kicking down the doors to buy the new iPhone. So once again, I'm I'm talking about something that's not realistic, but I'm using literally instead of figuratively. This is something that happens quite often in spoken English, and I'm even guilty of doing this from time to time. Then we have these confusing abbreviations, eg versus IE. And it's something that people will often confuse in writing.

They may even confuse it in spoken English if people say these abbreviations, but you're going to use eg in order to mean for example. You're going to use iie. It's it's like saying that is to say or it's even interchangeable with specifically. So let me try to make it a little easier for you to understand. If I were to say something like I've been trying to eat more foods that are high in protein, eg tuna, broccoli, chicken, I'm really just giving an example of some of the things that I'm eating. If I if I were to say, well, the hotels downtown, they raise their price during the high season, i.e.

May to August. Now, I'm specifically talking about that time period, May to August. Let me give you a couple of statements and you tell me if we should use eg or i.e. If I were to say the restaurant is closed once a week on Mondays. All right. In that case, you should use iie because we're talking specifically about Mondays. How about um there are many chores that I have to do during the week. Take out the trash, mop the floor, uh clean the living room. Okay. You should have said eg because once again I'm giving just examples of some of the chores that I have to do. So just really keep that in mind. Eg is used to just give uh some examples.

I.e. is much more specific. You are talking about something that is specifically happening or some specific information. And then we have these two confusing words consecutive and concurrent. And I think they may be confused mostly because of well the spelling and they kind of sound like they might be the same word but they have different meanings. You're going to use consecutive to talk about well something that happens one after the other without interruption. And you use concurrent to talk about well things that are happening at the same time. So I could say that the city experienced consecutive heat waves. there was a heat wave and once it ended without interruption another one started or uh if I were to use concurrent I could say well the country is experiencing concurrent heat waves that there are different heat waves happening across the country at the same time it's concurrent so just remember they're two different meanings consecutive one after the other without interruption concurrent it means happening at the same time we need to have a talk about phrasal verbs. Okay, so phrasal verbs can be very confusing. They can be very annoying, but they're very important to learn because we use them quite often, especially when speaking. I want to look at some phrasal verbs that well the these can be very confusing because their meaning is similar.

Nevertheless, there are some slight differences which I want to teach you. And this is really going to help with your comprehension and your overall English fluency. So, let's just go ahead and start with these two phrasal verbs right here. Burn up and burn down. teaching English and uh you know, I was having to learn a lot about the English language and one of the things that I came across was just trying to show how crazy the English language could be. And somebody was asking a question and they said, "How is it possible that a house can burn down at the same time it's burning up?" That just doesn't make any sense. But it's true that can happen because if we have this sentence and somebody says, "Oh my god, my house is burning down." All right? It means the same thing and somebody could say, "Oh my god, my house is burning up." So both of these phrasal verbs mean that something is destroyed by fire. And in the example that I just gave you, you could use either phrasal verb. You could say, "My house is burning down." Or, "My house is burning up." either one of them, it's okay. They mean the same thing. But there are there there is a slight difference between these two phrasal verbs because if you say that something is burning down, what that makes me think of is some type of structure like uh a home or a building or a bridge. And when it burns down, that structure is just destroyed and often it may just collapse. If we're talking about something that burns up, it makes me think of something that is perhaps smaller, like an individual item. Not always because you could say that a home is burning up, but I think uh you will typically use this with smaller individual items, paper, a book, or perhaps photo albums. Let's use that as an example. So, if you have this home and your home is burning down inside the home, maybe you have some photo albums. It's a smaller item and if it's destroyed by the fire, then you would say, "My photo albums burned up in the fire. They were destroyed by the fire." But another word that I want to give you to help you probably better understand it would be that it was consumed by this fire. I think that that word may help you make a distinction between burndown and burn up. So if something burns up, it's really consumed. You could also use the phrasal verb when you get rid of energy. When you consume energy, you can burn up calories. And the other thing that I would say about burn up, I think there is a level of intensity that this is happening uh right in front of you.

It's intense. It's really hot. It's getting hotter and hotter. And in that case, think of the same way if somebody has a fever, they might say, "Wow, your forehead is burning up. You're really burning up. It's intense. It's getting hot." And and that is another way in which you could use this phrasal verb. So, in my original example of saying that my house is burning down or my house is burning up, I think they are interchangeable. You could use either one, but I think it's because you are talking about something that is happening right at that moment. You are watching this structure getting destroyed by the fire. My house is burning down. You are watching the home getting consumed and it's very intense. My house is burning up. If we are going to talk about this in the past and it's already happened, I think in that case most people would use burn down and you could say last year my home burned down. All right, you you're probably not going to use burn up if you're talking about something that that's larger like a home. You may use it if you are looking at it at that moment and you see that the fire is consuming it. It's very intense. you you could say, "Oh no, my house is burning up." So again, even though these phrasal verbs have a very similar meaning, there are some slight differences between the two. Now, let's look at the phrasal verbs walk up and walk down. So, let me give you an example. Perhaps you are looking for a restaurant and you ask somebody on the street, "Hey, do you know where this restaurant is?" And they say, "Oh, it's just right over there. Just just walk down the street and you'll see it." Or maybe they say, "Just walk up the street and you'll see it." In this case the both are correct.

You can use either one because walk down and walk up it means that you are just walking to some place. I would say that there can be some subtle differences because you can take geography into consideration. So for example if a person is going to be walking uphill then I'm more likely to use walk up. Just just walk up the street and you'll see it. If the person's going to be walking downhill, then I'm probably going to use down. Just walk down the street and you'll see it. And if it's flat, well, then you can use either one. I would say that I think that in spoken English, people are more likely going to use walk down. Now, one way we can check this is using a great resource like Google's engram viewer, which pretty much shows you how common different words and phrases are, and you can compare the two. So, I can compare walk up and walk down. And when I looked it up, lo and behold, I saw that their usage is very similar. One is not that much more common than the other. And then I was thinking, wait, maybe am I wrong? Is it just me that I would use walk down and a lot of other people would use walk up? Perhaps that is the case. But we can look at it uh a little closer in depth because if you use walk up, it can also mean something that's a little different. So walk up can mean to uh to a to walk to a person or place with a level of confidence that you are feeling very confident. You have something you want to say and you might walk right up to some person or you walk up to some place. Let me give you some examples. I could say she [snorts] walked up to her boss and said, "I quit." All right. She walked up to her boss. She was very confident and and really had something important to say.

Another example uh would be he walked up to her and asked her out on a date. Again, in that situation, you are walking to someone, but it really uh it there really is a level of confidence that you have when you are going to this person or or this place. So, when I went back to Google Engram Viewer, I was a little more specific with my uh with my phrase and I put in walk down the street and walk up the street. And yes, in that case, uh you can see that walk down the street is more more common than walk up the street. And this also applies to drive. If you want to say drive up or drive down, perhaps you're looking for a grocery store and you ask somebody and they say, "Oh, it's just just drive down the road and you'll see it in about 10 minutes." Or just drive up the road and you'll see it in 10 minutes. Again, they're interchangeable. They mean the same thing. You are driving to some place. But I think it also applies if somebody's going to be driving uphill. You could use drive up. If they're driving downhill, drive down. And if it's flat, either one. But once again, I think drive down is going to be used uh more often in spoken English. Now, let's look at these phrasal verbs, takeoff and liftoff. So I could say the helicopter is taking off or the helicopter is lifting off. Both of them are correct and both of them kind of mean the same thing in this case, but these phrasal verbs do have uh a bit of a difference. So for example, take off refers to an aircraft or a bird or an insect that leaves the ground and begins to fly.

Liftoff refers to the action of some aircraft or spacecraft that is leaving the ground. And typically with liftoff, I I kind of think of going straight up. You are going straight up from a particular point. So I could you could say that a rocket could lift off the ground or a helicopter could lift off the ground. Uh a hot air balloon could lift off the ground. A drone could lift off the ground. So, if we're talking about takeoff, I could use takeoff with all of those as well. I could say the rocket took off, the helicopter took off, the hot air balloon, it also took off. Even the drone, it took off.

Because I can use takeoff with with all of those as well as many more. If we're talking about well, like birds, insects, and planes, takeoff is used much more often than lift off. The reason why I think somebody would use liftoff would be if they they just want to be a little more specific uh and precise when whenever they're speaking or perhaps writing and they want to say that that this aircraft is leaving the ground and it's kind of moving straight up. So you think of a a rocket, a helicopter, a hot air balloon, a drone. Those are things that can lift off but they could also take off as well. I hope that you have a little bit of a better understanding about the differences between these phrasal verbs even though in certain instances they are interchangeable and you could use either one. Used to and used to. Now they they can be a little confusing. Not not necessarily when speaking but when trying to determine well which one you should use in writing. And I say they're not really they're not really confused when speaking because the pronunciation is the same. And I will come back to that a little bit later on. But for right now, let's uh let's focus on used to because this is definitely the most common one that you are going to use when speaking or writing. And I think well used to alone can be confusing because well dictionaries may look at it different ways. Cambridge has used to as a modal verb. Mryiam Webster says that used to is an adjective as well as a verb. McMillan dictionary has used to as a modal verb. Oxford Learner's Dictionary also says that used to is a modal verb and dictionary.com has it as an adjective as well as a verb. Let's first make a distinction between used to as a modal verb or verb and used to as an adjective. Now the the grammar is different. the part of speech but also the meaning is different. So right now let's let's get rid of the adjective forget about the adjective let's just focus on used to as a verb or modal verb and I keep saying verb modal verb as you saw some of the dictionaries uh have it listed differently and that is because in some ways used to acts like a modal verb and in other ways it it really doesn't. But whether or not used to uh is considered a verb or a modal verb, the meaning is the same. And let's talk about the meaning because that is very important. And what this means is it's talking about something that was repeatedly done in the past or even a situation that existed in the past, but the the thing is not done anymore or the situation does not exist anymore today in the present. So I could we'll give you some examples talking about myself.

I could say I used to live in South Korea. That that is true. That is a situation that existed in the past. And when I lived in South Korea, I used to run uh around this lake twice a week. Bamoon Lake, I used to run around it twice a week. And that is something that I had done repeatedly except for the winter. Uh in the winter it was a bit too cold. So during those months uh I used to sit on my ass. I could say that sometimes, not always. In those sentences, used to is a modal verb. It is a helping verb. And I already told you that it has some similarities to modal verbs. Like it it has one form.

It's not conjugated. So I said, I used to live in South Korea. If I change the subject to he, it's not going to change. He used to live in South Korea. But used to it it can act differently from your average modal verb. Uh, for example, with modal verbs, you you're not going to follow it with to. So, I can say something well like I can swim or it will rain or you should write to me in the comments. I I just love hearing from you. You should write to me in the comments. Now, with all of those sentences, we have the modal verb and then we follow it with the infinitive, the base verb. There is no to. An exception is used to. I used to run around the lake. And well, even if I wanted to change the subject and talk about myself in the third person to show that the form is not going to change, I could say in winter, Wes used to sit around on his ass, but sometimes. All right. So, to is going to come before the base verb. And that's why I think if you're if you're trying to think about it, I think it's best to consider used to as just one phrase. Try to think about it together as one phrase. Used to. Questions and negative statements also make used to different from other modal verbs. Because if well, if we're talking about questions, typically we can just use the modal verb to create a question. Can he swim? Will it rain? And if we're talking about negative statements, then you're you're just going to use not with with a typical modal verb. Uh he cannot swim or it won't rain. But this is not the case with used to. Of course, used to it just has to be different than all the other modal verbs. And I think this is also when people might say, okay, it acts more like a verb because if we're talking about questions, used to it refers to the past.

So, with questions, you're going to use did. And if you're going to make a negative statement, then you're going to use did not. So, if we're going to use it uh as a question, I could ask you, did you used to study English? And if I want to say a negative statement, then I could say, well, I didn't used to have hair like this. and that's because I used to shave my head. But more importantly than my shaved head is that you now see that used to has changed. The spelling has changed to used to. And this is what I want you to remember. If we're talking about questions and negative statements, you are going to use used to and you're going to spell it us. I told you that the only distinction is in writing because well the pronunciation's the same whether you're saying used to or used to. It's the same pronunciation.

The D and the T, they blend together to create one sound. So yeah, the pronunciation it's really the same. Nobody's going to know if if you end up making a mistake because you're still just going to say used to or used to. And now that you have a perfect understanding of used to being used as a modal verb/verb, let's now talk about used to being used as an adjective. So the the first thing that I want to tell you is the meaning. I told you that the meaning is different. And what this means is that well it's referring to something that you are familiar with or that you are accustomed to and it often follows the verb to be.

So, I could say, "Well, I am used to hot weather." All right. I'm just It's just something that I'm used to. I'm not used to cold weather. It's just something I'm not that familiar with. And in this case, because used to

is an adjective, it's not going to change. Whether we're talking about questions or negative statements, you are always going to spell used to like this. US D. Uh, another thing that I want to tell you about used to as an adjective, just giving you another example. I do not think any of us were used to staying inside for so long during the pandemic. And I think that's true. I think we can all relate to that sentence. And the thing the thing that I wanted to point out with this sentence is that you you may often follow used to with a Jared and you're used to doing something like I'm used to taking the bus in the morning or I'm not used to working late. But even though we were not used to staying inside during the pandemic, we had to get used to it. And I just gave you an example right there of it being used with another verb that is not the verb to be. And that I think is also it's a common usage to get used to doing something or even people using it as an imperative statement, giving a command and you're telling somebody get used to it. But just remember used to as an adjective has a different meaning than used to as a modal verb or verb. That's the one thing that I really want you to remember from this lesson. And I yes, it's confusing, but I think over time, the more you listen, the more you practice, you're just going to get used to it. There are 30 cows in a field and 28 chickens. How many didn't? If you are confused right now, then that is because of homonyms. And I promise that that by the end of this lesson, you will not be confused anymore. So, let's talk about homonyms. like these two words right here, flower and flower. So, homonyms are words that that are pronounced the same or maybe they're spelled the same as another word, but they have a different meaning. And flower and flower, you can hear that they are pronounced the same, but you can see that they are not spelled the same and they do not have the same meaning. All of the words that I'm going to teach you in this lesson are like this. To be exact, they are called homophones, but homophones th those are a type of homonym. I think that'll make it a little bit easier for you. And I'll tell you the different meanings as well. And if we're talking about this flower, well then that is one that you might find in a garden or in a park. It has a very pleasant smell. And this other flour, well, that is referring to that fine powder that that you might use for cooking, like if you're baking a cake.

Then we have these two words right here, addition and addition. All right, good words to know. So, the words have have three syllables and that first and third syllable, you can hear that schwa sound, that uh sound. The tio n is pronounced as shun and the syllable stress comes before it on the second syllable. Addition. If we're talking about this edition, well then we're referring to adding numbers together like in math and this other edition would be talking about like a book or a newspaper or a magazine being published and and there might be different editions. Then we have click and click. So this first click I think is is more common. It's the verb to click to click on something.

Think about a computer. You might uh click on a link. I hope all of you click on that like button and and show me a little bit of love. The next click that q, it does it has that k sound, but it's referring to a a small exclusive group of people. And what what I would say is maybe think about like high school. That's how I think it's commonly used talking about young people. They have their exclusive group of friends and you might refer to it as a click. I don't think this word is often used to reference or talk about adults. Then we have these two homonyms right here.

Patience and patience. These words have two syllables. The the stress is on that first syllable. And notice both words they have that tie e which is pronounced sh with that schwa sound. Patience. And in this word patience the t is going to be silent. And this refers to well a person who is under medical care or getting some type of medical treatment. And this patience refers to the ability to wait and not be annoyed by something, especially if there is a delay. And you could say somebody has patience. Moose and you guessed it, moose. All right, these words are homonyms. And you you may be familiar with uh this moose, that large mammal that's part of the deer family. And this other moose is talking about that that creamy and foamy dessert. And it's actually a French word because the dessert it comes from France. And in French it means like like froth or foamy which is what gives it its second meaning in English because you could talk about mousse referring to a foamy substance that somebody could use for for styling their hair. Like right now um I actually I did not use any mousse. I did use a little bit of gel but but not mousse. The next set of homonyms, metal and metal. So, both of these words, it's going to end with that dark L, that you're not going to release it at the end. But, but these words are homonyms in in American English, mostly because if we're talking about that T in metal, it's going to be a flap T, which is going to sound more like a soft D sound. And the reason that we're going to use a flap T is because it comes between two vowel sounds. So, um, I'm from the United States, so I would pronounce it as metal, which then means

Hopefully, you're building your vocabulary. It allows you to be a little more specific because it's talking about this the sound of a person's voice. So, if somebody sounds horsearse, it means that that their voice sounds a bit rough, possibly because they have a cold. So, you could hear somebody in choir and say, "Hey, your voice it sounds a little horsearse. Do you have a cold? Are you feeling okay?" Then we have principal and principal. These two words I think are commonly confused. So hopefully we'll clear this up right now. Of course, both words sound the same. So they have three syllables. The stress is on the first syllable. That second and third syllable, you'll hear that schwah sound. Principle.

Principle. So these words are confusing because they have multiple meanings. And I think this is especially important in your writing because of course you want to make sure that you are using the correct one. So, if we're talking about this principal as a noun, it refers to a person who is the leader of a school. A school has a principal. If we're going to use this word as an adjective, well, then it just means that something that is very important. I could talk about the principal reason for for doing something. Then we have gorilla and gorilla. These words have three syllables that that first and third syllable you'll hear that schwa sound and the stress is on the second syllable. gorilla. Gorilla.

And this gorilla refers to that that giant ape. Perhaps you have seen a gorilla at the zoo. And this other gorilla, it's a noun. It's talking about a like a member of an unofficial military group. And the the group of people together, you would say they are gorillas. The next set of homonyms, core and core. And I'm sure that one word you're thinking, what? Wait a second. that sounds nothing like the way it's spelled. Well, the reason for that, it's it's like you have that that P and S. You don't even hear it. The other thing I would say about this word is that it is singular. You see that s? I think people might think that it is a plural noun, but it's singular. So, let me let me explain why this is pronounced core.

So, the origin of this word, it comes from Latin corpus, which means body. Now, this word was borrowed from French as well as the pronunciation core, which is why you don't hear the P and the S. So, if we're talking about the this core, it refers to the central part of something like the Earth's core. And this core refers to a a military organization. Kind of like that that body, that organization, that body, the army corps. Then we have sweet and sweet. I'm sure you may like this one word like I do. Sweet. It is talking about a flavor, something that's sugary. I really enjoy foods that are sweet. And this other sweet that s ui, it is pronounced like sweet sweet. And that is because it's another word that's been borrowed from French and it refers to uh a set of connected rooms like um that you might find at a hotel, a hotel suite. Then we have these three words.

Seas, seas, and seas. Okay, you have that long e and it ends with that z sound. So seas, well, this is just talking about like the ocean. This sees the verb uh to look at something and really talking about it in the third person like he sees or she sees. And then this other verb to seize something means to grab a hold of it suddenly. Okay, so now that you have a a much better understanding of homonyms, let's go back to that riddle I told you at the beginning of the lesson. There are 30 cows in a field and 28 chickens. How many didn't think about which word is a homonym? There are 30 cows in a field and 20 ate chickens. Okay, the word eight is a homonym. We could be talking about well the number eight or the verb to eat in the past tense which is eight.

And that that was the word I was saying all along. There are 30 cows in a field and 28 chickens. How many didn't? The answer of course is 10. I I know you're probably thinking, well, wait a second. Cows don't eat chickens. Of course they don't. It's just a riddle. But it's it's a fun little way to to introduce and talk about homonyms. Which preposition should we use to complete this sentence? In, on, or, or at? Actually, you could use any of them. All of them are correct. It really just depends on the context. And that's what I want to do in today's lesson. I want to break it down for you so that you easily understand how to use each of these prepositions when talking about place. And I'm also going to give you a a little bit of a mini quiz at the end to see how much you've learned. So let's begin with in.

And when you're thinking about in, think about an enclosed space that you are surrounded on all sides. And I I want to give you some well general ideas as to when you would use this preposition. So you will use in to talk about locations within a larger area. How many people live in this town? You'll use in with a car, taxi, or van. If I were to say, "Hey, we're waiting in the car." It's used to talk about workplaces or industries. If someone asks, "Where do you work?" I work in human resources. Or, "I work in fashion." And if if you've seen many of my video lessons, you you know I absolutely do not work in fashion. It's my Yeah, my fashion's pretty bad. you would use in with water. Let's all get in the pool. Or the expression, there's plenty of fish in the sea. So again, we're talking about the sea. We're talking about water. And you would use this expression to say that, well, if somebody's single and they're looking to have a relationship and find a partner, you're saying this to to encourage them to keep looking, that there's somebody out there for them. Don't give up hope.

There's plenty of fish in the sea. We use this preposition with class. I'm having trouble paying attention in class. I'm enclosed in this space. And we also use it with printed materials. If you don't know the meaning of a word, you can look it up in the dictionary. And you can think about it that well that word it's surrounded by other pages. So it's in the dictionary. So just keep these in mind when you're thinking about in. And now let's talk about on and when you will use this preposition. And when it comes to on, I want you to think about a surface that something is attached to or touching something else. So we use on to refer to the position of something on any surface. Your coffee is on the table. I found some money on the sidewalk. It's used to talk about a floor in a building. I work on the seventh floor.

It also describes the position along a road or river or by the sea or a lake. I could say the car is on the road. The boat is on the river. Again, it's on that surface. Or I could even say I grew up on the east coast. So, I'm talking about the coast or I grew up on that surface. And I would say on the east coast. So, when you're talking about the coast, east, west, use on.

Now, the next few are technically not on the surface, but I still want you to use on. So, we're going to use it when talking about being on public transit, like a bus or a plane. I'm on a bus heading downtown or I'm on a plane to Chicago. And I know this can be a little tricky because we use in with a car, like you're surrounded, you're enclosed. So, one way to think about it is that you're going to use in with smaller vehicles and you'll use on with larger modes of transportation, but again, there's always exceptions because you're still going to use on with a bike or motorcycle. On a bike or on a motorcycle, we use the preposition on with left or right. My house is on the left. Oh, no, no, no, sorry.

It's on the right. And we'll use this preposition with media as well. show on Netflix or you may be watching this lesson on YouTube? So just keep all of this in mind when it comes to using on. So now let's talk about at and when to use this preposition. And when you think about at, I want you to think of a point, a specific location or position. So, of course, we're going to use at when we're referring to the position or location as a point. I could say there's a package at the front door. We use it to refer to an address. I live at 44 Main Street. And this can be a little confusing because if we're just talking about the street, then we'll use on I live on Main Street on that surface. But if I give the specific location, 44 Main Street, well, now we're talking about a point. So, we're going to use at. We use this preposition to refer to most shops or public places. And in this case, I want you to think about a larger point. So, I could say, I'm shopping at the mall. And you would use at even if you are in the mall because if somebody were to ask you like, hey, where are you? They're typically asking about your location. So that's why you would use at and say I'm shopping at the mall. We use it to refer to group activities. I could ask you how many people were at your party. We also use it with school or university. I studied at a top-notch university. And that's not really true.

I studied at a party school. But you get the point. With either of those, we're going to use at. And we use this preposition with work or home. I could really say that right now I'm working at home. So this should give you a better idea as to when you would use at. Now let's go back to our original sentence. And I told you that all three prepositions are correct. It really just depends on the context. So if I say I'm in the lake, well, that just means that I'm physically in the water. I'm surrounded by the water. If I were to say I'm on the lake, well, now I'm talking about the surface. So, it really implies that I'm probably on a boat and I'm out on the water and I'm on the lake. And if I were to say, "I'm at the lake." Well, now I'm talking about a specific location, even though it's a larger area. If somebody were to ask, "Where are you?" then I would say, "I'm at the lake." Because we're talking about location.

And right now, I want to test your knowledge. I have a little mini quiz for you. I'm going to give you a sentence and I want you to think well which preposition best completes it. In, on, or at? I'll give you a moment to think about it and then I'll tell you the answer. found a mistake the first page. Which preposition would you use? The answer is on. So in this case, we're talking about the surface of the page. On the first page, I found a mistake on the first page. So, so just keep this in mind. If we're talking about a page, we're going to use on. And that is a little tricky because remember, we're going to use in when talking about printed materials like a book. So something is on a page, but in a book.

Here's your next sentence. She felt proud, the end of her month-long journey. What do you think? The correct answer is at. She felt proud at the end of her month-long journey because we're talking about that point that location. She's at the end of her journey. And these are really common phrases with at if we're talking about well at the beginning of something or at the end of something. Then there's this sentence. There are no public toilets. M the city center. The correct answer is in. There are no public toilets in the city center. We're going to use in because we're talking about a location within a larger area. Here's a question for you. Do you have anything in your pockets?

I think you know this. The correct answer is in. Do you have anything in your pockets? We're talking about an enclosed area. Here's another one. We wanted to sit in the front of the plane. I'm trying to trick you a little bit, but the correct answer is at. We wanted to sit at the front of the plane. I I told you that with public transit, you're going to use on on a plane, but in this case, we're talking about a specific location on a plane. So in that case, we're going to use at at the front of the plane. How about this one? Please refer to the graph m the slide.

The correct answer is on. Please refer to the graph on the slide. So once again, we're talking about the surface of something on a page on a slide. So how'd you do on the quiz? I I want you to be honest. Let me know down in the comments because I just love hearing from I'm going to tell you a secret. Well, it's not really a secret, but you should listen carefully to what I'm about to say because I'm going to tell you the difference between these [music] two words. And these two words confuse English learners mostly because their meaning is pretty similar. So, let's get right to it. First, let's look at the verb say. Now, we use this verb when we want to say something to someone. Now, we don't necessarily have to identify the person or people that we are saying something to, but we're just saying something in general. And that something might be general information. The weather report says it's going to rain today. In this example, the weather report is saying something. We don't really know specifically who they're saying it to, but they're just saying it in general. Another example is that you might be saying your opinion about something. The kids said West teacher is crazy. Or perhaps you're reading what the instructions say. Instructions say if we finish the game, it'll all go away. So in each of these examples, we were saying something to someone. Now this is different from the verb tell which is when we tell someone something. In this case we usually identify the person or people that we are talking to which is why tell is often followed by a direct object. Take a look at these examples.

Yana told Wes to take out the garbage. In this example, Yana is telling Wes. Me, she's telling me something. She's telling me to take out the garbage.

Wes, can you please take out the trash?

Yeah. Yeah, I'll do it.

We tell our students to join our social media classes. This, of course, is something that we tell you all the time. We tell you to join our social media classes. So, join them. Here are a few more examples using tell. And keep in mind the object that follows the verb. She told me to sit in this chair. The teacher tells us to do our homework. My mom told me to take a bath. I told you not to wake me up.

Now, keep in mind that there are a few exceptions when it comes to using tell. I I know English and all the exceptions. It It sucks. But you don't always have to tell someone. Sometimes you can just tell something. For example, you can tell a secret. You can tell a lie. You can tell the truth. You can tell a joke. And you can also tell a story. These are several exceptions when it comes to using tell. And you just have to memorize them, use them, and you will eventually remember them. I'm telling you the truth. Okay, let's practice what we've learned. And this is a listening comprehension activity. I am going to tell you a sentence and that sentence is missing a word which is either say or tell. After listening to each sentence, I want you to say your answers out loud.

you'll be saying this to me and I'm going to be listening. I'll give you a moment to say your answer and then after I will tell you the correct answer. So, let's begin. I don't want you to any more lies. I don't want you to any more lies. The answer is tell. This is one of those exceptions. You tell a lie. I don't want you to tell any more lies. I I can't hear you. Can you please your answer again? I want you to your answer. I I can't hear you. Could you please your answer again? I want you to your answer. The answer is say because I want you to say something, which is the answer. I want you to say your answer out loud. That was so rude.

I I can't believe he didn't Hello. That was so rude. I can't believe he didn't Hello. The answer is say because we were talking about something that the person didn't say. I can't believe he didn't say hello. Um I can't remember what what did you me I should do? Um I I can't remember. What did you I should do. The answer is tell because we're talking about telling someone something. What did you tell me I should do? Perhaps it's a little easy when I do the activity. Now, let's see if you can listen for these words when other people say them.

Be careful what you Be careful what you

Be careful what you say.

Now, tell the truth. Now, tell the truth.

Just the first thing that pops into your mind. Just say the first thing that pops into your mind.

Just say the first thing that pops into your mind. Don't his name. Don't his name. Don't say his name.

And what did you tell her? And what did you tell her?

And what did you tell her?

Something I'm [music] giving up on you.

something. [music] I'm giving up on you. Say [music] something. I'm giving up on you. I just want to tell you that you are amazing. You have made it through the entire lesson and got so much exposure to a variety of different words and phrases. And I'm sure that you knew some of this vocabulary already. I'm sure that some of it was also new. But in general, the goal is to keep building your vocabulary and developing your understanding of the language because ultimately that is what's going to help you reach your fluency goals. If you enjoyed this lesson and learned something new, you can let me know by hitting that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time. So long.

LESSON 140 OF 749

A Proven Way to Effectively Build Your Vocabulary | CHUNKING

in today's lesson i want to talk to you about another great technique to help you build grow and develop your vocabulary and the way that you can do this especially if you would like to do it quickly is with chunking now chunking in a nutshell just means that you are learning phrases and not just individual words over time our brains have developed to recognize patterns that that's just how we're wired let me give you an example say that i were to ask you to memorize 100 numbers 100 different numbers and you had to say them back to me in this specific order you're probably thinking like well that that's impossible i can't do that it would take me forever to memorize 100 numbers maybe you don't think you can do it at all but what if we broke up those numbers into smaller chunks let's say chunks of seven numbers

now i don't know how old you are and when you first started using a cell phone but before we started using cell phones and keeping all of our phone numbers in here we had to memorize the different numbers when i was in university just before i started using a cell phone i probably had about 15 different phone numbers memorized i had my number memorized i knew my work number i knew the number of my family members and friends now if i were to line those up and put those numbers in order and tell you my number my work number my friends numbers you can do the math 15 times seven that is a hundred and five different numbers that that i could just tell you and the reason i could do this is because i had these numbers stored up here in these small chunks of seven and language works the same way we can build our vocabulary by learning small chunks so when you're using chunking you're just learning groups of words as a single unit here's another example of how i use chunking when i was learning spanish so when i first started learning spanish i wanted to learn a lot of useful and important phrases kind of like just those survival phrases that you need to know throughout the day maybe you're you want to say hello or you want to ask where the toilet is so one phrase that i wanted to learn was to tell people to have a nice day and that phrase is que tengo and wendia so here's what i had to do in order to learn this chunk and then use it effectively i had to do three things the first thing i had to do was just learn that there were five different words in this chunk that i needed to use

five different words in order to say this phrase then i had to learn the order of those words they had to understand me so in this chunk of words i had to know which came first second third fourth and fifth finally i had to learn how to pronounce this chunk together and to say these words as one unit here's what i did not have to learn i didn't have to learn the grammar this phrase uses the subjunctive and as a beginner learning spanish the subjunctive it is way too difficult trying to understand that would just cause me a lot of pain and heartache and and it wasn't necessary i could still learn and use the phrase i also did not have to learn the meaning of every individual word all i had to learn was the meaning of the chunk have a great day personally i think it's great if you can understand the meaning of all the individual words however i want you to realize that it's not always necessary it's not absolutely necessary in order to communicate so remember when we're talking about chunking we're talking about learning groups of words and if we can learn and use these groups of words it's just going to help us communicate more effectively and naturally so in my example i was talking about a complete sentence have a great day when you use chunking you don't always have to learn a whole sentence you can just learn a chunk of a sentence and then fill in different information around it for example you can learn the phrase every now and then just learn this chunk it's four words this phrase can go at the beginning of a sentence or it can go at the end of a sentence it's an adverb phrase that means the same as sometimes so instead of saying sometimes i eat pizza you can say every now and then i eat pizza sometimes i go to the gym every now and then i go to the gym or we can move it to the end of the sentence and you might have a conversation with somebody and they could say i like to travel internationally every now and then or maybe they're talking about family and they tell you i visit my parents every now and then and you understand what they're saying because you understand this chunk that doesn't always mean that everything is interchangeable for example sometimes can go in the middle of a sentence i sometimes watch tv in the case of every reading comprehension this is because you will identify groups of words instead of trying to follow each and every individual word ultimately you'll be able to listen to faster speech and you'll be able to read faster as well chunking will also give you a better understanding of the information another advantage of chunking is that it's going to help your speaking fluency because you're going to be saying these groups of words as one chunk instead of trying to pronounce each individual word let me give you an example when i think of greetings and i hear students learn greetings sometimes i would hear students learn greetings like the following they would say hello how are you i'm fine thank you and you i understand exactly what's happening in this greeting i can hear the words being pronounced but it doesn't sound natural it sounds robotic a more common natural greeting would be would be this how are you i'm doing well so let's compare those two quickly how are you you can learn that as one chunk and you can say those words individually like i just did how are you there's nothing wrong with it but it's more natural and common to hear people say how are you so if you learn it as that chunk as that one unit and that's the pronunciation that you try to use you're going to sound a little bit more like a native speaker because you're going to blend those first two words how are how are and then that last word you is going to have that schwa that yeah how are you but again with chunking you don't have to learn all of the specifics about pronunciation you just have to learn how to say it together how are you the next part which is the response i'm fine thank you and you again i think many students might learn this but it doesn't sound natural not many people are going to respond this way they might just say you know i'm good i'm doing well but in my example i said i'm doing well again if you learn this chunk then you're going to learn how to say it naturally in this case i'm dropping the g in doing i'm not saying i'm doing well that's okay but a lot of people might drop that and just say you know i'm doing well i'm doing good how are you doing so when you learn chunks of words and practice saying them as one unit it's really going to help your speaking fluency one final advantage is that you're learning the connections between different words when you understand that some words are commonly used together and you're able to identify these words then you'll be able to practice using them on your own and again this is going to help you sound more like a native speaker you'll be able to speak english more naturally and effectively for example there are many words that are commonly used with other words think about the word strong it's an adjective and when i just say the word strong you might be thinking of somebody flexing their muscles they have strength however we can use strong with other nouns and we could talk about coffee and say wow that's strong coffee or maybe you're talking about the weather and like wow that that was a strong thunderstorm you could even talk about food and say something has a strong taste in this case it's like it means powerful now it doesn't mean that we can substitute it in every way that you talk about something being powerful because you can say that a film is powerful it affects you emotionally we would not say that a film is strong so that's why it's so important to learn those different connections because there's a big difference between me saying well yesterday there was a thunderstorm and yesterday there was a strong thunderstorm and as you understand these different connections and realize that some words are commonly used with others that's just going to help you communicate more effectively and you'll be able to express your thoughts opinions and ideas and say exactly what you want to say so when you learn how different words are connected you're basically learning a unique language pattern and as i said at the very beginning our brains are designed to recognize patterns we just need to learn words and phrases and build our vocabulary in small manageable chunks so remember chunking is a great technique for building your vocabulary sharpening your listening and reading skills and developing your overall english fluency that's all for right now so i hope you keep learning keep practicing and keep up the good work

A vs. AN - Learn this ONE rule | Articles in English

today i have a great lesson for you actually it's an awesome lesson which is all about these two words right here [Music] hey everyone my name is wes from interactiveenglishvideos.com and this is the number one channel to help you practice and improve your english skills at least i'd like to think it's number one and today i have a great lesson for you it's it's kind of a grammar lesson because i'm going to talk to you about the words a and and and i we i really want to focus on how they are different and when you need to use these two words so it kind of ties in with grammar writing speaking a little bit of everything so the first thing that you should know is that a and n are considered indefinite articles or as i would typically call them non-specific articles and the reason why i say non-specific is because these words come before nouns that are either general or the identity is not known they can also come before adjectives as well so let me give you an example you could say i have a book or i have an english book english is an adjective that's modifying the noun book or maybe i'll give you a question a couple of questions should we go to a movie or maybe should we go to an aquarium all right and if you don't know what an aquarium is it's like uh it's like a zoo for fish for sea creatures but if you're just looking at these sentences that i just said some we're going to use a and others we're going to use n and i want to focus on well why is that what is the difference i think that it's important to begin with a problem when it comes to teaching these two words and it's learners sometimes get some information that's not so good so for example let's let's first look at the alphabet the english alphabet has 26 letters a b c d f g i j j j k l m p q r s t v w x y z z now what some teachers may say is that you are going to use a before words that begin with a consonant and you are going to use and before words that begin with a vowel and this is not it's not correct all right i think the reason why teachers say this is because generally speaking it's true in many cases plus it's very easy for learners to see the word that that's going to come after the article and you could see that first letter and you can identify oh that's that is a consonant that is a vowel and you want to follow this rule except again it's that rule it's it's not it's not accurate and i want to tell you that it's not about what you see it's about what you hear so you shouldn't just look at the word and and look at that first letter you need to think about the sound that you hear that first sound because the real rule is that you are going to use a before words that begin with a consonant sound and you are going to use and before words that begin with a vowel sound so let's let's first start with a and i want to give you some example sentences i have a book book begins with that consonant sound or she applied for a job or he told me a story that's that that s consonant sound so for each of those nouns we are going to use the article a now quickly i want to talk to you a little bit about the two different pronunciations because you might hear people pronounce it like a or you might hear people pronounce it like uh now both are accepted forms and there's no rule saying okay use this pronunciation here and use this other pronunciation here there is no rule generally speaking i think most english speakers are going to use uh which is the schwa sound and that is an unstressed vowel sound uh i i have a book she applied for a job he he told me a story now in my professional opinion i think that people might use a when they really want to emphasize that noun and typically i think they may they may be speaking a little slower and again they're just trying to give something a little more emphasis so so think about when people are you know they're they're they're expressing an emotion maybe they're angry or they're anxious or that they're upset and in that case you they may emphasize a noun so i could say for example she said the job interview was a disaster all right i'm trying to emphasize the fact that the interview it was a disaster or i could say he has a story to tell all right again i'm giving that noun a bit more emphasis or if somebody is maybe they're very anxious and they could say look we need a plan all right this is very important we need a plan and this this is true for even these lessons because i always need a lesson plan before i do these lessons i just i just don't turn on the camera and start talking i i need to organize things and how i'm going to present the lesson and i certainly need a lesson plan i even use this pronunciation at the very beginning of this lesson when i said i have a great lesson for you i was just trying to emphasize that yes this is a great lesson now that that doesn't mean that you always have to say that i can use uh as well and again i think that is the more common form but most importantly i want to get back to focusing on the difference between a and n so a is going to come before words that begin with a consonant sound and n is going to come before words that begin with a vowel sound it's not about what you see it's about what you hear so let me give you a few examples using the article and so i i gave you that one of those first sentences i have an english book english begins with that vowel sound or maybe i ask you the question would you like to live in an igloo all right igloo begins with a vowel sound yeah i don't know would you like to live in an igloo or i could say you know sometimes i can be a bit of an ass all right and that is true yes sometimes i can be a bit of an ass ass begins with that vowel sound and if you want to if you want to learn how i can be a bit of an ass i did an entire lesson on this word it is a great lesson that is all about the word ass and i will link that up here you can check that out so again we're going to use and before those nouns because they begin with a vowel sound let's practice because i i want you to participate in this lesson and i want you to say these sentences out loud so i'm going to give you a sentence with a blank and i want you to fill in that blank with either a or n and you're really you're just going to be identifying different objects so let me give you an example here is this you're going to say it's a watermelon all right watermelon begins with that that consonant sound so i am going to use the article a but i'm going to pronounce it with the schwa sound because that's generally that's generally what i do it's a watermelon just say the sentence out loud and then i will tell you the answer and maybe you'll also learn some new vocabulary words are you ready okay it's a coconut it's an ostrich it's a unicorn all right remember with this one it begins unicorn with that y that consonant sound all right the next one it's an acorn it's an x-ray all right again x-ray it begins with that vowel sound x x and x-ray same as excited or expert you're going to use and the next one it's a url all right again this is an acronym so we it begins with that consonant sound a url or some people might say this is a euro all right either one url you're real doesn't really matter you're still going to use a it's an honest mistake all right that h is silent an honest mistake okay now this one is a little tricky because you can use either one you can either say it's an herb or you could say it's a herb now the reason why i i say that is because in the united states which is where i am from that h is silent so i would use the article an it's an herb but in the uk they would pronounce that h and you would hear that consonant sound so they would use a it's a herb so again the rule still applies even though sometimes it's sometimes it still can be a little confusing because all over the world there are so many different varieties of english and with that last one i was just trying to show you how english can you know it can be a little different depending on where in the world you are so again just i want you to focus on the most important thing from this lesson it's not about what you see it's about what you hear you're going to use a before consonant sounds and you are going to use and before vowel sounds so i hope that you learn something new and i would just love it if you write me a comment all right and notice how i wanted to emphasize that in saying a comment just because i love hearing from you also if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button and as always thank you so much for watching and i will see you next time

Abbreviations & Acronyms to Build Your Vocabulary

so if you want to improve your English fluency then you need to know abbreviations and acronyms they are so important and that's what we're gonna talk about today I'm gonna talk to you about some common and popular abbreviations and acronyms that you are going to come across if you are reading a book or a newspaper and you may even hear some of these in just general conversation so this is really going to help so hello to everyone out there my name is Wes this is interactive English and we are all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and if this is your first time here welcome please say hello to me in the chat or write your name in the comments because we just love hearing from you guys so I just want to give a quick shout out to some people who are we're here with me hello Mary Angela Syed

Ryan sleepwalker Lally sada it's great to see you thank you so much for joining me and the way that we're going to do this I'm gonna try and I have a few different activities that we're going to do to practice your knowledge of abbreviations and acronyms now it there is a lot to go over and there are so many of them so it's not like we're gonna go through all of them today I have just chosen some that I think are the most common abbreviations the most common acronyms and and just just to practice them a little bit because that's really what's gonna help you improve this is an interactive lesson so as we're going through this I want you to write your answers in the chat and if you're watching this later write your answers in the comments and participate in the lesson so let's begin with talking about well okay first well you know what are abbreviations when we talk about abbreviations we're talking about shortened forms of different words and phrases now think of abbreviations as like the umbrella and underneath that umbrella are our different categories and I'm going to talk to you about four are different categories right now so types of abbreviations now the first one would be a contraction and this is when letters are omitted and you would just shorten the word and put a period after it and this is common when you're talking about proper nouns for example MT this is when you would be talking about the name of a mountain so if you're reading this if you're you're reading a newspaper you should pronounce this word like Mount and even that is a shortened form for example Mount Everest so you would often see this when it comes before when you're talking about a proper noun the name of a mountain Mount Everest Mount Elbert Mount Aconcagua

Mount Kilimanjaro you don't know I am just naming the highest mountains on all of the different continents now there's also a truncation and this is they shortened it's a shortened form using the first part of a word so I probably don't need to tell you what set is if you see this it stands for Saturday now the important thing to know when you're talking about those first two alright this is something that you will read or it's something that you will write you are not going to pronounce Saturday like SAT this would just be when you're writing or you may come across this in reading if you just say you know hey this Sat I'm gonna go do this people are gonna be confused they're gonna be like what are you talking about Sat is the past tense of sit so keep that in mind the first two the contraction and the truncation is something you might use if you're writing but it's something that you're probably going to come across when you're reading so I think it's it's very important to make that distinction now the third one is an acronym that's right an acronym is a type of abbreviation it is underneath that umbrella and an acronym is pronounced as a single word ASAP now if somebody says you know I need it ASAP do you know what that means I hope that you said it stands for as as possible so these are very common in spoken English people will use these acronyms and they will pronounce it as a single word I need it ASAP bring it to me ASAP that report it's due ASAP as soon as possible now initialism initialism is actually a type of acronym it is another kind of acronym acronym but I'm going to put it in a different category because initialism is when you use the initial letters but you're going to pronounce them individually you're not going to say it as one word for example FBI if you're talking about this part of the United States government the FBI it stands for the Federal Bureau of Investigation now often people don't say Federal Bureau of Investigation they want to shorten that and they will just use the initials FBI and this is something that I think it just takes time and practice the more exposure you get to the language the more you are going to understand okay which one is an acronym and I just say as one word and which one is more initialism and I need to say the individual letters so the way that we've broken the way I've broken down this lesson is the first part I'm gonna practice the number one and number two we're gonna do those together contractions and truncations and then the next part of the lesson is going to be acronyms and initialisms because reading a story with learners and they come to an abbreviation sometimes they don't know how to pronounce it now I think that one's a basic one now let's look at Monday all right this is a truncation how would you truncate Monday what would you do again you're going to cut it off and just use the beginning it's beginning letters it's very common when talking about days of the weeks or months so I told you Saturday is just SAT period Monday you should write em o n all right Monday so this is something again that you might find if you're just writing an informal note maybe an email and you just want to write it quickly so instead of writing out Monday you might just say mo and excellent you guys are rocking this yes sir geez Samiha Mary Katerina excellent so let's look at the next one a pint often I would think of hey you know a pint of beer so again if you're saying the word out loud you're going to say pint but if you are writing something or you're reading something it's just going to be PT all right just that PT and that is an abbreviation for pine kilometer what do you guys think alright if we're talking about a killer may a kilometer or kilometer we're talking about a distance and the abbreviation for that is a km so again this we're starting a little easy it will get more challenging don't worry and these are all abbreviations Boulevard all right what do you think that is the the name of like a street so you have you could have a street you could have a drive Lane Boulevard and if you want to abbreviate that Blvd and again it would most commonly be used when you are actually writing the proper name alright so you're talking about the the actual name of the boulevard so if you're just writing about it separately like I live on a boulevard you're probably not going to abbreviate it but if you're talking about the name then you will and the last one Department what do you guys think how do you abbreviate Department I hope that you said DEP T all right this would be a shortened form to write Department often I think you might use this more in business in your job if you're just writing an email to somebody or you're writing a note and you're talking about somebody else or another group in a different department you may see an abbreviation like this so these are all different either contractions or truncations and this is just this is just something you're going to see if you're reading or maybe you might use in your writing this is not going you're not going to speak these abbreviations you're actually going to speak the full word so the next part that I want to do we're gonna stick with these I'm gonna show you a postcard alright it is a postcard it's not a real postcard and I want to see how many you can identify so take a look at this postcard just glance through it how many different words do you see on there that you can abbreviate and when I say abbreviate I'm talking about we can use a contraction and rich like shorten the word or a truncation and shorten the word and if you guys are just joining us we are talking about abbreviations and acronyms and we're just practicing using them because this is very important for your comprehension it really helps as well as your fluency so what do you think how many words in there do you see that we can abbreviate and then and then and then I'm gonna tell you how many and we're gonna go through those abbreviations at the end alright so what do you think how many do you see how many words I know some of you're like writing the word but in total okay uh in total these are the words that I had in mind there are six that I want to focus on August st.

Avenue Fahrenheit gallons doctor so let's just take the first one August if you are going to abbreviate that and we're going to make it shorter alright what would we do excellent I see some where some Michelangelo perfect Nino August is going to be now the one thing I would say if you are just stating the month you're probably not going to abbreviate it you would really just abbreviate it if you're writing the date and in this case we have the date August 8th so because of that because we're talking about the date it may be abbreviated Aug 8 but we're gonna read it on August 8th I've visited the beautiful st. sulphice Church and I'm probably mispronouncing this if you are from Paris and you are French and I apologize but how would you abbreviate st. okay this is another one that I think people might come to and maybe they don't know it so excellent I see some great answers yes marna sorry if i mispronounce names who else Natasha excellent Katrin so st. is just st alright on August 8th I visited the beautiful st. sulphice Church then I took a walk down the famous remember I'm actually saying the name of the Avenue how are we going to abbreviate Avenue do I see some excellent yes perfect they see some great answers so if we're talking about Avenue the abbreviation is just a ve all right we are going to truncate it and use a ve I walk down the famous Avenue de shuffle is it jump shuffle easy and I'm probably butchering that pronunciation as well it's okay it was so hot outside about 97 Fahrenheit so instead of Fahrenheit what am I going to abbreviate that with all right yes M RN excellent you're going to abbreviate that and many of you are probably thinking well what what Fahrenheit okay so in the United States instead of Celsius we use Fahrenheit and that's what I did I wrote this as though it's somebody from the US well because I am from the US and Fahrenheit yes Katarina excellent is just F all right you're just gonna write the letter F and the same as Celsius you're just gonna write that first letter C so it was so hot outside about 97 Fahrenheit so I probably drank three gallons of water all right how can i abbreviate gallons again we're talking about a unit of measurement for a liquid three gallons of water that is actually that's quite a bit of water that somebody is drinking and if you're going to abbreviate gallons it's just gonna be G al it's that truncation we're just gonna use those first three letters three gallons of water still I got some heat exhaustion so I had to go to the clinic where I saw dr. jeckyl and I think this is one of the most common abbreviations that you would use with a person's name dr. is abbreviated dr dr. jeckyl and of course you're probably wondering well dr. Jekyll is not from Paris he is from London and yes I just I couldn't think of the name of another doctor but you get the idea so this is just a good practice for being able to identify it and and again understand when you might see these because this is for for writing you are going to see these types of embroidery Vienna in in a postcard like this it's something you may come across but I just want to let you guys know again if you guys like what we do if you guys want to connect with us check out our patreon page we offer some cool rewards and again it's just it's just a way to become a part of our patreon family I see some patrons in here now and again we just appreciate and love all the support I will throw a link right there boom in the description so what I want to do now is we're gonna we're going to move on we've talked about some truncations we've talked about contractions now I want to look at acronyms and initialisms so let's practice this and the first way I am going to give you an acronym and I just want you to tell me what do you think it means all right here is a very common acronym right here so I would say identify the acronym and I put it in quotes wait where's my there we go my quotes all right which is spoke in English because somebody might say this right here hey you need to enter your PIN and if somebody's talking about your PIN it is an acronym you pronounce it as one word what is the meaning of pin is it a private individual number is it be personal identification number or is it C personal individual number all right I'm trying to maybe throw you off with some of this but which which does it stand for the acronym pin I think many of you have probably heard it you're familiar with it you you know what it is but do you know what it stands for and I think this is the challenge with many acronyms is that people know the meaning but then when you ask well what do these individual letters stand for it may be a little tricky excellent perfect thank you Lally Mary Jane Catherine II know M RN go Sarah Angela the answer is B all right your pin stands for your personal identification number and this is a very very common acronym because you know if you have a bank you probably have an ATM card that you use and you have a PIN number on it so it is the code that you use at your bank the next one let's look at it is right here so it says so I would say this for example this would be something I would say we live in Europe so when we buy something we have to pay a vat all right now if you're talking about that and another way people might use it if they're buying something perhaps maybe they go to a restaurant well I think you would know depending on where you live but you could say oh what is this what is this charge what is this VAT I see these I see these letters here this v80 but again it's an acronym you're going to pronounce it as one word that what does it stand for a value added tax vendor added tax or C value added tax which one does it stand for what do you guys think let me know write that in the chat or the comments if you're watching it later excellent yes I think everybody knows VAT Sedna's bint kutzia yes IRA Estella hello excellent al-amin perfect so many it's his answers are going so fast that is value-added tax so in some countries they they have a value-added tax of that which you will see on a receipt if you buy some things all right so now I'm gonna make it a little more difficult I am going to give you the acronym I want you to write the meaning I'm not gonna give you this is not multiple-choice now I want you to write the meaning what do you think it stands for okay so and this is another one that I think is common I don't know what happened to him he's gone AWOL so what do you think those letters stand for a WOL what is I mean first of all like what do you think is the meaning of a wall and then what are those letters stand for so this can be pretty difficult but I chose this one because I think it is a little more common you may hear this acronym if you're watching a TV show or a movie or just even in conversation with a native English speaker especially from the United States so what do you think the a wall stands for if somebody has gone AWOL and that is often how it would be used you would use it in that context that somebody's gone AWOL he's gone AWOL she's gone AWOL um so I've got some answers Wow all right thank you for answering Catarina Adney Oh Danny you guys are close so no idea that's okay this is a little more challenging if somebody's gone AWOL it stands for absent without leave so this is an acronym that means that somebody has left a particular group this acronym comes from the military that if somebody's in the military they are supposed to stay there but if somebody leaves without permission that's the key they leave without permission they would say that they are a wall so it started out as a military acronym but nowadays you can use it in you can use it in a variety of situations if you're talking about somebody leaving a group without permission maybe you work with somebody maybe you work with your colleagues on some project and somebody has not been showing up to the meetings they've left they don't have permission and you're telling the boss like I don't know where I don't know where he is he's gone AWOL he is left he is not there or maybe in a music group somebody leaves the music group they've gone AWOL they leave without telling anybody without permission it is a good acronym to know all right AWOL the next one all right this is more of a political one and I'm gonna read this I'll share my personal feeling a little bit so I don't want to get too political but this is one that you will hear nowadays especially if you're keeping up with American politics so I'd say wow that POTUS he's something all right and maybe you can you can infer my feeling based on the intonation that I'm using but what does it stand for POTUS if you're watching the news and I think I just gave it away I'd mentioned the word politics I didn't want to but if you're watching the news and you hear this term POTUS what are they referring to alright and I put the American flag in there because again it is it's a very American acronym alright and I would say again just to capture my feeling I'd say wow that POTUS mmm he's something all right so yes if you're talking about the POTUS this is a political acronym excellent Danny Josh have been here English vibes we are referring to the President of the United States and if I would say it like this I'd say yeah he's something yeah it's not not something I'm very happy about but if somebody says POTUS it stands for the President of the United States the same with FLOTUS you might hear somebody mentioned FLOTUS and it's talking about the First Lady of the United States so this is a political acronym which you you will hear if you're watching the news and you like to stay up on current events and you're interested in politics and government so we're gonna Ken we're gonna switch it up I'm gonna make it I'm gonna make it even more challenging now what I'm going to do is I'm going to give you a sentence and I want you to rewrite the sentence using a type of acronym but the acronym is going to be initialism so that is the accurate that's the type of acronym I wanted you to use remember it's all like categories and subcategories abbreviations that's at the top an acronym is a type of abbreviation and even under that initialism is kind of a type of acronym but you have to say each individual letter so I want you to rewrite the sentence using an initialism alright I'm gonna start out easy so you know what I mean so here is the sentence I want you to rewrite it and I will give you some time to do this and I'd say last night she saw this mysterious thing flying in the sky alright so this is a little bit of a transformation to practice your overall well kind of your vocabulary and see what words you know because these are very common acronyms

that I'm talking about and I think most of you should be able to get this one last night she saw this mysterious thing flying in the sky how would you rewrite that sentence alright so again if you guys just joining us we are practicing abbreviations and acronyms in order to improve your comprehension and your fluency so again wait if you guys can try to rewrite the sentence I know it's a lot more to type but it's good practice see if you can rewrite the whole sentence I think most of you know the acronym but I'm more curious to see how you would say the sentence alright so yes excellent uh go SIA meirin ah okay yeah I think yes I got some good sentences in there what I would say there's a there could be more than one day I would just say last night she saw a UFO alright in this case again you you don't know what it is I don't think I would say the UFO because it's not really specific it's it's just general because we don't know exactly what it is or that UFO that would make me think that we know some more information about it but we saw a UFO an unidentified flying object if you don't know what that stands for that there it is right there it stands for unidentified flying object initialism UFO all right so let's look at the next one now you know what I want you to do try to rewrite the whole sentence and use an acronym if it's difficult to read I'm gonna say it so try it try to just listen for it so the sentence is I read a book that told me how to change the oil in my own car I read a book that told me how to change the oil in my own car so what what acronym what it's initialism again this is one where you would say the individual letters would you use all right how could you rewrite that sentence all right I read a book that told me how to change the oil in my own car all right the key word there I'm gonna give you a hint in case it may be a little difficult a little confusing the key word there is own alright we're talking about your own car alright it's something that you are doing to your own car alright so how would you rewrite that sentence they told me how to change oil in my alright so first you got to think about which acronym we're gonna use I see bent bent baladi you you have the acronym how would you write the sentence so the acronym that we're talking about is yes Alex a DIY DIY stands for do-it-yourself and often times when you hear this Do It Yourself I think it's commonly used when talking about books because there are so many books out there telling people how to things on their own oh you want to fix computers here's how you do it by your own you want to create a website you can do it on your own you want to fix your car you can do it on your own and it would be called a DIY book and the sentence that I would put that I made I read a DIY book I would use it as an adjective so we often refer to something and say it is a DIY book it is the type of book so instead of saying it's a fantasy book it is a romance novel you would say it is a DIY book and often in book stores you might find a section of the book stores that is DIY that all of it is do-it-yourself and that's what it stands for right now I read a DIY book so I could change the oil in my car so if I'm writing that I don't need to say my own car because that's what DIY is saying it's saying that I did it myself Do It Yourself DIY so that is a good one to know a DIY book is saying do it yourself it'll it teaches you something so you can do it on your own alright the next one this is a this is another very common one all right and I don't know if many of you you maybe many of you will get this easily and others maybe it's a little more challenging but I'd say he suffers from a chronic condition that includes attention difficulty hyperactivity and impulsiveness so write the sentence alright see if you can write the sentence and I'll give you a hint this is a pretty short sentence so you already know that the acronym again it is an acronym that I've just I've just taken from the internet chronic condition that includes attention difficulty hyperactivity and impulsiveness alright what what what acronym again it's initialism because you would say the initial letters what am I talking about all right what do you guys think all right seeing some good answers Catherina um Nino Mary Jane right yes actually I think technically oh you guys actually gave a better answer probably because yes you have ADHD often I I just put down another form of it a DD somebody suffers from a DD which stands for attention deficit disorder but you could say ADHD which would include that hyperactivity now the reason why I say this is common because this is a chronic condition if somebody suffers from a a DD ADHD they can go to the doctor and they may get some medicine but it is something that I think a lot of people throw out there if somebody has trouble paying attention somebody might say you know I'm a little a DD and that just tells you if somebody says that that they have difficulty paying attention now it does not mean maybe they've gone to the doctor and that's what they said but again the reason I put this is because a lot of people will throw it out there without having gone to the doctor that they know that oh this means you have trouble paying attention it probably applies to me and then they might go tell other people yeah you know I'm a little bit a DD or they may describe another person and say yeah he's a little a DD he doesn't pay much attention or she has a bit of a DD so this is a very common acronym that you would come across but again you're going to pronounce each letter a DD attention deficit disorder and this one this is one of my favorites okay remember you need to bring your own beer to the party this weekend okay how would you rewrite that sentence and this is a good one and I'll tell you why in just a second because it applies to it applies to many different things all right remember you need to bring your own beer to the party this weekend how would you how would you rewrite that sentence okay what do you what do you guys think all right this is I think this is more something that I think you hear a lot more in pop culture you might hear it if you're watching a TV show or a movie but it's a good one to know and the reason it's a good one to know is because they people use it in a variety of ways so again I think mini you got the acronym but hey how would you guys write it how would you change that sentence I think that's what we need to practice about taking it and then using the acronym in the sentence where would you put it how would you write it all right so um you need to okay all right Danny gave it a good try you need to be why I'll be the part that that's very close so many of you have the the acronym the initialism BYOB BYOB stands for bring your own beer but if I was going to rewrite no rewrite this sentence right here what I would say is that the party is BYOB and you would say remember the party this weekend is BYOB bring your own beer so you would say that a party is BYOB the reason why I said this is a great acronym to learn is because you can you can take beer out of there and you can replace it with well whatever kind of party you're having perhaps I have a party and I say well everybody needs to bring juice alright jokingly I could say well hey the party's BYO J bring your own juice or maybe everybody has to bring a cake and say hey guys the party's BYOC bring your own cake so this is an acronym that you could replace it with something that everybody must bring this thing BYO bring your own and then whatever it is but most commonly I think people would say bring your own beer if you're talking about some kind of informal party that people are having and they'd because the person does not want to buy beer for everyone they would say the party is BYOB alright so this

this is good practice if anything maybe some of these you you already know it's good review because you you're going to find those contractions and truncations when you're reading articles reading stories especially informal things and those acronyms you are going to hear them all the time if you're watching a TV show or movie but it's also those are things that you can throw out and actually use in your everyday conversation like that one I talked at the beginning like I talked about it beginning ASAP as soon as possible a very common one so thank you guys so much for joining me if you enjoyed this lesson and liked practicing your English please hit that like button that lets me know that okay you guys I should continue doing these live lessons on a variety of different topics so like and share the lesson we always love hearing from you so write to us in the comments and again you can check us out on our social media if you haven't joined our Facebook our Instagram I recommend that you do so because we we always try to practice there and have people practice with us there so check that out uh here I'll go ahead and throw a link so here is our Facebook if you have not already been to it boom alright check out Facebook we're also on Twitter and Instagram thank you guys give some quick shout outs um where is it gosh it's moving so fast and I can't even see the names the names went away I'm sorry ah there they come thank you Syed Jun wah Walter Mary thank you guys didi you Hania Nino Lally Syed so Gigi thank you guys for being here booster corn hope you guys have a wonderful day Claudia M RN I know we'll be back next time for another life lesson have a wonderful day I will see you then so long

Accent & Pronunciation Training | 25 Sentences to Enhance Your Fluency

I told ChatGPT, "Give me 25 sentences in English that are commonly used but difficult to pronounce for ESL learners because of pronunciation or connected speech." And I want to go over these sentences right now, practice them with you so that you can improve your overall speaking fluency. And if you are someone who wants to develop your skills when it comes to pronunciation, connected speech, or accent, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is West, the channel is Interactive English. It is all about helping you reach your fluency goals. So, the way it turned out, ChatGPT organized this into three different groups. And the first 10 sentences have to do with connected speech.

So, let's have a look at our first sentence, which is What are you going to do about it? And there are a couple of different reductions, and I want to add one more thing. So, what are you? I'm not going to say the individual words just like that. The first thing I want you to know and be aware of is that the final T in what you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T. This is a distinct part of the American accent. So, it's going to sound like what are you? Can be either stressed or unstressed. If it's stressed, it's going to sound like you. When unstressed, it's going to sound like it has more of a schwa sound in unstressed uh ya. What are you? Going to is probably the most common reduction, and you hear it all the time in spoken English. What are you going to do? Just those six words, I think, are incredibly helpful because there are so many different ways to end this sentence. What are you going to do tomorrow? What are you going to do next week? What are you going to do after lunch? The The thing I'll say about this particular question is about it. We can link this together. Linking is when we link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word. About it. It's like we're moving that consonant sound over. What are you going to do about it? Let's say it a few times and I want you to practice shadow. Say it with me and I'll start out slow and then we'll get a little faster. So, let's say it slowly. What are you going to do about it? What are you going to do about it? What are you going to do about it? I think it can sound a little aggressive, so I don't know how often you might find yourself in a situation in which you're saying to someone, "Hey, what are you going to do about it?" Let's look at the next sentence, which is, "Did you get a chance to look at it?" I think this is a great question, especially maybe in a work context. Did you get a chance to look at it? That did you. This is assimilation. So, I think that the simplest way to put it, you have these sounds like they run up against each other and it creates this new sound. In this case, the D and Y, did you, you get that just sound. You do not need to force it as you transition from one sound to the next. It should just occur naturally. Did you? But, this often occurs in other questions as well. What did you? Where did you? Why did you? How did you? Get a, I can link that phrase together and you hear me pronounce that flat T. I told you, I'm going to talk about the flat T a lot. Did you get a chance to look at it? One thing I really want you to pay attention to is the word to. When it is unstressed, it may sound like tuh. It's a much softer sound and you will hear this all the time and if you can make it a part of your speaking fluency, it's going to help you sound a lot more natural. To look at it. And we can link that together. Look at it. There's another flat T. The final T in at. Did you get a chance to look at it? Say it with me. Let's say it slowly, and then I'm going to speed it up a little bit. Did you get a chance to look at it? Did you get a chance to look at it? Did you get a chance to look at it? Now, if you would like to improve your overall fluency, like we're working on speaking right now, I think you will benefit from taking classes, and you can do that with Skillshare, who is the sponsor of today's lesson. Skillshare is a platform where you can take classes taught by professional designers, accomplished educators, successful entrepreneurs, which makes it the best place to learn a creative skill or just pick up a new hobby. Of course, there are many classes to help you improve your English.

But, on Skillshare, you can take a wide range of classes on topics that really interest you, and you can learn about these topics in English. Recently, I took a class called social media and phone addiction, and the class provided practical ways to disengage away from the phone and engage in other creative outlets. I even got to be creative when completing the project, and I came up with this illustration showing the relationship with our phones. It's a little exaggerated, but you get the idea. So, a class like this is something that we can all relate to, but I recommend that you explore your interests, whether it's crafts, personal development, photography, and use that to develop your English skills. You get to learn something new and improve your English.

And right now, Skillshare has a special offer for you. The first 500 people to click on the link in the description or scan the QR code will get a 1-month free trial of Skillshare. So, click on the link to get your free trial, take some online classes, improve your English while you learn about one of your creative passions, or about a topic that may help you advance your career. Let's get back to our lesson to help you fine-tune your speaking fluency. And the next sentence is, I should have told you earlier. Th- This is another reduction with the modal verb should have. you can really just contract it, but you could think of it as a reduction because have it it's like that H elides. Elision is when sounds or syllables get removed.

So, should have may sound more like should of. And then I can link that final d I should have told you earlier. That DNY, once again, may blend together, and it's like you hear that slight little j sound in there. That is not a rule. You may Sometimes you may not hear it. But, as I say the sentence, you're going to hear that slight I should have told you earlier. I should have told you earlier. So, let's practice this. Say it a few times. Let's say it slowly. I should have told you earlier. I should have told you earlier. I should have told you earlier. And yeah, I I should have told you earlier that if you enjoy these lessons, then please go ahead, hit the like button. It really helps reach a wider audience of English learners. I apologize, I should have told you earlier. Then we have, could you pass me the water bottle?

I don't know why, I feel like ChatGPT seems to really be fond of assimilation, cuz here, once again, we have that DNY and that j sound. Could you pass me the water bottle? I I want to add to this because, again, I'm from the US and I just like talking about the flat T. Water bottle. You hear those Ts, I'm pronouncing them as a flat T. Water bottle. So, the T in water comes between two vowels. This is one time when it occurs. It also occurs when the T comes before a dark L, like in the word bottle. Water bottle. Very American.

Let's say it slowly, and then we'll speed it up a little bit. Could you pass me the water bottle? Could you pass me the water bottle? Could you pass me the water bottle? Great. How about this one? Let me know when you're ready. Great sentence. I think people just use it in everyday English. You're talking to someone else. You say, you know, just let me know when you're ready. Let me is another reduction. It's going to sound like lemme. And then the rest of it, I think it's pretty straightforward. One thing I will point out is that in spoken English, especially in the United States, people will often use contractions. Now, if you use the full form, let me know when you are ready, that's perfectly fine. But casually, people are going to use these contractions and I think it would help you to sound more natural if you get accustomed to using them. Let me know when you're ready. So, let's say this together slowly.

Lemme know when you're ready. Lemme know when you're ready. Lemme know when you're ready. Just say, lemme know when you're ready and I'll continue. Okay, you're ready right now? All right, let's move on to the next sentence. What do you want to eat tonight? We're really reducing the the first part of that question. What do you? Now, the T and the D, they're like overlapping sounds because the tongue is in the same position in your mouth. It's up just behind your top front teeth. And in this case, it's like that T aligns. We're not going to hear it. Do is going to get reduced and may sound a little more like duh. What do you want to eat tonight?

Want to, besides going to, this is probably the next most common reduced phrase. Want to is going to sound like wanna. What do you wanna? What do you wanna? Let's just isolate those words right there. Just repeat after me. What do you wanna? What do you wanna? And then you could finish the question with, well, a lot of different things. What do you want to do tomorrow? What do you want to watch on Netflix? And or in this case, what do you want to eat tonight? So, let's practice this question. Let's say it together slowly. What do you want to eat tonight? What do you want to eat tonight? What do you want to eat tonight? Great little drill exercise with that what do you want to? What do you want to?

Here's the next one. I'm going to call you later. Going to I'm going to reduce that to gonna and then keep in mind later is another word that you really hear my American accent cuz you hear that flat T, later. I'm going to call you later. Now, I I I will say before we practice this together, I'm gonna, you could reduce this even further and I like to practice this. It does get people outside of their comfort zone a little bit. So, I'm gonna, you could reduce this even further to I'm onna. I'm onna. I'm gonna call you later. I'm gonna call you later. If it's not comfortable for you to say, don't feel like you need to, but I do think it will help with your listening comprehension because you'll hear people use this I'm gonna do whatever. I'm gonna do this. I'm gonna do that.

I'm gonna go to the gym. I'm gonna go to the park. I'm gonna call you later. And you hear that I'm onna I'm onna I'm onna. But it is still very common just to say I'm gonna. So, let's just practice I'm gonna call you later. Let's say it slowly. I'm gonna call you later. I'm gonna call you later. I'm gonna call you later. I'm gonna call you later. I feel like the faster I keep saying it then it then you start to hear that I'm onna. I'm gonna call you later.

The next sentence. Do you think it'll work out? Now, we can reduce that do you and it's almost like you're just saying that d sound and then moving right into you. Do you? Now, you could say do you? Do you if you want to unstress you. But in this case, let's just say do you think it'll work out? Now, we can link some of those other phrases, think it'll, think it'll. You can hear me moving that consonant sound over, work out. Work out. Again, linking will occur. Do you think it'll work out?

Let's say it a few times. We'll say it slowly. Do you think it'll work out? Do you think it'll work out? Do you think it'll work out? And you just kind of just get faster and faster and faster. And I think that's part of the challenge, too, is trying to transition from one sound to the next. Here is the next sentence. Have you ever been there before? Now, I don't know why it says very fast linking. I mean, you can say this question fast, but I told you that linking is really when you link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next. And we don't really have any consonant vowel linking that occurs. You don't even have any vowel to vowel linking. So, just again, keep in mind, this is chat GPT and the AI, you got to take everything with a grain of salt.

Still, you could practice saying this question naturally, smoothly, and at a quicker pace. Once again, there is value in just trying to transition from one sound to the next. So, let's say it slowly, and then we're going to speed things up a little. Have you ever been there before? Have you ever been there before? Have you ever been there before? I think this is a valid question that you may use in just casual conversation. Have you ever been there before?

Let's have a look at our next statement. I would have done it if I'd known. Would have. This is a modal of lost opportunity, but we can still reduce this. I told you that H, it's kind of like an elide, you don't really hear it. Maybe you could think of it like we're we're turning down the volume on that H, and have is going to sound like that of, would have. I would have done it. Now, this is a phrase that we can link, and kind of just move that n sound over. Done it. Done it. If I had known. I had known. I told you that contractions, I think are common in spoken English and that is the contraction I know. I would have done it if I'd known. I don't know if you hear it, but there is a slight pause in the middle of this sentence. I'm separating them into two different thought groups. This is a way of just organizing your speech and I think it really helps with clarity and the pause, that slight pause, is going to come between the two clauses. I would have done it short pause, if I'd known. Now, if I took if I had known and moved it to the other side of the sentence, then there's going to be a comma there and then you know, okay, comma, I'm going to make that slight pause. But you can still make that pause even if the if statement is at the end. I would have done it if I'd known. This isn't not a fixed rule. You could just run through the sentence without that pause. I would have done it if I'd known, but I think it just sounds better if you're making that slight pause. It's much easier to understand and it's part of developing that nice rhythm and flow.

I would have done it if I'd known. Let's practice this. Say it slowly and I'm going to make that pause and you can try to make it, too. I would have done it if I'd known. I would have done it if I'd known. I would have done it if I'd known. And hopefully it makes sense when I talk about separating them into two different thought groups and you have that slight pause. Let's look at our next group, which is difficult because of consonant clusters. And in this case, I I actually agree with chat GPT. I'm working on reading with my little girl and yeah, consonant clusters can be challenging. So, our first sentence, 6th Street is straight ahead. I know I said commonly used sentences. I don't know how often you're going to say this sentence, but it is a great example of practicing these consonant clusters, sixth street. I think the word sixth alone is a bit challenging. Just remember that th is voiceless and you really do hear it that sixth street is straight ahead. That final t in straight, you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap t and then I'm going to link it with ahead, straight ahead, straight ahead, straight ahead. Sixth street is straight ahead. Let's practice it. We'll say it slowly. Sixth street is straight ahead. Sixth street is straight ahead. Sixth street is straight ahead. This I feel like these sentences, this is going to be a little bit of a tongue twister. Here is the next one. Next spring, we're planning a trip. Next spring, that is the consonant cluster. A lot of consonants in there.

One thing I want you to be aware of, the word next, you're not really going to hear that t sound because when it comes between two consonants, it's going to elide. Next spring. It's just easier to say and you hear this quite often with next, next week, next year, next spring, next summer. And of course spring, you have that spr consonant cluster, can be a little challenging. Next spring, we're planning a trip. You hear me say this right now. Once again, I'm going to separate it into two different thought groups. We have our time expression, next spring, slight pause, we're planning a trip.

Let's say the sentence a few times. Slowly. Please ask Chris first. Please ask Chris first. Please ask Chris first. Please ask Chris first, okay? I just want you to ask Chris. This is a tricky sentence to say, but it's still a good one to practice these consonant clusters. Here's the next sentence. The text were sent yesterday. Text were sent. I don't know why GPT said, well, you know, consonant clusters were sent. There's not really many consonants in there. Text, I understand, but this is a sentence they gave us and we can still practice it. I think any practice is helpful. The word text, when you make this plural, it is challenging on its own. Because you have that x, and you want to add that slight s sound to make it plural. Texts.

Texts. Say it with me. Texts. The text were sent yesterday. Let's say this a few times. We'll say it slowly. The text were sent yesterday. The text were sent yesterday. The text were sent yesterday. And then there's I asked them twice already. Asked them twice. That is the challenging consonant cluster that GPT identified. And yeah, there are some consonants in there. Let's begin with asked. Because that ed you would pronounce it as a t sound because the k in ask is voiceless. Asked. But I told you that when that t comes between two consonants, it's going to elide. You're not going to hear it. So, you're just going to say, "Ask them." And you're going to move right into that voiced th sound. I asked them twice already.

And twice already, we can link that final s sound with the vowel sound in already. Twice already. Twice already. I asked them twice already. Let's say it slowly and then faster. I asked them twice already. I asked them twice already. I asked them twice already. The next sentence, he works at the bank downtown. Works at the bank, I don't know why again they classified this phrase as having a lot of consonant clusters. Of course, works, yes, that rks is a good consonant cluster to practice.

Let's just go ahead and say this one. One thing I want you to keep in mind, works at. I can link that final s sound with the vowel sound in at. And let's do that when we practice this. Let's say it slowly and then faster. He works at the bank downtown. He works at the bank downtown. He works at the bank downtown. If you know someone who works at a bank, and then you could say this sentence. He works at the bank downtown. Then there's the first prize went to her.

First prize, that is our consonant cluster. Remember, that final t in first comes between two consonants, it's going to elide. You don't really hear it. First prize. First prize. The first prize went to her. I want to remind you that preposition to, when unstressed, it's going to sound like a softer t, to her. To her. Just say that, to her. The first prize went to her.

Let's practice saying the sentence. We'll start it out slowly. The first prize went to her. The first prize went to her. The first prize went to her. Excellent. Let's move on to our next group, which GPT identified as difficult because of specific sounds. And the first sentence, which I don't even think is really a sentence, but three free throws. This is difficult to just say these three words because of that th and r. Three free throws. Three free throws. Just we can just say it a few times. This is more of a tongue exercise in your mouth and trying to transition from one sound to the next. Three free throws.

And just we'll say it quickly. Let's Let's just say it together slowly and then I'm going to get faster and faster and faster. Let's see how fast you can go. Three free throws. Three free throws. Three free throws. Three free throws. Three free throws. Three free throws. Three free throws. Okay. And it is it is difficult to just say it again and again and again, but let's move on to our next sentence, which is the 33 thieves thought they thrilled the throne. I don't know why they're just giving us tongue twisters. They're good to practice, but I I did tell GPT sentences that are commonly used. Nevertheless, we'll we'll practice this.

This is great for the the th because th has two different pronunciations, a voiceless th in words like 33 thieves, and then a voiced th sound. You're going to feel that vibration in your vocal cords with words like they, the, that, those, this. Something to keep in mind as we practice this sentence. The 33 thieves thought they thrilled the throne. Let's say it slowly and then we'll we'll speed things up. The 33 thieves thought they thrilled the throne. The 33 thieves thought they thrilled the throne. The 33 thieves thought they thrilled the throne. Faster. The 33 thieves thought they thrilled the throne. As you're saying this quickly, you're going to feel the tongue shooting between those teeth to make that th sound. The 33 thieves. There is a The tongue twister continues. There's more to it, but let's just move on to our next sentence, which is Really rarely do I read reviews.

Just looking at this sentence, you see all those r's and l's, and that can be challenging for for many ESL learners, really depending on where you're from. So, just keep in mind the position of the tongue in your mouth. Of course, the l l That l sound, the tip of your tongue is going to come up and touch just behind your top front teeth. Whereas, the r, like your your tongue is pulled back. The tip is curled up. But, they they're in completely different positions. Really rarely do I read reviews. I'll point out something extra as far as connected speech is concerned, do I. This is an example of intrusion.

Intrusion is when you add a sound between two vowels in order to connect them together. In this case, you can hear a slight w w sound, do I, do I, in order to link these words. Really rarely do I read reviews. Let's say it slowly, and then we'll speed it up. Really rarely do I read reviews. Really rarely do I read reviews. Really rarely do I read reviews. These sentences are tough. They're even tough for me to say these these tongue twisters. And speaking of tongue twisters, the next sentence, She sells seashells on the seashore. This is perhaps one of the most famous tongue twisters in English, and really it's challenging because not only you have the s versus the sh sounds, which I I don't think are too difficult to make and distinguish between, but they become challenging because of the minimal pairs in this tongue twister. So, she see, that is a minimal pair. The only difference is the s and sh sound. She see. And it comes between two other minimal pairs, sells shells. Once again, the only difference would be that s and sh. She sells seashells. And trying to say that quickly is very challenging. She sells seashells on the seashore. Let's practice this. Say it slowly. She sells seashells on the seashore. She sells seashells on the seashore. One more time. She sells seashells on the sh- seashore. The shells she sells are seashells, I'm sure. Again, we can add to this. It's a much longer tongue twister, but in this case, we're just focusing on that s and sh sounds. Then there's world leaders rarely agree. This is a sentence that you may actually use in conversation.

So, this is this is useful. World leaders rarely agree. It's challenging not only because the the r and l, but world. That rld consonant cluster, I've had so many people tell me that they struggle with this consonant cluster, especially this world. World. I think if you want to practice it, slow it down. Think about the position of the tongue in your mouth, and just keep doing it again, and you can speed up a little more. World, you have that ur sound. Your tongue is pulled back, and then the tip is going to come up behind your top front teeth for the l, and then release into the d. World. World. World leaders rarely agree. Let's say it slowly, and then faster. World leaders rarely agree. In this case, I am pronouncing the individual words.

World leaders rarely agree. World leaders rarely agree. I think this is true. And then there's the rural area is really beautiful. Chat GPT is really running with these R and L combinations, but hey, that's just what came up. The rural area is really beautiful. Rural is a tough word because of the R L combination, but I think you can do it. Let's practice this together. Let's say it slowly. The rural area is really beautiful. The rural area is really beautiful. The rural area is really beautiful. And I do, I think rural area I think I'm having trouble saying it. A lot of too many R's and L's. I do think rural areas are very beautiful. They are picturesque and it's nice to get outside the city.

And then you could say, "Wow, the rural area is really beautiful." Here is the next sentence. This year's weather is worse than last year's. And this is a sentence that you may actually use. I've said this before. This year's weather is worse than last year's. I don't know why GPT was identifying the th, the w and linking as two reasons why this sentence is difficult. So, I'm just going to break it down on my own. And really I want to point out assimilation. So, this year, that s and y they they come up next to each other and you hear a slight sh sound. This year's. This year's weather I'm going to pause it there. I'm going to separate it into two different thought groups right before the verb to be. Again, this is not a rule. This is something that I might do just for clarity, for ease of understanding. And for that reason, I'm not going to link the final consonant sound in weather with the beginning vowel sound in is because of that pause. This year's weather is worse than last year's.

Last year's, more assimilation. Last year's, this time you hear a slight little ch sound between them. Last year's. Let's say it slowly and then speed it up. This year's weather is worse than last year's. This year's weather is worse than last year's. This year's weather is worse than last year's. And I do think that's true if I'm comparing this year versus last year. This year's weather is worse than last year's. I hope that you were practicing and saying these sentences out loud with me and if you were, let me know down in the comments. Just write the word speaking so I know that you were working on developing your speaking fluency and I wasn't just talking to myself. Advanced (C1) #Idiom | TO FALL FLAT

your attempts at mockery fall flat fall flat this is an idiom but we're going to use it as a verb to fall flat this is said when a joke suggestion or idea does not have the intended effect now most of the time you're going to use this when talking about jokes so right now I'm going to tell you a couple of jokes and you can let me know in the comments if they fall flat if I am what I eat then I'm fast cheap and easy [Music] it's a little ridiculous here here's another one you know what they say never go to bed angry stay up and fight so I suppose one or both of those jokes fell flat it did not have the intended effect of laughter but you can let me know

Advanced (C1) #Idiom | to set foot in (some place)

Watch the original lesson on YouTube

I haven't set foot in a bar in years to set foot in some place this means to go to a place or to enter a place and you're really going to use this idiom when you want to add emphasis and there's some emotion involved I could say I'm afraid to set foot in my hometown because it's no longer peaceful and quiet and I'm just afraid to go to this place unless Cersei grants us an audience and is somehow convinced not to murder as the we set foot in the capital or I'm so angry at my brother I refuse to set foot in his home and I refuse to enter his home so hopefully you can sense that emotion if you set foot in this door ever again I will bring hell down on you

Advanced (C1) Adjectives to Build Your Vocabulary

believe it or not I have a cutting edge vocabulary lesson for you to help you improve your English so right now I'm going to teach you some Advanced C1 adjectives and let's just begin with a word that I have already mentioned Cutting Edge and this just means very modern with all the newest features and there are some common collocations with this adjective really words you would think of when you hear very modern like cutting edge technology or a cuttingedge design or cuttingedge research I was a young scientist working with a worldclass team Cutting Edge research to attract the top EDS we'll need to make a recruitment film picture that showcases our Cutting Edge technology when pronouncing this word the stress is going to be on that first syllable and that T I am going to pronounce this as a flap T which is very common when talking about the American accent because that t comes between two vowel sounds so I'll say it as a flap T which is going to sound more like a soft D cutting Cutting Edge and that DG combination an edge has that J sound Cutting Edge and if you are someone who appreciates Cutting Edge vocabulary lessons Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and throughout the lesson I'm going to talk to you about the pronunciation of each adjective because I tried to choose words that were a little trickier to pronounce like this next word affluent this means having a lot of money or owning a lot of things a and you could use this word to describe a person but often I think you would use it to describe a group of people perhaps you're talking about an affluent neighborhood or an affluent country or an affluent family and in order to demonstrate how this adjective is used in context I have some news headlines for you Savvy travel to open new branch in affluent area addressing poverty in an affluent society how can luxury travel companies attract affluent Travelers on digital channels when pronouncing this word the stress is going to be on that first syllable affluent now that is the way you're going to find it in most English dictionaries however you may hear some people stress that second syllable and in that case that first syllable is then going to have that schah sound that uh sound affluent you may hear both of these but I think more commonly people are going to stress that first syllable affluent then there's the word competent it means that you are able to do something well and I imagine that you are a competent speaker of English English I I like to think that I am a competent teacher now with this adjective you may also follow it with the preposition at you are competent at something or competent at doing something if I were to say he is competent at his job for pronunciation the stress is on that first syllable and the final syllable has that schah sound that uh sound competent say it with me competent competent excellent right now I want to take a moment to thank the sponsor of today's lesson which is Elsa speak this is a Cutting Edge app to help you fine-tune your pronunciation so that you can become a competent speaker and if you're unfamiliar with the app let me show you how it works you just download the app create an account and there is a lot that you can do practice daily lessons improve pronunciation study by topic so let's say that we want to study by topic and there are many different topics to choose from let's choose relationships and as you can see there are a lot of different lessons to help you practice and improve but I think one of the coolest parts of the app is the ability to practice words and phrases that you want to learn so let's say that I want to practice the sentence this app is Cutting Edge and then you can listen to the pronunciation this app is Cutting Edge and then practice saying it this app is Cutting Edge now let me show you what it looks like if I make a mistake and I mispronounce that adjective this app is cutting e and as you can see you get instant feedback which then allows you to try and make adjustments and right now when you click on the link below and download the Elsa speak app you can get 7 Days of the pro membership for free but you can use my discount to get 85% off a lifetime membership or 40% off a oneyear membership so check out the links and discounts down in the description if you would like to improve your pronunciation and before you know it you'll sound just like a native speaker let's get back to our Advanced C1 adjectives and the next one that I have for you is dayto day so day-to-day means happening every day as a regular part of your life or job and I think we all have have day-to-day responsibilities if I were to talk about my own day-to-day responsibilities I I take my little girl to school I teach classes I try my best to respond to as many comments as possible so how about you what are some of your day-to-day responsibilities write to me in the comments and I'll try to respond to you when it comes to pronouncing this adjective the only thing that I want to point out is the week two when unstressed it's going to sound more like T with that schah sound the other thing that I would say is that t with the American accent I told you I'm from the US when it comes between two vowels I'm going to pronounce it as a flat T so it's going to sound more like a soft D day to day the stress is on the words day day to day day to day just just listen for it how do the schedule of an orthopedic surgeon compared to that of a fetal surgeon mode varies day to day day-to-day administrative responsibilities are to reside with the deputy office if they don't already actually need written authorization from the Pentagon to be able to discuss the program with anybody who does not have day-to-day clearance then we have an adjective that I I think we all try to avoid and that is monotonous so if something is monotonous it means not changing and therefore it it's pretty boring and I I think often you would use this word to talk about task that you have to do routinely either at work or around the home uh I could say typing numbers into a spreadsheet can be monotonous or sweeping around the home may be monotonous at least I think it is when pronouncing this word it can be a little challenging it's a longer word monotonous the stress is on that second syllable and the T it's going to be a gladle t this happens when you have the

T followed by a vowel sound followed by the n Sound words like Mountain kitten monotonous and really it's just a gladle stop and it's almost like you're just swallowing the sound that's the best way I I can describe that gladle stop monotonous say it with me monotonous monotonous excellent then there's the word alleged this refers to something bad or illegal and is believed to be true but not proved and there are some common adjective noun collocations with this word perhaps talking about an alleged crime and you can really talk about an alleged any criminal activity you fill in the blank alleged Thief alleged drug dealer he has been arrested for the alleged crime so the stress is going to be on that second syllable but you may hear some people add an extra syllable because of the e d and they're going to say alleged and then it becomes three syllables and I think that may be more common in the US but but let's hear both so you can hear the the two syllables alleged he is hereby absolved of all his alleged crimes alleged but not proven since blackmailing is a felony even when you do it to alleged drug dealers I'm an alleged killer and now you can hear the three syllables alleged see if you can identify this alleged killer I've represented Mobsters like this for years alleged Mobsters either one is okay I just wanted you to be aware of this the next adjective is fruitful and this means producing good results so it really has a positive connotation often I think this word describes an outcome that involves some sort of interaction so I could say my boss and I had a fruitful talk about my contract or there was a fruitful discussion at the meeting or how would you describe the negotiation fruitful okay it's a it's a positive word positive connotation it's good to learn these words the pronunciation is pretty simple and straightforward the stress is on that first syllable and that t in Fruit it's a stop te fruitful fruitful then we have the word conservative and this means not usually liking or trusting change especially Sudden Change and and really this word is often associated with politics so it can be emotionally charged but but I could say that people who are older tend to be more conservative I recently tried to talk to my parents about cryptocurrency and they they really were not interested they don't really trust it so I could say in that case they they're definitely more conservative now that is a non-political example but most of the time you'll hear this word relating to someone's politics their conservative Outlook referring to the way they view social or economic changes when pronouncing this word the stress is on that second syllable and the T I'm going to pronounce it as a flat T conservative conservative now because we're talking about the word conservative let's go to the other end of the spectrum and talk about the word liberal which is also a C1 adjective this means respecting and allowing many different types of beliefs or behavior and I'll use the same example I'll just replace the word older with younger people who are younger tend to be more liberal when pronouncing this word the stress is on the first syllable and you may say it with three syllables liberal however because of elision which is when sounds get get removed that schwas sound in the middle May alide and now we're left with just two syllables liberal and I think often you will hear people pronounce this word with just two syllables and they'll say liberal my mom says you're just going through a liberal phase what my mom says you're going through a conservative phase there's no such thing conservatives only get more conservative then we have the word idealistic this means believing that very good things can be achieved often when other people just do not think that it's likely so this is a great adjective to describe a person and once again let me give you some context with some news headlines what urban planners can learn from this idealistic coffee shop Utopia isn't just idealistic fantasy it inspires people to change the world this is an opinion are young social activists too idealistic and do some have an overly idealistic view of internationalism for pronunciation there are five syllables the stress is on the second to last syllable idealistic now to give you a syllable stress rule when a word ends with I see the stress is going to come on the second to last syllable electronic strategic idealistic next is the adjective preliminary this means coming before a more important action or event especially introducing or preparing for it so think about a courtroom uh you have a hearing which is a meeting that is related to the legal problem and I could say there's going to be a preliminary hearing you could use this with other nouns as well here are some examples the preliminary hearing set for next Friday we'll have to do some preliminary evaluations preliminary investigation suggest that this was suicide Michael my preliminary calculations indicate that 15 minutes are needed to break that code when you pronounce this word the stress is on the second syllable preliminary but it's a longer word so it can be a bit challenging let's break it down and say it together preliminary preliminary preliminary excellent and then we have the word genuine this refers to people or emotions that are honest and sincere so this is another great adjective to talk about a person perhaps you make a mistake you apologize I accept your apology because you are a genuine person and I like to think that I am a genuine person as well but you don't always have to use this word to talk about people perhaps someone makes a genuine apology and then the last thing I would say is that people may often use this with the negative not to talk about something that is not honest or or not sincere his apology was not genuine when pronouncing this word it has three syllables the stress is on that first syllable and just keep in mind that the in at the end of the word is pronounced in genuine genuine so let's get a little review I hope that you did not think the lesson was monotonous and I hope you go on to watch another video Lesson because it really doesn't matter whether you are in the preliminary stages of building your vocabulary or if you are highly competent when it comes to using different words and phrases it's good to learn new words and it's good to review old ones and and I'm really being genuine when I say this because building your vocabulary should be a part of your day-to-day routine especially if you want to continue developing your English fluency so if you enjoyed this Cutting Edge vocabulary lesson and you found it fruitful and you learn something new I'd really appreciate it if you hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced (C1) Idioms to Strengthen Your Vocabulary

I want to set the record straight learning these Advanced and common C1 idioms will help you do two things you will build your vocabulary as well as improve your overall fluency by having a more natural way of speaking so let's begin with an idiom that I just mentioned to set the record straight this means to write or say something in order to make the true facts known so it's really a great way to emphasize the fact that you want to explain the truth or at least tell someone what you believe is the truth now you may also use this idiom with the verb put to put the record straight but as you can see it's overwhelmingly more common to use the verb set to set the record straight when pronouncing this idiom it's pretty simple and straightforward there are some overlapping sounds with the final stop T in set and the voice th in th so your tongue is going to be behind your top front teeth and you're just going to transition from one sound right into to the next set the set the record straight it's just it allows for a much easier and smoother transition from one word to the next now I want to set the record straight once again if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary then I can help please subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is West the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goal and throughout the lesson I'm going to tell you the meaning of each idiom I'll talk about how it's used in context as well as give you a variety of examples and if if needed I will talk to you a little bit about the pronunciation now I always try to strike a balance between giving you a lot of useful information while not overwhelming you at the same time and to strike a balance is the next idiom that I want to teach you this means to achieve a state in which two things occur in equal or proper amounts or have an equal or proper amount of importance and often you're going to follow this idiom with the preposition between to strike a balance between two things so you may need to strike a balance between work and family you may need to strike a balance between screen time and social activities you may need to strike a balance between how much you make and how much you spend so this is really a great idiom to tell someone that you're trying to satisfy the need for both things instead of just satisfying the need for one thing you need to strike a balance when pronouncing this phrase there is some linking that may occur we can link the final consonant sound in strike with the beginning vowel sound in uh and it's almost like we're moving that consonant sound over strike a to strike a balance try to listen for it we need to strike a balance between your needs as investigators and the First Amendment rights of the Sun and its source the color of anger rage but also the color of the Heart of Love This strikes the perfect balance between the two now perhaps you are trying to strike a balance between learning English and all the other things you have going on in your life and if that's the case then I have a great idea so allow me to set the record straight you can take classes and improve your English fluency with Ling who is the sponsor of today's lesson lingoda is an online language school where you can learn English business English Spanish German or French and lingoda flex is a great way to develop your language skills if you are someone who has a busy schedule or you would just like to learn at your own pace so it's exactly what it says it is you have flexibility you can take one-on-one lessons if you would like a little more individual attention or for social Learners you can take small group classes let me show you how easy it is to start speaking English after you choose your subscription plan and log into your account you go straight to book a class you can choose the level of the class you would like to take and as you can see classes are available 24/7 which allows you to fit these lessons into your busy schedule you can even look for classes searching by date as well as the exact time you would like to have the lesson you choose your class and once you confirm before you know it you are in a lesson with a native speaking teacher I have been taking some classes in Spanish you can see me right there and the teachers are great they're friendly they're knowledgeable and I've been given some excellent feedback so if you would like to improve your English skills click on the link Down Below in the description you can get up to 35% off your first month of a subscription or if you'd like to try out L go to First you can get a 7-Day trial for free and take three group classes or one one-on-one class so check out my unique link down in the description choose a plan and you will be on your way to taking your fluency to the next level

let's get back to our Advanced and common C1 idioms the next one that I have for you is to not think twice this means to do something immediately without considering whether or not it's a good idea so there are two things I want to point out with this idiom the first thing is that you're often going to use this to talk about something in the past that you did without thinking about it you did not think twice the other thing is that you may often follow this idiom with the preposition about you did not think twice about something so to to give you a better idea as to how this idiom is used in context I have some news headlines for you teenar Talis Magno I don't know if I'm pronouncing that correctly did not think twice about joining NYC FC I didn't think twice man says after rescuing motorists who fell into sea I did not think twice about swallowing capsules to smuggle drugs to Malta now one thing I want to say is that you may hear people use this in the affirmative telling you hey think twice which would mean that you should think about something before doing it and in this case I I guess I would say you should think twice before you decide to smuggle drugs to any country but of course you should not think twice about hitting that like button so please you can you can go ahead and do that the next idiom that I want to teach you is at short notice or you could say on short notice this idiom is used to say there is only a short time before something happens and you may use it when talking about something in which generally you you need a little more time to plan but it's it's coming soon so if I asked you to write a 20page essay and give it to me tomorrow you may say look I can't do that on such short notice you need more time or if I tell you they were engaged but then got married on such short notice it's also used to say that you did something immediately after someone asks so I could tell you thank you for coming at such short notice one thing I want to point out is that you may often use this idiom with such at such short notice or on such short notice when pronouncing this phrase and this is more specific to the American accent because I am from the United States the T in notice I am going to pronounce that as a flap T it's going to sound more like a soft D this is because that t comes between two vowel sounds notice at such short notice on such short notice let's listen to some more examples and I don't know where to find a replace on such short notice first I want to thank all of you for putting together those proposals for Pakistan on such short notice and bless you for coming at such short notice I'm Trixie thank you for coming at such short notice Trixie wait and see this means to wait and discover what will happen and often you're going to use this in a couple of different contexts so the first one would just be to be patient that you need to wait and well

let's find out what the results are if I were to say we don't know how your body is going to react to the medication we'll just have to wait and see or I could use it in the context of really expressing confidence that I'm right and I'm telling you like look just wait you will eventually see that I was correct if I were to say the United States is going to win the next World Cup you just wait and see and I just have that confidence that that my prediction whatever it is that I'm saying is going to be true for pronunciation it may seem simple wait and see but I'm not really going to say it like that I would say wait and see so what's going on and in spoken English is often reduced to just n and with the American ACC when you have the T followed by an N that t may get changed to a gladle t

so think about these words right here and just listen for that glottal T when I say Mountain certain kitten the The Sounds coming from your throat waitting wait and see I I want you to try to listen for that glottal te just wait and see you have to wait and see wait and see oh yeah wait and see oh you just wait and see the next idiom is to take something at face value this means to accept something as it appears rather than studying it more closely so really you would be accepting something as true even though you don't really know if it's true perhaps you don't come to work and you tell me that you're sick well I may not know that that's true or not but I will take your word at face value and in this case your word just means whatever it is that you're saying to give you another example I would love it if you write to me in the comments and you're probably thinking okay yes I will do that I don't know if it's true I want to believe you so once again I will take your word at face value here are some more examples this is a troubled man I mean we can't take everything he says at face value okay so that's it you just accept my answer at face value why how the hell do we miss that apparently CIA took the stats at face value then we have the best of both worlds this means that you get to enjoy the advantages of two very different things at the same time so I I could say that you get the best of both worlds when you work very little but make a lot of money or perhaps you get the best of both worlds

when you don't step at all but you get perfect grades or maybe you get the best of both worlds when you eat a lot of junk food unhealthy food fast food whatever and your doctor tells you that you're in great health so you can use this idiom to accurately describe such a situation it's the best of both worlds when pronouncing this phrase I just want to point out that more linking may occur we can link the final consonant sound in best with the vowel sound in of Best of the Best of Both Worlds the goal of course is to be like you all our strengths of our weaknesses you got the best of both world it's half keyboard half guitar so is it a guitar or a keyboard exactly it's the best of both worlds so I put the brains and the bawls together and now look at me Best of Both Worlds

the next idiom to be in the public eye this means to be famous and Rich WR about in newspapers and magazines or seen on television and in movies so really celebrities athletes these are people who are generally in the public eye so to help you better understand how this idiom is used in context I thought it would be fun to read some celebrity quotes using this idiom so Taylor Swift says it's dangerous to read the internet about yourself when you're me or when you're anyone in the public eye Ricky Henderson people recognize me but if you've been in the public eye as long as I have and people don't recognize you I feel bad about myself I don't know why Ricky feels that way in case you don't know who Ricky Henderson is he was a famous baseball player a long time ago the next one I am not a big fan of

Mike Tyson I almost idolized him for what he did in the ring he was such a great fighter but his behavior out of the ring he needed to realize he was in the public and there is a responsibility well said Tommy Morrison one thing I want to add about this idiom is that even though you can say that people are in the public eye you could also say that people are out of the public eye for example if I were to say even though some celebrities are in the public eye they often hope to keep their children out of the public eye for pronunciation you guessed it more linking may occur we can link the final consonant sound in public with the beginning vowel sound in I public eye to be in the public eye next is the idiom get a grip and I say it like that because it means to make an effort to control your emotions and behave more calmly and somebody just tells you as like a command get a grip D get a grip get a grip n is going to ruin s's life as well get a grip what's a b she got a grip you're right T or you may follow this with the preposition on and a reflexive pronoun and because you're typically talking to another person you would say get a grip on yourself all right okay let's fly get a grip on yourself it's all a dream what about Jim we can't just leave him down there need to get a grip on yourself doctor you've got to get a grip on yourself St put Bert and Chris out of your head for pronunciation there are two things I want to point out first that final T and get because I'm from the US I am going to pronounce it as a flap T that I can then link with the vowel sound in the article uh get I can also link the final consonant sound in grip with the beginning vowel sound in on grip on so we have two phrases that we can link together I'll say it slowly get a grip on yourself now I want to say it a little faster I want you to repeat after me get a grip on yourself good the next idiom off the record this is used to indicate that what someone is saying should not be publicly reported and this is an idiom that you're probably not going to use it that often but it is certainly one that you will hear if you watch movies and TV shows so really this idiom may be used in the context of one person asking questions and the other person perhaps they want to be honest but they just don't want the information to be publicly reported so perhaps someone is interviewing a famous celebrity who is in the public eye and they ask did you get along well with the other actors and you say yes we got along well but off the Record there were a lot of issues please keep in mind that just as something may be off the record it can also be on the record in which case it is okay to be publicly reported do code red still happen on this BAS want to ask me about code Reds on the record I tell you I discourage the practice off the record I tell you it is an invaluable part of close infantry training then we have the idiom up to speed this means all the latest information about an activity or subject and often you're going to use this idiom with the verb get to get someone up to speed or the verb bring to bring someone up to speed we hired a math tutor to work with your daughter so we can get her up to speed or he missed the meeting because his flight was delayed could you please bring him up to speed for pronunciation the only thing that I want to point out is that weak unstressed to because when it's unstressed it may sound a bit more like it has that schah sound to up to speed to bring someone up to speed or to get someone up to speed again just listen for it jump in and then when this calms down maybe we can grab a cup of coffee I'd love to be a chance to get you up to speed before I start I will find you did me up to speed it's a miracle he survived this long better bring him up to speed I'll need the copywriters and sent here get me up to speed oh Dante bring me up to speed and then we have rule of thumb this refers to a practical approach and way of doing something based on experience and often you may use this idiom with the word General and talk about a general rule of thumb so let's look at some general rules of thumb in business you should overpromise and under no no I got that wrong that is not a rule of thumb you should under promise and over deliver another rule of thumb is that you should set benchmarks for reaching goals and another rule of thumb is that you should sell what people will buy now we can get a little silly and have fun with comics and memes I like this one all should be under me that is certainly the rule of thumb or I rule cuz I has thumb and that cat really does look like he has a thumb and I don't understand because building vocabulary I think a general rule of thumb is that you don't want to overwhelm people with too many words and of course it's always good to review just like we're doing right now I believe that you will take my word at face value and of course when it comes to using idioms I think people often worry that they're going to make a mistake and what I would recommend is that you don't think twice about using these idioms and practice using them in casual conversation I think it's always going to help and if you make a mistake just don't worry about it over time it's all going to come together you just wait and see now I need to start wrapping up the lesson I know that may be upsetting to hear so I would just tell you you know got to get a grip on yourself but if you want to continue building your vocabulary and just bring yourself up to speed feel free to watch another video Lesson they're entertaining they're informative It's the Best of Both Worlds and if you enjoyed this lesson and learned something new please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced (C1) Phrases That Will Transform Your Speaking Skills

let's learn some Advanced C1 phrases to help you build your vocabulary and first and foremost I would like to begin with the phrase first and foremost so this just means most importantly or or more than anything else and this is an introductory phrase that you may often hear if somebody's giving a presentation or a speech and they're talking about several things that may be important so if we're just talking about this lesson and how this is going to work I would tell you first and foremost I am going to talk about the meaning of these different phrases and then I will give you some context so you can understand how the phrases are used and finally we'll we'll talk about the pronunciation and I'll teach you how to say them correctly just like a native speaker would say these phrases so let's just move into that and talk about the pronunciation and the first thing that I'd like to point out is the word and is going to get reduced to just n and this is quite common in spoken English the other thing that is going on is linking this occurs when the final sound of one word is a consonant it may get linked to the beginning vowel sound of the next word so we can link that final consonant sound and first with that beginning vowel sound when I reduce it and just say n and it's going to sound like first in first in first and foremost all right just listen to it if I were to well talk about myself first and foremost I am an English teacher and then after that maybe I guess I would say I'm a YouTuber or if we're talking about achieving English fluency and I say first and foremost you need to build your vocabulary all right

that's the most important thing and then go on to talk about other things that are also important and if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary well please subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals let's continue and I'm gonna get straight to the point I'm not gonna beat around the bush which happens to be the next phrase that I want to teach you to beat around the bush this just means to avoid talking about what's most important and often you may hear people use this phrase to describe what someone else is doing he's always beating around the bush or she tends to beat around the bush people may often use this phrase if they're telling someone not to avoid a certain topic don't beat around the bush all right let's not beat around the bush let's not beat around the bush don't beat around the bush Leonard you don't want me here just say the word and I'll leave beaten around the bush a little when pronouncing this phrase and this is more about the American accent because I am from the United States that final T in beat it comes between two vowel sounds so I am going to pronounce this as a flap T which is going to sound more like a soft D and then I can link that flap t with the vowel sound in a round beat around the bush and that is a weak the because it comes before a consonant sound so you would say this with that schwa the beat around the bush hey don't beat around the bush the next best thing this is our next phrase and it refers to the thing that is best if you cannot have or do the thing that you really want and you would really say that something is the next best thing so probably you're talking about the thing that you really want to do what you really want but you can't have it so you'd say oh well this is the next best thing I wanted some ice ice cream but they didn't have any so I got some cake which is the next best thing for pronunciation once again we're going to use a weak the with that schwa sound but most importantly I want to talk to you about illusion and this is when sounds may get removed because the final T in next and the final T and best are going to Allied and this often happens with the T when it comes between two consonant sounds the next best thing the next best thing you don't really hear that T it's almost like it's muted and you know when it comes to building your vocabulary you really need to practice and of course I think it would be wonderful if you're able to practice speaking English every single day however I realize that's not always possible but if you would like to join my speaking course that is the next best thing I want to quickly tell you about it right now first and foremost the course is all about helping you speak confidently speak clearly and speak naturally this course is for intermediate to Advanced speakers of English and if you're interested check out the link down in the description and you will find a special discount just for you so I don't want to beat around the bush let me tell you what the course involves each week there is a different speaking Topic at the beginning of each lesson we'll we'll talk about pronunciation or connected speech you will learn vocabulary related to that topic and then practice using the words and phrases with engaging speaking activities I'll also teach you some of the language nuances like when to use certain words and phrases and there are pronunciation video lessons included in the course so click on that link down in the description if you'd like to sign up or learn more and I I just hope to speak to you soon because achieving English fluency it's something that you need to put in a lot of hard work it's one of those things that's easier said than done and that's the next C1 phrase that I want to teach you easier said than done so this phrase pretty much means what it says it's used when someone says something that may seem like a good idea but it's just really difficult to do and often it's used as a standalone statement a person may say something that's a good idea but difficult and another person may say well easier said than done so so let's practice this right now I am going to say something and I just want you to say easier said than done one day I am going to hike Mount Kilimanjaro in the future I'd like to learn how to fly a plane I really hope this video gets 25

ooo likes okay and and this is something that you could actually help with you know go ahead hit that like button let's try to make it happen so when you pronounce this phrase I think it's pretty straightforward there is some co-articulation going on this is when you have some overlapping sounds and it allows us to link words together so really we're just moving from the final sound of one word right in to the beginning sound of the next word so said ends with that final D sound your tongue is at the top part of your mouth behind your front teeth and you're going to release right into that voice th and then said then now that final n Sound and then once again your tongue is at the top behind your front teeth but now you're going to release right into that D sound in done said then done pronouncing this phrase is easier said than done then we have the phrase to have an ear for something and this just refers to someone who is good at hearing repeating and understanding sounds and often you're talking about either music or language so you're really just commenting on either your ability or someone else's ability when it comes to sounds and I'm trying to think of an example but this is not a phrase that I would use to describe myself but I do have some videos so you can hear how this phrase is used in context some people are born to sit by a river some have an EF music some are artists even here for accents I've lost my accent entirely I've been here for that as well it's Lakme actually for pronunciation linking is going to occur you have the three words have an ear we can link them together those final consonant sounds with the beginning vowel sounds have and near

it's almost like we're taking that consonant sound and moving it over to the next syllable have an ear have an ear for something then we have behind the times this means well not fashionable or modern and really it does have a negative connotation if you're saying that someone or something is behind the times it's like look you're you're late to the party you should have changed years ago you're behind the times in order to show you how this phrase is used in context I have some news headlines for you Canadian Tick Tock are slammed for behind the times video help out your wife in the wake of chat gbt Google is worried it's behind the times 10 video games that are painfully behind the times when pronouncing this phrase keep in mind Collision may occur remember this is when sounds may get removed but in this case I'm talking about that D in behind

it's going to align because it comes between two consonant sounds behind the times and yes we're going to use that week the once again with that schwa sound behind the times I've heard people use this phrase to talk about me and say hey Wes you're a little behind the times when it comes to to new technology yes I I'm behind the times then there's down to earth which is a pretty common adjective phrase that means practical realistic reasonable friendly those are all great adjectives so this this really does have a positive connotation and often I think you may use this to describe a person I think my father is a Down to Earth person I like to think that I am down to earth if you feel like you are down to earth let me know down in the comments the only thing I want to say about pronunciation has to do with the word to which actually has two accepted pronunciations when stressed it sounds like well just like I said two when unstressed it may sound like it has that schwa sound like it's unstressed it's very soft but you would often hear it when people say this phrase down to earth down to earth just just listen for it she's really nice bunny down to earth you and Regis Philbin awesome right surprisingly down to earth guy and definitely not the picture I meant to show you you're a very special girl I really look at you you're just so down to earth it's nice you know she's down to earth and uh and mature face the music this means to accept criticism or punishment for something you have done maybe you made a mistake you did something wrong you have to tell others so you could say yeah I have to face the music if I told you oh gosh I broke my wife's favorite mug she's gonna be upset I can't lie about it so I'm gonna have to face the music or maybe you'll hear people use this phrase when giving advice to someone else telling them look you need to be honest about what happened you need to take responsibility you have to face the music when pronouncing this phrase it's pretty simple and straightforward just keep in mind you're going to use that weak the with the schwa sound face the music have you ever had to face the music then we have the phrase have had enough and I say it like that on purpose because it means you want something to stop because it's just really annoying you and bothering you and I want you to think about the grammar because we're talking about the present perfect have had something annoying started in the past it has a relationship with the present and it's just like you you hit your breaking point and you say I've had enough and generally when somebody says this phrase they they probably would use a lot of emotion because they may be upset we've had enough I have had enough I have had a lot of emotion with this one when you pronounce this phrase there is some linking that may occur that final consonant sound and had make it linked with the beginning vowel sound in enough had enough I've had enough then there's to make ends meet and this means to have just enough money to buy the things that you need and really this idiom is associated with hardship and difficulty and there are some useful collocations that you can use with this phrase to give it a little bit of emphasis like the verb struggle to struggle to make ends meet or the adverb barely to barely make ends meet and once again with pronunciation there is more linking that may occur we can link the final sound in make with the beginning vowel sound in ends make ends to make ends meet then there's the phrase go hand in hand with something and this is when something is closely related to something else especially when they happen at the same time or as a result of it I could say this backpack has been designed to go hand in hand with that suitcase and and they're just closely related or wealth goes hand in hand with saving money it's related as a result for pronunciation there are two things going on linking and delusion both with those well the the two hands that are in there so we can link that final D in hand with the vowel sound in in hand in and then the next hand that final D aligns it comes between those two consonant sounds so it's going to sound like to go hand in hand with to go hand in hand with something just just listen closely for those two things look at you hand in hand with apes and women Nick must have seen that you were working hand in hand with the police gee Batman I'm sorry I'll be silly gotta love those old Batman Clips the next phrase is for the most part and this just means mostly or usually and this is an adverb phrase that you may find at the beginning the middle or the end of a statement so perhaps right now you are thinking for the most part this vocabulary lesson was really helpful or this vocabulary lesson was for the most part really helpful or this vocabulary lesson was really helpful for the most part so I just said the same thing I just moved that adverb phrase around when it comes to pronunciation I want to point out two unstressed words and I'm talking about the words for and the so we've already talked about that unstressed weak the with the schwa but four when unstressed it may sound a little more like fur for the most part it allows us to say this phrase easily and quickly for the most part for the most part let's do a little review so first and foremost I I really hope that you have for the most part enjoyed this video Lesson and I hope that you're not thinking I've had enough and that you're done I would love it if you watched another video Lesson because look I'm going to be honest I'm not going to beat around the bush achieving English fluency goes hand in hand with building vocabulary and now that this lesson has come to an end watching another video Lesson would be the next best thing and I know I've already asked you once but I would appreciate it if you hit that like button if you've learned something new it's easier said than done actually that is pretty easy to do but I just wanted to give you a little bit of review and so you could hear these phrases being used in context that's all for now thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced (C1) Phrases to Strengthen Your Vocabulary

If you want to greatly build your vocabulary, but sometimes you're unable to think straight, this lesson is for you because I want to teach you some useful C1 phrases to help you develop your overall vocabulary. And let's begin with a phrase that I just mentioned, not think straight. This means to be unable to use your mind in an effective way. And often you're going to use this phrase when talking about your inability to do something. I could say, "Last night, I didn't get any sleep, so I just can't think straight." Or, "This morning, I didn't have my cup of coffee, so right now I'm unable to think straight." You may also hear people use this in the continuous tense to talk about a specific time. I could say, "Last night, I made a mistake. I wasn't thinking straight." Or perhaps, "I'm telling you, you're too close to the problem. You're not thinking straight." For pronunciation, this phrase does have a couple of overlapping sounds with the final stop t and not. And then we can move right into that voiceless th sound in think. Because your tongue is going to be in the same position right up top behind your front teeth, not think straight.

It just allows us to say it a little faster to not think straight. And for what it's worth, she's not thinking straight. I know I'm not thinking straight, but I don't want to think straight. I think he's on drugs and he's not thinking straight. The drinks, the flirting. Now, if you really want to build your vocabulary, please subscribe to the channel, turn on notifications, otherwise you may not be thinking straight, but that way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. Let's continue with our next C1 phrase, which is one that I really like.

In any event, it just means whatever happens. So, you use this when talking about something that could possibly happen and then basically you're commenting, well, whatever happens, this is what we're going to do. So, let me give you some examples. I could say, "The weather forecast looks bad, but in any event, the concert will go on as planned." Or, "I may not make it to the meeting, but in any event, you can reach me by phone." or the project is running a little late. But in any event, we are committed to finishing on time. One thing I want you to be aware of is that in British English, you may hear someone say at all events. Now, people are also going to use in any event, and in the US, you are only going to hear in any event, but I want you to be aware of this. For pronunciation, linking may occur. This is when we link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word.

So, we can link the final consonant sound in in with the vowel sound in any. In any. I want you to repeat after me right now. In any. In any event. Excellent. I still don't know what you and your president said to her in that room to get her to sign. In any event, she signed the treaty. Oh. Um, I I didn't do anything. Nope. In any event, he's back where he belongs. There's no need for such formalities. In any event, judging from the king's enthusiasm, the queen mother will be a queen grandmother. That'd be a lovely day. Now, if you would like to improve your speaking skills and fine-tune your pronunciation, let me quickly tell you about the sponsor of today's lesson, Elsa Speak.

This is a great app that allows you to do so much. And if you're unfamiliar with it, let me show you how it works. And I want to demonstrate a really cool feature when you join Elsa Premium because you can have an in-depth conversation using their AI feature. welcome to Elsa. As you can see, there are different AI conversations, but we are going to create our own scenario. I want to have a conversation with a close friend about whether or not I should go back to school to get a business degree because I'm thinking about changing careers. Hey, it's great to see you. So, I've heard you are thinking about going back to school for a business degree.

Well, I think it's just about time for a change and I'm having a tough time making a decision. Sometimes I just feel like I'm not able to think straight. I understand how you feel. Maybe you can write down what you like and don't like about your current job. What do you think? I I think you're right and that'll be a good start. So, I'm going to give it a try. In any event, I'll let you know how it goes when I make a final decision, but I really appreciate your help. I'm glad to hear that. I'm here for you if you need to talk more about it. Thanks so much. I'll talk to you later.

I'm excited to hear what you decide. Chat later. Role play completed. We are computing your feedback. And then after the role play, you get a full assessment of your conversation, giving you meaningful feedback when it comes to pronunciation, vocabulary, and grammar. Let's get back to more useful and essential C1 phrases. And the next one that I have for you is in the event of something. This just means if something happens. Now, don't confuse this with the previous phrase, in any event, because they do sound a little similar. But if we're talking about in the event of something, I want you to know that the something is really bad news. And there are some common collocations with this phrase. In the event of an emergency, in the event of a disaster, in the event of bad weather, or in the event of a delay. And really, you're going to follow this phrase telling someone what should be done or what will happen. In the event of an emergency, try to find an exit door. Let me give you some more examples, some funny examples using this phrase. In the event of an apocalypse, I would spend the first 20 minutes wondering why my internet doesn't work. And I think this is probably true for many of us. In the event of a disaster, I have strategically placed rum in various locations. Good idea. For pronunciation, two things I want to mention. The word 'the' has two different pronunciations.

the and the. In this case, we're going to use the because the next word begins with a vowel sound, the event. We can also link the final consonant sound in event with the vowel sound in of. In the event of. Just listen for those two things. In the event of a crash, driver always protects his side first. The doctor entrusted me with your contact details in the event of an emergency. In the event of fire, follow the older heavy set lady in just a t-shirt. Then we have of no consequence or of little consequence. You could use either phrase. They mean the same thing which is not important. I could say my boss thinks that my opinion is of little consequence to her. Or the new information is of no consequence because we had already made a decision. Now you could also use the phrases not of any consequence or not of much consequence.

They all work. But if you're curious as to which phrase is more commonly used, we can check out Engram Viewer. And as you can see, most of the time people are going to say of no consequence or of little consequence. To give you some more context using these phrases, I have some news headlines for you. Brain size of little consequence. Iran government says US election results of no consequence. And AU vote to leave international criminal court of little consequence. And in this case, au is referring to the African Union. For pronunciation, just keep in mind the word little. You're going to hear me pronounce those T's as a flap T. It's going to sound like a soft D. And this is a distinct part of the American accent.

So, I'm going to pronounce little with a flap T because the T's follow a vowel sound and then come before a dark L. battle. You hear all those flap T's. Here are some other examples. No, it is of no consequence. Will be king. Really don't mean to interrupt. It is of no consequence. Captain, whether or not you care to act on this information is of little consequence. Next is from scratch. This just means from the beginning without using anything that exists. Maybe I ask you, do you like my lasagna? I made it from scratch. And this is this is not true. I'm not a very good cook, but I want you to be aware that there are some very useful collocations with this phrase and different verbs that are often used with this phrase, like to make something from scratch or to build something from scratch or develop something from scratch or start something from scratch.

When pronouncing this phrase, I think it's pretty simple and straightforward. From scratch. We're building our house from scratch. We can put down whatever we want. We're starting from scratch. Yeah, from scratch. Great. Now, would you care to join me for an authentic Frontier dinner made entirely from scratch? The last straw or the final straw? You could use either phrase. They both mean the same thing. And they refer to the last in a series of unpleasant events that makes you feel like you cannot continue to accept a bad situation. It's the last straw or it's the final straw. And you can really sense that emotion. Often you're going to use this as a standalone statement. I can't take it anymore. I've had enough.

That's the last straw. We can go back to engram viewer if you want to see which phrase is more commonly used. And as you can see, more often people are going to say the last straw. For pronunciation, elision may occur. This is when sounds or syllables get removed. So the final t and last, it comes between two consonant sounds. So, it's going to lie. You're not really going to hear it. The last straw or the final straw. Your complete lack of table manners was the last straw. Just a haircut and some clothes. No, it's the last straw. I can't take anymore. Yeah, Homer, let your wife have a glimpse of success for once. All right, that's the last straw. From the man who sells me my Marorrown lights, the final straw. The next phrase is for all you food lovers out there, and that is out of season. because this refers to fruits and vegetables that are not grown in an area during that time. This is a very useful phrase when talking about food because fruits and vegetables, they have a season in which they are grown.

So I could say we cannot find strawberries right now because they're out of season. Or research has shown that frozen vegetables have more nutrients in them than imported fresh vegetables that are out of season. I don't know if this is true. It's just an example, but let's go ahead and talk about pronunciation because the final T in out, you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T because it comes between two vowel sounds. And then I can link that flap T with the vowel sound in of out of out of season. Remember, no prime cuts, no fancy sides, no outofse vegetables, no market price. Then there's in no time. This means very quickly, very soon. This is a great phrase to add emphasis and often you're going to use it either at the beginning or end of a statement. I could say, "If you watch my video lessons, you will build your vocabulary in no time." And I can just emphasize that fact. To help you better understand how this phrase is used in context, I have some more news headlines for you. 29 expert hacks to sell your home in no time. Seven easy stairmaster workouts that'll burn calories and melt fat in no time. And finally, gardens will be colorful in no time if you plant these five flowers. Now, for pronunciation, once again, there are some overlapping sounds with the final N sound in in the beginning N sound in no. This just helps us easily transition from one word to the next. In no time. in no time. We'll be done in no time. She's gonna be employee of the month in no time. Will have that 10,000 bucks in no time. Take it from me. This is actually the next phrase. Maybe you thought I was going to give you some advice, but it's a very useful phrase because you're going to say this. Take it from me. When you want to tell someone, accept what I'm saying as true because I know or have experienced it.

Now, often you will use this maybe when you're giving advice, and it's typically going to come at the beginning of a statement. So, let's talk about this in relation to building your vocabulary. I could say, "Take it from me." Learning these phrases will help you improve your speaking fluency. And take it from me. The more you practice, the more confident you will feel using these phrases in casual conversation. When pronouncing this phrase, more linking may occur. We can link the final consonant sound in take with the beginning vowel sound in it. Take it. We also have overlapping m sounds from me. It almost sounds like one word from me. Take it from me. These two things will help you say this phrase easily and naturally. Take it from me. You're always better off with a really good lie. Relationships are tough. Take it from me. I'm here to make your life better because life is complicated. Take it from me. I'm recently divorced. Then there's room for improvement. I really like this phrase, possibly because I use it quite often. And this just refers to a possibility or hope that someone or something will improve and there's really the potential to become better. Really, it's a polite way to say that someone needs to get better or something can get better. Perhaps I tell you, your English is great, but there's room for improvement. Or commenting about myself. my my teaching skills are solid, but there's still room for improvement. Here are some funny memes using this phrase because yeah, it's important to have fun when learning a language. There is room for improvement. Now, politics aside, I personally have never really cared for how the cyber truck looked. So, yeah, I would agree with this. There is room for improvement. Or how about this one? Look at all this room for improvement. from the sound of music. You're surrounded by all this nature, but it's like, hey, we need more buildings. We need more malls.

Look at all this room for improvement. For pronunciation, keep in mind that the word for often gets reduced and that vowel sound is going to change slightly. So instead of for, it's going to sound like for. It's a much softer sound. And then I can link the final consonant sound with the vowel sound in improvement. for improvement. Room for improvement. Saying that we can do better. I'm saying there's always room for improvement. And again, I think the offense has a lot of room for improvement. And all that starts with me. Few hours ago, we both love this song. I still love it. I just think there's room for improvement. Then there's do your utmost or try your utmost. This means to do something as well as you can by making a great effort. Really, this phrase has a similar meaning to do your best. Now, of course, it's a lot more common to say do your best, but it's always good to get a little bit of variety.

Now, often you may follow this phrase with an infinitive. utmost to help you build your vocabulary." Or, "She assured her boss that she would do her utmost to meet the deadline." Or perhaps I tell you try your utmost to remain calm in a difficult situation. For pronunciation, I just want to highlight the word utmost. It's not the most commonly used adjective, but there are two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. Utmost. Do your utmost or try your utmost. We must do our utmost to avoid shedding English blood. I shall do my utmost to help you form strong ideals. True repentance means you try your utmost not to repeat the same mistake.

Then there's to put your mind to something or to set your mind to something. You could use either verb, but this just means to decide that you're going to do something and put a lot of effort into it. And often you're going to use these phrases when you're trying to encourage someone. You can do anything if you put your mind to it. This is a common expression using this phrase. Or I could say, if you set your mind to achieving your goals, you'll find a way to succeed. Or, you can reach your fluency goals if you put your mind to it and watch my video lessons. I like to think that that's true. For pronunciation, assimilation may occur. And the key word there is may. So assimilation is when two sounds blend together to create a new sound. In this case, the T and Y may blend together and you create this slight ch sound put. So we have that stop T and then we're releasing into that slight ch sound. Now this may not always occur. Somebody may say that stop T and then you're going to hear that Y in your put your set your Here are some examples. It is plain to see that you're excellent at whatever you put your mind to. When you set your mind to it, you're one of the most charismatic people I've ever met. You can do anything you set your mind to. But if you're speaking a little faster, this is when I think assimilation will most likely occur. The sounds blend together and you get that slight ch sound. Put your satur you can find something to love about every man if you put your mind to it.

Compared to everything you've already overcome, you can do anything you put your mind to. You can achieve anything you set your mind to. Now, when it comes to building your vocabulary, there's always room for improvement. And I really hope that you don't think building your vocabulary is of no consequence because take it from me, learning new words and phrases like the ones today are going to help you be more precise when you're having a conversation. And if you would like to build your vocabulary in no time, you're going to have to try your utmost and spend some time and energy. But I think you can do it if you just put your mind to it. In any event, if you'd like to continue building your vocabulary right now, you can check out another one of my video lessons. And if you enjoyed this video lesson, you can let me know by hitting that like button.

As always, thank you so much for watching, and I will see you next time.

LESSON 150 OF 749

Advanced (C1) Verbs to Level Up Your Vocabulary

let's learn some Advanced C1 verbs to help you build your vocabulary and this may seem challenging because some words are rather similar and sometimes it can be difficult to differentiate between two words but that's why I'm here I want to teach you some of the slight nuances to help you be more precise and easily differentiate between different words and phrases so let's begin with a verb that I have mentioned twice already differentiate this means to show or find the difference between two things that are compared so it may be difficult to differentiate between American and British English software and Hardware facts and opinions and you're often going to follow this verb with the preposition between to differentiate between two things transporter cannot differentiate between Dr McCoy and the torpedo Michael I cannot differentiate between the hostages and the gods a program that could differentiate between foreign and domestic when pronouncing this verb there are five syllables and the stress is on that third syllable differentiate differentiate keep in mind that the ti a te at the end of the word has a shate sound so this is when the spelling and pronunciation don't really match differentiate and if you are someone who would like to be able to differentiate between words and phrases that are similar then let me help you develop your vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English which is all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and throughout the lesson I am going to tell you the meaning of these different verbs I'll talk a little bit about how they're used in context and we'll go over the pronunciation so that you can say them clearly and naturally the next verb is broaden this means to increase the range of something and there are some great collocations with this verb these are words that are frequently used together so you can broaden your horizons this is an idiom that means you're increasing the range of things you know about or your experiences you can also broaden your mind in this case you're increasing the knowledge that you have about something you can broaden the scope of something and if we were talking about politicians they may need to broaden their support let me show you some news headlines so you can see how this verb is used in context local historian urges town to broaden Horizons when it comes to school names does travel broaden the mind not according to new research us and China agree to broaden talks in bid to ease tensions when pronouncing this verb there are two syllables the stress is on that first syllable broaden now one thing I want you to be aware of is that you may hear people pronounce this with a gladle stop so listen to the difference between broaden and broaden the The Sounds coming from the throat down here broaden broaden it's something that you may hear and hopefully it's easy for you to differentiate between the two pronunciations of this verb but generally you can just stick with broaden to broaden your heart Horizons and if you would like to broaden your horizons when it comes to pronunciation then I think it's very important that you practice and that's why I want to talk to you about the sponsor of today's lesson Elsa speak this is a great app to help you fine-tune your pronunciation and practice your speaking skills and right now I want to show you some of the cool features when you join Elsa premium because there are so many ways to improve your pronunciation and you can have a back and forth conversation using their AI feature I can even create my own scenario welcome to Elsa AI what kind of scenario would you like to role play I want to have a conversation at the airport with another passenger who is asking me about things to do once we arrive in New York City sure I will play the role of a fellow passenger who strikes up a conversation with you let's start hi there waiting for your flight too yeah I'm on my way to New York City how about you yes I'm also on my way to New York City what would you recommend for someone who has never been to New York before well if you've never been there before I would recommend going and visiting the Statue of Liberty as well as the Empire State Building and even walking around Central Park thanks for the recommendations are there any other places that you think are worth visiting in New York City I think you should also go see Time Square and if you like shows check out Broadway there's a lot playing um make sure to add that to my list of things to do thank you for all the recommendations role play completed and then after you finish you get a full assessment of your conversation providing you with in-depth feedback you can also use Elsa's speech analyzer from your desktop whenever you have a meeting or you give a presentation or you're practicing for an exam like the ielt there's just so much to help you improve so join Elsa premium by clicking on the link down in the description and you can get a 30 % discount on a one-year membership if you already have a pro membership you can upgrade with the new Elsa conversation bundle once again

check out my unique Link in the description if you'd like to get an Elsa premium membership and take your speaking fluency to the next level let's get back to our C1 verbs and the next one that I have for you is grasp it has two different meanings the first one is to quickly take something in your hand or hands and hold it firmly so this is a very descriptive verb he grasped my hand or she grasped my arm or the child slipped from my grasp there are some other phrases that have a similar meaning you can grasp an opportunity you're taking it eagerly and there's an idiom grasp at straws it means that you're trying to find a way to succeed but whatever you choose it's probably not going to help you so think about the situation you are holding tightly or grasping something weak like a straw and because of that it's not likely to save you I tried going back to work like you honestly I'm just grasping at straws and Cooper was one of those straws Mr President it doesn't matter where we debrief this man the fact is we're grasping it straws here the other meaning of this verb is to understand something especially something difficult I could tell you the child was able to grasp the main idea of the story or if I am able to explain these verbs well then you will be able to easily grasp the meaning of these verbs and know how to use them correctly when pronouncing this verb I think it's pretty simple and straightforward grasp but just say it with me grasp excellent then we have the verb diminish this means to reduce or be reduced in size or importance so you can diminish something as we get older our muscle strength tends to diminish at least that's what's happening to me but you could also diminish someone and this has a little bit more of a negative connotation I could say his careless mistakes diminished him in the eyes of management so in this case the mistakes reduced his importance just makes things seem small it diminishes them you must prepare for life and whatever it will throw at you the opportunities will diminish I am shocked sir I I never like hell you are you want to diminish me diminish you lay the groundwork for a challenge in 2016 for pronunciation the verb has three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable diminish diminish to diminish something or to diminish someone fall flat this is an idiom but we're going to use it as a verb to fall flat this is said when a joke suggestion or idea does not have the intended effect now most of the time you're going to use this when talking about jokes so right now I'm going to tell you a couple of jokes and you can let me know in the comments if they fall flat if I am what I eat then I'm fast cheap and easy it's a little ridiculous here here's another one you know what they say never go to bed angry stay up and fight so I suppose one or both of those jokes fell flat it did not have the intended effect of laughter but you can let me know for pronunciation I don't think it's that difficult fall flat the only thing I want to point out is that there is alliteration and alliteration is the repetition of the initial consonant sound in two words that are next to each other or close to each other fall flat I hope that my jokes did not fall flat for your attempts at mockery fall flat let's call it a joke that fell flat and leave it at that Robert and Sarah's textures fell flat a huge performance tomorrow where a man's joke is going to fall flat next is the verb contradict and it also has two meanings it really depends if we're talking about people or statements but if we're talking about people it just means that someone is saying something that is the opposite of what someone else said and people can contradict each other this happens all the time her testimony contradicted the policeman's story you could also contradict yourself and often you may follow this verb with that reflexive pronoun if I were to say I can tell you everything everything that you need to know but I don't know anything about that I just contradicted myself in saying the opposite when using this verb to talk about a statement or a fact it just means that some statement or fact is so different than another statement or fact that one of them must be wrong I could say new evidence contradicts the established theories on this subject they're so different that yeah one of them must be wrong just keep in mind that when someone or something contradicts someone or something else it's not really telling us which one is right or correct it's just saying that they're either opposites or different to give you a little more context with this verb here are some more news headlines video evidence appears to contradict Lauren bobert's denial that she was vaping at Beetlejuice show OPEC figures contradict anon's oil production claims opinion liberal climate policies are fine on their own but contradict each other when together when pronouncing this verb it has three syllables and the stress is on that third syllable contradict I will try not to contradict myself then I have another idiom for you which we'll use as a verb and that is to set foot in some place this means to go to a place or to enter a place and you're really going to use this idiom when you want to add emphasis and there's some emotion involved I could say I'm afraid to set foot in my hometown because it's no longer peaceful and quiet and I'm just afraid to go to this place or I'm so angry at my brother I refuse to set foot in his home and I refuse to enter his home so hopefully you can sense that emotion I haven't set foot in a bar and you if you set foot in this St ever again I will bring hell down on you unless CI grants us an audience and is somehow convinced not to murder us the moment we set foot in the capital when pronouncing this idiom it's pretty easy to say the individual words but I want you to say it as a phrase so I want you to think about that final T in foot I'm from the United States so I am going to pronounce this as a flap T it's going to sound like a soft d this is very common with the American accent when the t comes between two vowel sounds and then we can link that final consonant sound that flap t with the beginning vowel sound in in and it's going to sound like foot in to set foot in just listen for it I refuse to set foot in there then we have the verb allocate and this means to distribute something for a particular purpose and and there are some great collocations with this verb you can allocate resources or allocate money or allocate funds or even allocate blame I could say the city allocated money for disaster relief or the company's profits were allocated to its shareholders and in these sentences I want to point out that this verb May often be followed with the preposition for or to allocate for something or to allocate to someone for every $100 we allocate to research we spend nearly $ 30,000 on care in response to your repeated inquiries has allocated the enclosed funds for your library project for pronunciation the verb has three syllables the stress is on the first syllable and that second syllable has that unstress schah sound allocate allocate then we have the verb collaborate I like this verb it's a great one when talking about work because it means to work with someone else for a special purpose and often you may follow this verb with the prepositions with on to or in I collaborated with my friend collaborate with someone we collaborated on a project collaborate on something we collaborated to create new guidelines for the company collaborate to do something we collaborated in implementing the guidelines companywide collaborate in doing something for pronunciation the verb has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable the first and third syllable have that unstressed schah sound that uh sound collaborate collaborate I'm sure that at work we have all collaborated with someone do you want to collaborate on something I collaborated with my designer it was a match made in heaven the aliens are thinking as we are to collaborate in producing explosion next is the verb generalize this means to make a statement that something is true in all cases based on what is true in some cases I think we can all relate to this verb because people often generalize when talking about groups so

I'm generalizing when I say salespeople often lie to make more money or dogs are more affectionate than cats or politicians are okay I'm I'm generalizing and I'm joking but perhaps that joke didn't fall flat let's look at some more news headlines to see how this verb is used in context let's not generalize about the kids these days don't generalize the LGBTQ community smart Brands won't generalize when it comes to gen Z for pronunciation there are four syllables the stress is on that first syllable generalize generalize one one thing I'll say is that you may hear people say the word without that schwas sound and that schwas sound will alide and it's going to sound more like it has three syllables generalize generalize keep that in mind then I have another phrase for you which is also an idiom and that is lose your head this means to lose control and not act calmly because you're upset you're angry and often you're going to use this idiom when talking about troubling situations I could say it's a stressful situation and now's not the time to lose our heads or when my car broke down I lost my head and didn't know what to do now this idiom may sound similar to another idiom lose your mind but that has a slightly different meaning if you lose your mind you become mentally ill you become crazy so I want you to be able to differentiate between those two idioms lose your head lose your mind but let's just stick with lose your head when pronouncing this idiom once again I would like you to say it as a phrase and when you say it a simulation may occur

this is when two sounds blend together to create a new sound so the final consonant sound in lose may blend with the beginning consonant sound in your and you get this slight J sound it's like we're going to put it right between the words and that allows us to connect them together it's not something you have to force if you say these words one right after the other it's just going to occur naturally lose your head hopefully you can hear that slight J sound just listen for it do be careful my dear children don't lose your heads and why did you fall in love with her well you know you lose your head sometimes and then you know what you're knocked for a loop and you completely lose your head and then we have the verb facilitate this means to make something possible or easier and there are some great collocations with this verb you can facilitate grow grow or facilitate learning or facilitate access or even facilitate communication I create these lessons to facilitate learning and your engagement when you like and comment on these videos well that is going to facilitate the Channel's growth so please do that for pronunciation the verb has four syllables the stress is on that second syllable facilitate and just keep keep in mind that the C has more of an s that s sound facilitate I hope that you help facilitate the channels growth and learn something new please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

LESSON 151 OF 749

Advanced (C1) Vocabulary MASTERCLASS in 60 Minutes

Let's flex your vocabulary muscles because I want to teach you some advanced but still common words, phrases, and idioms to help you build your vocabulary. And if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes, the channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. Now, I say that this is advanced but still common vocabulary because I'm talking about C1 words and phrases. And C1 is one of Cambridge's highest levels of proficiency. And I'm really going to go into the weeds and give you a lot of information about this vocabulary. I'm going to tell you the meaning, talk about how it's used, give you a variety of examples, as well as go over the pronunciation so that you can say them just like me. So, let's begin with some C1 phrases.

helpful and useful. And all things considered is the first phrase that I would like to teach you. So, you would use this phrase when you're trying to say that something is true or good in general when you consider all of its aspects. And it like you're saying that a situation's not perfect, but in general, it's pretty good. And often I think you may use this phrase when you're referring to an event like the success of an event. So, if we're talking about a wedding, I could say the wedding was a great success all things considered. There's a lot of planning that goes into a wedding. Some things may go wrong, but you could say all things considered, it was a great success.

And with this phrase, the only thing that I'd like to point out is that there's a bit of coarticulation going on with that final dark L in all, and then you move right into that voiceless th in things because the tip of your tongue is going to be behind your top front teeth. And it's like we can just connect those two words, all things. All things considered. I guess all things considered, I was lucky Dwight was there. Bit by bit is the next phrase that I'd like to teach you. So, this is a binomial pair, which is talking about an expression that has two words joined by a conjunction. And that conjunction, it's often and or or, but in this case, it's not. We're talking about by bit by bit. And what this means is gradually. You're going to do something gradually. Often I think that you would use this when talking about something you're going to grow or develop, or even just the opposite, something that you're going to destroy or take apart. So, I could say that I'm trying to grow this channel bit by bit.

I'm doing it gradually, and hopefully it'll get bigger and bigger. You may be thinking, is there really any difference between bit by bit and little by little, which is also another binomial pair? And they really have a similar meaning. I would say that little by little is more commonly used. It's actually a B2 phrase, but if you know that binomial pair, then you should have no trouble using bit by bit. And for pronunciation, there's not really anything too difficult going on here. There's a little bit of alliteration when you have the same sound said again and again, bit by bit. You hear that b sound. So, in that case, it's pretty fun to just say bit by bit, bit by bit.

Then I sat back and watched Moriarty destroy my reputation bit by bit. Let's just stay with the b sound with our next phrase, which is before you know it. And this just means very soon. So, when you use this phrase, you're emphasizing that something is going to happen quickly and suddenly. And before I give you some examples, I want to talk about the pronunciation. And I really want you to pay attention to the linking that occurs at the end of this phrase. So, you have that w consonant sound in know. It's going to get linked with the vowel sound in it, that beginning vowel sound. Know it. And people will generally say this phrase together. They'll say it quickly, so linking will occur when you use this phrase, before you know it. First, she's texting at work, and then she's not doing her homework, and then she's hanging out with the bad kids. And before you know it, she's pregnant. To give you a few more examples, I could say, I know flying gives you some anxiety, but the plane will be on the ground before you know it. Or perhaps someone's pregnant, and you say, "Congratulations.

I bet the baby will be here before you know it." Out of the blue. And that is the next C1 phrase that I want to teach you, out of the blue. You can use this phrase to say that something happens that is completely unexpected. And often you would use this if you're telling a story, and then you want to emphasize the thing that was unexpected. Last week, out of the blue, she said that we should move in together. And I didn't know that our relationship was that serious. It just happened out of the blue. So, I used this adverb phrase once at the beginning of the statement, and then at the end. You can kind of move it around a little bit. And once again, this phrase has a similar meaning to another phrase, which is out of nowhere.

Everything was going great until he suddenly reappeared out of the blue. But that dum-dum ran his mouth. The next phrase is at a glance. This means to see something immediately or quickly. And people may use this phrase with the word quick and say at a quick glance. You're just adding a little emphasis to the speed. Or someone might say at first glance. That's another collocation with this phrase, saying that you looked at something quickly, but then you had to look at it closer, or maybe you looked at it again. To show you how it's used in context, I could say, I could tell at a glance that something was wrong. Everyone looked worried. Or I recognized her at a glance. She was the woman from the party.

the vowel sound in a, that article. At a. At a glance. At a glance. We're going to line the front seat and the back seat and the floorboards with clothes and blankets. Cop stops us and starts sticking his big snout in the car. This subterfuge won't last. But at a glance, the car will appear to be normal. Then there's the phrase to have something against someone. And this just means to dislike someone for a reason. And even though the meaning is pretty simple and straightforward, the usage of this phrase can be a bit challenging because the something is your reason. And let's say you don't like someone because they stole something. I would not say I have stealing against him. That just sounds awkward. Instead, the reason, that something, it's often well, it's not going to exist, or it's going to be unknown. So, let's talk about a reason that just doesn't exist. In this case, you're basically saying that you have no reason to dislike someone. And people may use this with the words nothing or anything. So, I might say, "I have nothing against him. We just don't have anything in common." So, I don't have any reason to dislike him. The reason it just doesn't exist, but maybe you don't have anything in common, and therefore you're not friends. Or using anything, I don't have anything against her. We just don't get along. So, once again, the reason why I dislike this person just doesn't exist, but maybe again with some people, you don't end up getting along, and you're not friends. If we're talking about a reason that is unknown, well then people may ask a question and use this phrase, like, "Why were you so mean? What do you have against her?"

So, again, it's unknown, the reason, so that's why I'm asking the question. What do you have against her? Or you could just use this in a statement if I'm asking you, like, "Well, look, I don't know what you have against me, but we really need to find a way to work together." So, again, what you have against me is that noun clause, but I'm still talking about a reason that is that is unknown. I don't know what you have against me, but I know that's that's just an example, you know, we're we're friends, we get along. I think we work well together. But if we're talking about the pronunciation of this phrase, I'd like to point out that elision may occur if the someone is him or her. And elision is when you remove a certain sound or even syllable. So, in this case, we're talking about that H in him or her. And if it gets removed, well then we can link that final T in against with the vowel sound. So, it'll sound like against him, or against her. What do you have against him? What do you have against her? And elision may occur when you're pronouncing this phrase. You didn't care very much for our community, do you, Mr. Walsh? I have nothing against your community, Mr. Pruitt. The next C1 phrase that I have for you is to look on the bright side. And this just means to find good things in a bad situation. And you would tell someone to look on the bright side. So, think about it in the context of trying to cheer someone up. And there's a bad situation and you tell them, "Look on the bright side." And then you would follow it with a reason. And that's really important. So, you're telling them to cheer up, try and stay positive.

And then you got to give them a reason why. If you just say, "Look on the bright side." and don't say anything else, then it's going to seem a little strange. So, let's say you tear your new shirt and you're really upset about it and I'm trying to cheer you up. And I say, "Hey, look on the bright side. Now you get to go shopping for some new clothes and you get to find a new shirt and you can look on the bright side." When you're pronouncing this phrase, just keep in mind that once again, linking will occur. We can link that final "k" consonant sound in look with the vowel sound in on, look on.

remember the article "the", we're going to pronounce it with a schwa sound because it comes before that consonant "b" sound in bright, look on the bright side. Look on the bright side. This is a deal breaker. Look on the bright side. What's the bright side? Only 9 more months to Comic-Con. Oh, yeah? To take issue with. So, this just means to strongly disagree with someone or something. And you could just use this instead of saying, "I disagree. I take issue with that." And it just gives it a little bit of emphasis. I take issue with teachers who use corporal punishment. Or we took issue with the changes they made to the contract.

Or you're not going to hit the like button? I take issue with that, okay? I just I disagree with that. And of course, I'm just kidding. You You can do whatever you want. But when you are pronouncing this phrase, keep in mind that we can link the final consonant sound in take with the beginning vowel sound in issue, take issue. And as you you can start to see a theme here that linking commonly occurs in many of these phrases. Daddy. That's where we already are. Cool your tongue, Airman, because I intend to take issue with your performance. Then we have to keep a low profile. And this means to avoid attracting attention to yourself. And I think that we can all relate to this phrase. Right now, can you think of a time when you were trying to keep a low profile? Perhaps you go to some social event, maybe a party, and you really don't feel like talking to many people. So, you try to keep a low profile. Or or perhaps at work, maybe you showed up late or you forgot to submit something. You don't want to attract attention to yourself, so you try to keep a low profile. And for pronunciation, yes, more linking. We can link that consonant sound in keep with that schwa sound in the article "a", keep a, keep a low profile. advice for me on my new position? Keep a low profile? If I had a gold dragon for every time I heard that joke, I'd be richer than you are. Then we have the phrase in accordance with. And this means in a way that agrees with or follows. And typically you're talking about agreeing with or following a rule or a law. And because of the meaning that you're following a rule or a law, I think it's likely that you may hear this phrase being used in a more formal situation. So, I could say, "The Justice Department acted in accordance with the new law." Or to be honest, I could get banned from

YouTube if I am not in accordance with YouTube's terms of service. So, in both of those examples, it's a little more formal because I'm talking about following a rule or a law. Now, when you pronounce this phrase, of course, we can link those first two words. We can link that consonant "n" in in with the vowel sound in accordance, in accordance. And keep in mind that final syllable in accordance, even though it's spelled d a n c e, you're not going to say dance. It's going to have that schwa sound. It's going to sound like dunce, in accordance with. In accordance with FAA rules, the first two people to the front will be upgraded to first class.

Okay, you two. The next couple of phrases are more related to driving and the first one is backroad. So, a backroad refers to a small road that does not have a lot of traffic on it. So, maybe you're just trying to avoid traffic or avoid those busy streets and you take some backroads. And one thing I want to point out is that I think you'll often use this with the plural roads because when you're driving, if you're trying to avoid traffic, you're probably not just going to stay on one road. You may take several different ones and that's why people often talk about backroads. I know some backroads that we can take in order to avoid rush hour traffic. And the pronunciation of this phrase is pretty simple and straightforward. You just say those two words as they are, backroads. I'm glad we took the backroads.

The highways are probably a mess right now. Then there's bear left or bear right. This means to change direction slightly so that you're going in a particular direction, in this case left or right. And I think these phrases are very useful, especially if you're giving directions and you want to be specific because some roads, especially some of those backroads, uh they they may not always have a full left turn or right turn. And I would say, "Hey, up ahead, you're you're going to want to bear left and then after that, the road's going to intersect with another one and when that happens, you should bear right." All right, I'm just trying to be a little more specific.

Do not think about the animal. slightly. And again, we're just going to provide that extra bit of information to bear left or bear right. And for pronunciation, the only thing I want to say about well, just one of the phrases, bear right, you have that overlapping "r" sound, that final "r" in bear and the beginning "r" in right, just allows you to move from one word right into the next, bear right. Or maybe we'll bear left. Ozzie. Yes. Bear left. What? Bear left. Right front. What? Never mind. That's cute. Now, I know some of these phrases may be challenging, but I want you to look on the bright side. As you continue to build your vocabulary bit by bit, well then you will continue to develop your overall English fluency. You just need to keep reviewing these phrases from time to time and before you know it, they'll become a part of your active memory and you'll be able to use them easily and naturally. And I hope you agree with me and you don't take issue with what I just said.

I would love it if you write to me down in the comments unless you're trying to keep a low profile. In that case, I I understand. But if you learned something new, I'd really appreciate it if you hit that like button. I hope you enjoyed that little bit of review at the end. I think it's a great way to reinforce how the vocabulary is used in context. And I'm going to keep doing that throughout the lesson. But right now, I want to teach you some C1 verbs. And verbs are incredibly important. I want to say that again. Verbs are incredibly important because they tell us so much. So, learning these C1 verbs will allow you to be more descriptive and precise when having a conversation. So, without further ado, here are some C1 verbs.

This may seem challenging because some words are rather similar. And sometimes it can be difficult to differentiate between two words. But that's why I'm here. I want to teach you some of the slight nuances to help you be more precise and easily differentiate between different words and phrases. So, let's begin with a verb that I have mentioned twice already, differentiate. This means to show or find the difference between two things that are compared. So, it may be difficult to differentiate between American and British English, software and hardware, facts and opinions. And you're often going to follow this verb with the preposition between to differentiate between two things. Transporter cannot differentiate between Dr. McCoy and the torpedo.

Michael, I cannot differentiate between the hostages and the gods. A program that could differentiate between foreign and domestic. When pronouncing this verb, there are five syllables and the stress is on that third syllable, differentiate, differentiate. Keep in mind that the t i a t e at the end of the word has a she ate sound. So, this is when the spelling and pronunciation don't really match, differentiate. And if you are someone who would like to be able to differentiate between words and phrases that are similar, then let me help you develop your vocabulary. The next verb is broaden. This means to increase the range of something. And there are some great collocations with this verb. These are words that are frequently used together. So, you can broaden your horizons. This is an idiom that means you're increasing the range of things you know about or your experiences. You can also broaden your mind. In this case, you're increasing the knowledge that you have about something. You can broaden the scope of something. And if we were talking about politicians, they may need to broaden their support. Let me show you some news headlines so you can see how this verb is used in context. Local historian urges town to broaden horizons when it comes to school names. Does travel broaden the mind? Not according to new research. US and China agreed to broaden talks in bid to ease tensions. When pronouncing this verb, there are two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, broaden. Now, one thing I want you to be aware of is that you may hear people pronounce this with a glottal stop. So, listen to the difference between broaden and broaden. The the sounds coming from the throat down here. Broaden, broaden.

It's something that you may hear, and hopefully it's easy for you to differentiate between the two pronunciations of this verb, but generally you can just stick with broaden to broaden your horizons. And if you would like to broaden your horizons when it comes to pronunciation, then I think it's very important that you practice. And the next one that I have for you is grasp. It has two different meanings. The first one is to quickly take something in your hand or hands and hold it firmly. So, this is a very descriptive verb. He grasped my hand or she grasped my arm or the child slipped from my grasp. There are some other phrases that have a similar meaning. You can grasp an opportunity, you're taking it eagerly. And there's an idiom, grasp at straws. It means that you're trying to find a way to succeed, but you whatever you choose, it's probably not going to help you. So, think about the situation. You are holding tightly or grasping something weak like a straw, and because of that, it's not likely to save you. I tried going back to work. Like you. Honestly, I'm just [music] grasping at straws, and Cooper was one of those straws. Mr. President, it doesn't matter where we debrief this man. The fact is, we're grasping at straws here. The other meaning of this verb is to understand something, especially something difficult. I could tell you the child was able to grasp the main idea of the story. Or if I am able to explain these verbs well, then you will be able to easily grasp the meaning of these verbs and know how to use them correctly.

When pronouncing this verb, I think it's pretty simple and straightforward, grasp. But just say it with me. Grasp. Excellent. Then we have the verb diminish. This means to reduce or be reduced in size or importance. So, you can diminish something. As we get older, our muscle strength tends to diminish. At least, that's what's happening to me. But you could also diminish someone, and this has a little bit more of a negative connotation. I could say, "His careless mistakes diminished him in the eyes of management." So, in this case, the mistakes reduced his importance. It just makes things seem small. It diminishes them. You must prepare for life and whatever it would throw at you. The opportunities will diminish. I am shocked, sir. I I never you are. You wanted to diminish me.

Diminish you? Laying the groundwork for a challenge in 2016. For pronunciation, the verb has three syllables, and the stress is on that second syllable, diminish. Diminish. To diminish something or to diminish someone. Fall flat. This is an idiom, but we're going to use it as a verb, to fall flat. This is said when a joke, suggestion, or idea does not have the intended effect. Now, most of the time, you're going to use this when talking about jokes. So, right now, I'm going to tell you a couple of jokes, and you can let me know in the comments if they fall flat. If I am what I eat, then I'm fast, cheap, and easy.

It's a little ridiculous. Here Here's another one. You know what they say, "Never go to bed angry. Stay up and fight." So, I suppose one or both of those jokes fell flat. It did not have the intended effect of laughter, but you can let me know. For pronunciation, I don't think it's that difficult, fall flat. The only thing I want to point out is that there is alliteration, and alliteration is the repetition of the initial consonant sound in two words that are next to each other or close to each other, fall flat. I hope that my jokes did not fall flat. For your attempts at mockery, fall flat. Let's call it a joke. It fell flat and leave it at that.

evidence contradicts the established theories on this subject." They're so different that, yeah, one of them must be wrong. Just keep in mind that when someone or something contradicts someone or something else, it's not really telling us which one is right or correct. It's just saying that they're either opposites or different. To give you a little more context with this verb, here are some more news headlines. Video evidence appears to contradict Lauren Boebert's denial that she was vaping at Beetlejuice show. OPEC figures contradict Iran's oil production claims. Opinion, liberal climate policies are fine on their own, but contradict each other when together. When pronouncing this verb, it has three syllables, and the stress is on that third syllable, contradict.

I will try not to contradict myself. Then I have another idiom for you, which we'll use as a verb, and that is to set foot in some place. This means to go to a place or to enter a place. And you're really going to use this idiom when you want to add emphasis, and there's some emotion involved. I could say, "I'm afraid to set foot in my hometown because it's no longer peaceful and quiet, and I'm just afraid to go to this place." Or "I'm so angry at my brother, I refuse to set foot in his home." And I refuse to enter his home. So, hopefully you can sense that emotion. I haven't set foot in my barn in years. If you set foot in this store ever again, I will bring hell down on you. Unless Sersi glances an audience and is somehow convinced not to murder us the moment we set foot in the capital. When pronouncing this idiom, it's pretty easy to say the individual words, but I want you to say it as a phrase. So, I want you to think about that final T in foot. I'm from the United States, so I am going to pronounce this as a flap T. It's going to sound like a soft D. This is very common with the American accent when the T comes between two vowel sounds. And then we can link that final consonant sound, that flap T, with the beginning vowel sound in in, and it's going to sound like foot in. To set foot in. Just listen for it. I refuse to set foot in there. Then we have the verb allocate, and this means to distribute something for a particular purpose. And there are some great collocations with this verb. You can allocate resources or allocate money or allocate funds or even allocate blame.

I could say, "The city allocated money for disaster relief." Or the company's profits were allocated to its shareholders. And in these sentences, I want to point out that this verb may often be followed with the preposition for or to, to allocate for something or to allocate to someone. For every $100 we allocate to research, we spend nearly 30,000 on care. In response to your repeated inquiries, it has allocated the enclosed funds for your library project. For pronunciation, the verb has three syllables. The stress is on the first syllable, and that second syllable has that unstressed schwa sound. Allocate. Allocate. Then we have the verb collaborate. I like this verb. It's a great one when talking about work because it means to work with someone else for a special purpose. And often you may follow this verb with the prepositions with, on, to, or in.

I collaborated with my friend. Collaborate with someone. We collaborated on a project. Collaborate on something. We collaborated to create new guidelines for the company. Collaborate to do something. We collaborated in implementing the guidelines company-wide. Collaborate in doing something. For pronunciation, the verb has four syllables, and the stress is on that second syllable. The first and third syllable have that unstressed schwa sound, that uh sound. Collaborate. Collaborate. I'm sure that at work we have all collaborated with someone. Do you want to collaborate on something? I collaborated with my designer. It was a match made in heaven. [music] The aliens are thinking as we are to collaborate in producing explosion. Next is the verb generalize. This means to make a statement that something is true in all cases based on what is true in some cases. I think we can all relate to this verb because people often generalize when talking about groups. So, I'm generalizing when I say sales people often lie to make more money or dogs are more affectionate than cats [sighs] or politicians are Okay, I'm I'm generalizing and I'm joking, but perhaps that joke didn't fall flat. Let's look at some more news headlines to see how this verb is used in context. Let's not generalize about the kids these days. Don't generalize the LGBTQ community. Smart brands won't generalize when it comes to Gen Z. For pronunciation, there are four syllables, the stress is on that first syllable. Generalize. Generalize. One one thing I'll say is that you may hear people say the word without that schwa sound, and that schwa sound will allide, and it's going to sound more like it has three syllables.

Generalize. Generalize. Keep that in mind. Then I have another phrase for you, which is also an idiom, and that is lose your head. This means to lose control and not act calmly because you're upset, you're angry. And often you're going to use this idiom when talking about troubling situations. I could say, "It's a stressful situation, and now's not the time to lose our heads." Or when my car broke down, I lost my head and didn't know what to do. Now, this idiom may sound similar to another idiom, lose your mind, but that has a slightly different meaning. If you lose your mind, you become mentally ill, you become crazy. So, I want you to be able to differentiate between those two idioms, lose your head, lose your mind, but let's just stick with lose your head.

Well, you know, you lose your head sometimes. And then we have the verb facilitate. This means to make something possible or easier. And there are some great collocations with this verb. You can facilitate growth or facilitate learning or facilitate access or even facilitate communication. I create these lessons to facilitate learning and your engagement. When you like and comment on these videos, well, that is going to facilitate the channel's growth. So, please do that. For pronunciation, the verb has four syllables. The stress is on that second syllable. Facilitate. And just keep in mind that the C has more of an s than S sound. Facilitate. I hope that you help facilitate the channel's growth. Now, for a little review. I hope that I was able to broaden your horizons and teach you some new verbs, and I truly believe that if you are able to allocate more time to building your vocabulary, learn new words, review old ones, that's going to help you more easily grasp the meaning of different words and phrases, and it will help you facilitate clear communication. Because let's be honest, as we get older, our brains, our memory, it starts to diminish. And the next thing you know, you won't be able to differentiate between the mafia and government. But I'll tell you, one of them is organized. That was supposed to be a joke. I don't know, perhaps it fell flat. So, I need to get going. I'm going to wrap things up. Please don't lose your head. You are welcome to watch another video lesson and continue building your vocabulary. You're doing great, so let's continue building your vocabulary with some informal phrases. And by that, I'm talking about idioms. Now, we use idioms all the time in just casual conversation, so I think they're really helpful when it comes to your listening comprehension because when you're having a conversation, you really need to be on the ball. You got to be on the ball, and I'll talk about that in just a moment.

If someone uses an idiom, you need to be able to understand it so that you can keep the conversation going. And I think it's also wonderful if you can use them from time to time, such as saying that someone is on the ball. Here we go. So, let's begin with an idiom that I've already mentioned, which is on the ball. And to be on the ball is a C1 idiom, and it means to be quick to understand and react to things. So, it's like you're just really ready and alert. And often this idiom is going to follow the verb to be, and you could use it in the affirmative and say, "Look, you really need to be on the ball for the important meeting tomorrow." Or you may hear people use it in the negative and say something like, "Well, he didn't sleep much last night, so today he's just not on the ball." I always try to be on the ball when I come up with these lessons. I try to react and always give you the best information, provide some nuance. When pronouncing this idiom, linking may occur, and this is when you link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word.

the ball." "I'm on the ball." "You're on the ball." And it's like you can hear that consonant sound getting moved over to that preposition. And if I were to say it a little faster, "She's on the ball." "I'm on the ball." "You're on the ball." With flying colors. This means to do something, such as pass an exam, successfully. And often you're going to use this with the verb pass, to pass with flying colors. It's a common collocation. Both passed with flying colors and will be named finalists in our astronaut search. pass with flying colors? YES! YOU can also put the object in there right after the verb, to pass something with flying colors. Well, you passed the vetting process with flying colors.

Well, you passed the breathalyzer with flying colors. And the next one that I have for you is to turn a blind eye. This means to ignore something that you know is wrong. And unfortunately, I think we can all relate to this idiom. You see something that you know is wrong, but you don't say anything, you don't do anything, you turn a blind eye. You may follow this idiom with the preposition to, to turn a blind eye to something. The teacher turned a blind eye to cheating during the quiz. Or maybe I know that Emmy stole the cookie, but I decided to turn a blind eye to the situation, and I just ignored it. For pronunciation, more linking may occur with the first two words and the last two words. Turn a blind eye.

Turn a blind eye. Just listen for it. For years, the government turned a blind eye to the recruitment of immigrants by the meatpacking [music] industry. Obviously, I'm not going to turn a blind eye, no matter how absurd I find all of this. Then we have the easy way out. I really like this idiom. Who does not like the easy way out? So, this really refers to what is easiest in a difficult situation. And often, you may use this idiom with the verb take, to take the easy way out. Have you ever taken the easy way out? When it comes to these vocabulary lessons, I try not to take the easy way out and just teach simple, basic vocabulary. I try to tackle some advanced words and phrases and give you nuance and context. And to give you some context as to how this idiom is used, I have some news headlines for you. LeBron James taking the easy way out on offense. Are regulators about to take the easy way out and declare CBD a drug?

African currencies are crashing and there's no easy way out. For pronunciation, we can connect those final two words, way out. And really, what's going on here is intrusion. And this is when you insert a slight consonant sound between two vowel sounds in order to connect them. So, way, even though it's spelled w a y, it's actually a vowel sound, way. It's a front vowel sound, which means we would insert a slight y sound in order to link it with the vowel sound in out, way out. The easy way out. And we'll talk more about intrusion with our next idiom, which is how on earth, what on earth, why on earth. This is a great idiom for conveying some emotion. It's used when you're extremely surprised, confused, or angry about something.

How on earth did this happen? Why on earth are you changing jobs? What on earth is that? Okay, and notice the way that I'm saying it, really capturing that emotion. When pronouncing this idiom, there are really two things that may occur, but it really just depends on the question word that you're using, who, what, where, when, why, how. But the two things are linking or intrusion. Let's start with linking because this is something that may or may not occur. I told you that this idiom, it can convey emotion. And when that happens, people may emphasize the individual words and possibly even speak slower, in which case you're not really going to link the words together.

What on earth are you doing? How on earth did you get that? But if somebody is speaking casually and naturally, they may say it a little faster, and in that case, we can link some of these words. So, what on earth or where on earth. The other thing I'd like to point out is that what on earth, that final t in what, because I'm from the United States, I am going to pronounce it as a flap t. It's going to sound like a soft d. And this is because it comes between two vowel sounds. What on earth. And we can link that flap t with the vowel sound in on. What on earth, where on earth. Just listen for it. What on earth is going on here?

Where on earth did you get these? Where on earth did they go? Now, you may be thinking, what about when on earth? Can we also link this phrase together? Yes, you can, but I want you to know that it is not commonly used. You can see that right here using Ngram Viewer. This is a great resource to compare different words and phrases and see how frequently they are used. And as you can see, when on earth is not commonly used. If we're talking about the question words why or how, well then intrusion is going to occur. I told you it's when we insert a slight consonant sound between the two vowels. So, why on earth, that's a front vowel, so we can insert a slight y between the two vowels, why on earth.

And how, this is a diphthong, but it's a back vowel, so we can insert a slight w sound. How on earth. Why on earth, how on earth. It's very slight, but just listen for it. Why on earth would we have sex? Why on earth would you turn around and give the contract to the Chinese? How on earth is that possible? And then there's in light of, or really in light of something. And this means because of or as a result of. And typically, it's something that you learn about or become aware of, and therefore a change is going to be made. So, I could say, in light of recent events, we canceled the match. And this is a good collocation with this idiom, in light of recent events. You may be thinking, in light of learning new vocabulary, I'm going to hit that like button. And I would really appreciate it, and I know that you're not going to turn a blind eye to hitting that like button.

For pronunciation, there are just two things that I want to point out, linking and a flap t. So, the final t in light, because it comes between two vowel sounds with the American accent, I am going to pronounce it as a flap t. And then I can link that soft d with the vowel sound in of, in light of. In light of. Say it with me. In light of. Good. I know that I am giving you a lot of information, and I do not expect you to remember all of it. But one of the primary goals of a long, detailed lesson like this is to get exposure. You are getting exposure as to how these words and phrases are used. Let me put it this way.

If you already know some of this vocabulary passively, and it's review, then that's great. In that case, I would say it's time to start actively using these words and phrases. Now, if some of this vocabulary is completely new, that's also a plus because you're learning these words and phrases passively, which is really the initial building blocks when it comes to improving your skills, and it's ultimately going to help you reach your fluency goals. So, let's continue with some more descriptive words, and I'm talking about adjectives. Believe it or not, I have a cutting-edge vocabulary lesson for you to help you improve your English. Let's just begin with a word that I have already mentioned, cutting-edge. And this just means very modern with all the newest features.

cutting-edge research. I was a young scientist working with a world-class team. cutting-edge research To attract the top heads, we'll need to make a recruitment film, picture that showcases our cutting-edge technology. When pronouncing this word, the stress is going to be on that first syllable, and that t, I am going to pronounce this as a flap t, which is very common when talking about the American accent, because that t comes between two vowel sounds. So, I'll say it as a flap t, which is going to sound more like a soft d, cutting. Cutting edge. And that dg combination in edge has that j sound, cutting edge. And if you are someone who appreciates cutting-edge vocabulary lessons, please subscribe, turn on notifications, that way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes, the channel is Interactive English, it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. And throughout the lesson, I'm going to talk to you about the pronunciation of each adjective, because I tried to choose words that were a little trickier to pronounce, like this next word, affluent. This means having a lot of money or owning a lot of things. And you speaker of English. I I like to think that I am a competent teacher. Now, with this adjective, you may also follow it with the preposition at. You are competent at something or competent at doing something. If I were to say, he is competent at his job. For pronunciation, the stress is on that first syllable, and the final syllable has that schwa sound, that uh sound, competent. Say it with me. Competent. Competent. Excellent. And the next one that I have for you is day-to-day. So, day-to-day means happening every day as a regular part of your life or job. And I think we all have day-to-day responsibilities. If I were to talk about my own day-to-day responsibilities, I I take my little girl to school, I teach classes, I try my best to respond to as many comments as possible. So, how about you? What are some of your day-to-day responsibilities? Write to me in the comments and I'll try to respond to you.

When it comes to pronouncing this adjective, the only thing that I want to point out is the weak to. When unstressed, it's going to sound more like tuh with that schwa sound. The other thing that I would say is that t with the American accent. I told you I'm from the US. When it comes between two vowels, I'm going to pronounce it as a flat t. So, it's going to sound more like a soft d. Day-to-day. The stress is on the words day. Day-to-day. Day-to-day. Just just listen for it. the schedule of an orthopedic surgeon compare to that of a fetal surgeon? Well, it varies day-to-day. Day-to-day administrative responsibilities are to reside with the deputy officer if they don't already. I actually need written authorization from the Pentagon to be able to discuss the program with anybody who does [music] not have day-to-day clearance.

Then we have an adjective that I I think we all try to avoid and that is monotonous. So, if something is monotonous, it means not changing and therefore it's pretty boring. And I think often you would use this word to talk about tasks that you have to do routinely either at work or around the home. I could say typing numbers into a spreadsheet can be monotonous or sweeping around the home maybe monotonous. At least I think it is. When pronouncing this word, it can be a little challenging. It's a longer word, monotonous. The stress is on that second syllable and the t it's going to be a glottal t. This happens when you have the t followed by a vowel sound followed by the n sound. Words like mountain, kitten, monotonous.

And really [clears throat] it's just a glottal stop and it's almost like you're just swallowing the sound. That's the best way I can describe that glottal stop. Monotonous. Say it with me. Monotonous. Monotonous. Excellent. Then there's the word alleged. This refers to something bad or illegal and is believed to be true but not proved. And there are some common adjective noun collocations with this word. Perhaps talking about an alleged crime. And you can really talk about an alleged any criminal activity. You fill in the blank. Alleged thief, alleged drug dealer. He has been arrested for the alleged crime. So, the stress is going to be on that second syllable. But you may hear some people add an extra syllable because of the ed and they're going to say alleged and then it becomes three syllables. And I think that may be more common in the US but but let's hear both. So, you can hear the the two syllables, alleged. He is hereby absolved of all his alleged crimes. Alleged but not proven. Since blackmailing's a felony, even when you do it to alleged drug dealers. I'm an alleged killer. And now you can hear the three syllables, alleged. See if you can identify this alleged killer. I've represented mobsters like this for years. Alleged mobsters. Either one is okay. I just wanted you to be aware of this. The next adjective is fruitful and this means producing good results. So, it really has a positive connotation. Often I think this word describes an outcome that involves some sort of interaction. So, I could say my boss and I had a fruitful talk about my contract. Or there was a fruitful discussion at the meeting.

Or how would you describe the negotiation? Fruitful. Okay, it's a it's a positive word, positive connotation. It's good to learn these words. The pronunciation is pretty simple and straightforward. The stress is on that first syllable and that t in fruit it's a stop t, fruitful. Fruitful. Then we have the word conservative and this means not usually liking or trusting change, especially sudden change. And and really this word is often associated with politics so it can be emotionally charged. But but I could say that people who are older tend to be more conservative. I recently tried to talk to my parents about cryptocurrency and they they really were not interested. They don't really trust it. So, I could say in that case they they're definitely more conservative. Now, that is a non-political example but most of the time you'll hear this word relating to someone's politics, their conservative outlook referring to the way they view social or economic changes. When pronouncing this word, the stress is on that second syllable and the t I'm going to pronounce it as a flat t, conservative.

Conservative. Now, because we're talking about the word conservative, let's go to the other end of the spectrum and talk about the word liberal, which is also a C1 adjective. This means respecting and allowing many different types of beliefs or behavior. And I'll use the same example. I'll just replace the word older with younger. People who are younger tend to be more liberal. When pronouncing this word, the stress is on the first syllable and you may say it with three syllables, liberal. However, because of elision, which is when sounds get removed, that schwa sound in the middle may elide and now we're left with just two syllables, liberal. And I think often you will hear people pronounce this word with just two syllables and they'll say liberal. My mom says you're just going through a liberal phase. What? My mom says you're going through a conservative phase.

There's no such thing. Conservatives only get more conservative. Then we have the word idealistic. This means believing that very good things can be achieved often when other people just do not think that it's likely. So, this is a great adjective to describe a person and once again, let me give you some context with some news headlines. What urban planners can learn from this idealistic coffee shop. Utopia isn't just idealistic fantasy, it inspires people to change the world. This is an opinion. Are young social activists too idealistic? And do some have an overly idealistic view of internationalism? For pronunciation, there are five syllables. The stress is on the second to last syllable, idealistic. Now, to give you a syllable stress rule, when a word ends with ic, the stress is going to come on the second to last syllable. Electronic.

Strategic. Idealistic. Next is the adjective preliminary. This means coming before a more important action or event, especially introducing or preparing for it. So, think about a courtroom. You have a hearing which is a meeting that is related to the legal problem. And I could say there's going to be a preliminary hearing. You could use this with other nouns as well. Here are some examples. The preliminary hearing set for next Friday. We'll have to do some preliminary [music] evaluations. Preliminary investigation suggests that this was suicide. Michael, my preliminary calculations indicate that 15 minutes are needed to break that code. When you pronounce this word, the stress is on the second syllable, preliminary, but it's a longer word so it can be a bit challenging.

Preliminary. Preliminary. Preliminary. Excellent. And then we have the word genuine. This refers to people or emotions that are honest and sincere. So, this is another great adjective to talk about a person. Perhaps you make a mistake. You apologize. I accept your apology because you are a genuine person. And I like to think that I am a genuine person as well. But you don't always have to use this word to talk about people. Perhaps someone makes a genuine apology. And then the last thing I would say is that people may often use this with the negative not to talk about something that is not honest or not sincere. His apology was not genuine.

When pronouncing this word, it has three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable and just keep in mind that the ine at the end of the word is pronounced in, genuine. Genuine. So, let's get a little review. I hope that you did not think the lesson was monotonous and I hope you go on to watch another video lesson because it really doesn't matter whether you are in the preliminary stages of building your vocabulary or if you are highly competent when it comes to using different words and phrases. It's good to learn new words and it's good to review old ones. And really being genuine when I say this because building your vocabulary should be a part of your day-to-day routine, especially if you want to continue developing your English fluency.

So, if you enjoyed this cutting-edge vocabulary lesson and you found it fruitful and you learned something new, I'd really appreciate it if you hit that like button. I know that we covered a lot this past hour and just know that building your vocabulary takes time and I hope that you can use this lesson as a useful resource when it comes to C1 vocabulary. If you enjoyed the lesson and learned something new, please hit that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time. So long.

Advanced (C2) Nouns to Build Your Vocabulary

I think you will be in awe of the nouns that I'm going to teach you and I'm sure that you will learn something new and ah this is the first word that I want to teach you that's right this is a noun ah and it's referring to a feeling of great respect sometimes mixed with fear or surprise and often you're going to use this word in the phrase in awe of someone or in awe of something so I could say the children were in awe of their grandfather okay they had that feeling of respect or we watched in awe as the lion attacked the Buffalo so again it's like you have respect for mother nature but it's also mixed with a bit of fear and surprise when pronouncing this word it's just that vowel sound ah like you would have in the word saw and when talking about the phrase in awe of we can link that final consonant sound in N that n Sound with the vowel sound ah in awe of someone or in awe of something and as we go through the lesson I want to talk to you a little bit about the pronunciation because I tried to choose words that are a bit challenging like this next one bureaucracy so this is talking about complicated rules or processes used by an organization especially when they do not seem necessary and this noun it really does have a negative connotation and frequently you may use this when talking about larger companies governments or institutions and you may even emphasize it with a phrase like a lot of there is a lot of government bureaucracy or the company is so slow to change because there's too much bureaucracy the with all the bureaucracy in a hospital sometimes you have to bend the rules to help a patient no I didn't I didn't do it for Leslie I did it because I hate bureaucracy I'm giving you both the IPA and phonetic spelling so you can actually see how the word is pronounced and bureaucracy it has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable bureaucracy bureaucracy and all of the nouns that I'm going to teach you in this lesson they are Advanced C2 nouns and C2 this is just Cambridge's highest level and shows that you are a highly proficient speaker of English and because of that these are words that you're you're not going to probably use every day they are more specific but they're really going to help you develop your overall fluency and if you would like to continue building your vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about helping you reach your fluency goals so let's continue with our next word which is frenzy this is talking about uncontrolled and excited Behavior or emotion that may sometimes be a little violent so I could say Black Friday is a shopping frenzy it's busy it's a bit aggressive or you may hear this noun being used in The collocation Feeding Frenzy which refers to a group attacking a prey but you really could use Feeding Frenzy when referring to a situation in which people are trying to get as much of something as they possibly can your brother is creating his own media feeding use this noun in the phrase to whip someone into a frenzy and what this means is like you're causing someone to feel this way this uncontrolled emotion as the crowd that had gathered to hear Herbert love speak was whipped into a frenzy as far as pronouncing this word it's pretty simple and straightforward it just has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable frenzy but for the most part I really wanted to share with you those phrases that you can use this noun with and right now I have an announcement that may whip you into a frenzy because if you'd like to practice and improve your pronunciation then you should check out Elsa speak and I'd like to thank Elsa speak for sponsoring today's lesson this is a great pronunciation app that I actually learned about from many of you because many of you have been using Elsa speak to fine-tune your pronunciation and if you're unfamiliar with it let me show you how it works you download the app you create an account and you can see there's just so much that you can do practice daily lessons improve pronunciation let's say that you want to study by topic and there are many different topics to choose from so let's go to work and career and there are a lot of lessons to help you practice and improve but I think the coolest part is being able to practice words and phrases that you want to learn so how about we practice that sentence there is a lot of government bureaucracy and then you can listen to the pronunciation there is a lot of government bureaucracy and then practice there is a lot of government bureaucracy and let me show you what it would look like if I make a mistake and mispronounce that now there is a lot of government bureaucracy as you can see you get instant feedback which allows you to try and make adjustments and right now when you click on the link below and download the Elsa speak app you can get seven days of the pro membership for free but you can use my discount to get 85 percent off a lifetime membership or 40 percent off a something like hey I know it's cliché but time heals all wounds alright so I'm basically admitting that what I'm saying that I'm using it's cliché so there are many different sayings in English that you could say are cliché I really just want them to be happy and I know that sounds cliché and I know saying it sounds cliché sounds cliché maybe I'm being cliché I don't care I know that you're just looking at this word and thinking wait a second there are no accent marks in English well this is a word that English has borrowed from French and that's why again the spelling and the pronunciation don't really match cliché it has two syllables the stress is on that second syllable and the c-h-e with the accent mark sounds like Shea cliché the next word is Paradigm so this noun is talking about well a model of something or just a very clear and typical example of something and I thought well a good way to give you an example is just to show you some different news headlines so you can see how this word is used in context a paradigm shift EU Russia relations after the war in Ukraine are we witnessing the emergence of a new paradigm and this article goes on to talk about the the mental health system but what I really want to point out are the words that are being used with this noun these are collocations talking about a paradigm shift or a new paradigm when pronouncing this word it has three syllables the stress is on that first syllable but it's that third syllable that can be a little tricky because once again this is when the spelling and pronunciation just do not match so the third syllable has a silent G and the vowel sound it's a long

I sound not a short vowel sound Paradigm Paradigm but our society has undergone a paradigm shift and the information age Sheldon you and I are the alpha males let's just keep the momentum going with our next word which is momentum so this is talking about the force that moves an object or an event developing or making progress so if we're talking about the force that moves an object think of we'll physics as the car goes downhill it gains momentum if we're talking about an event developing or making progress well then you could think of a competition the home team lost momentum when their star player got injured and and once again I want to point out those collocations those words that are used with this noun to gain momentum or to lose momentum the word has three syllables the stress is on that second syllable momentum now one thing I'll say and this is really about the American accent sometimes when the T follows an n Sound it may allide and it gets removed and this happens with words like internet or Center so if you're in the United States you may hear somebody drop that t and it's going to sound like momentum so I figure we start out local just to get our momentum going now again this is specific to the US and I'm only telling you this because that's where I'm from but in general you can't go wrong pronounce announcing that t momentum why are you taking so long between fireworks I'm building momentum man then we have morale which is a great noun to know it's talking about the amount of confidence felt by a person or group of people especially when in a difficult or dangerous situation and once again there are a lot of great collocations with this noun so you could use them with certain adjectives like high morale or low morale or employee morale or you could use them with uh some different verbs as well to raise morale to boost morale to bring up morale I really hope that these video lessons boost your morale and just make you want to continue learning I think I should don't you absolutely so show Force boost morale trying to keep morale High just trying to raise morale the pronunciation can be a little tricky just know that the stress is on that second syllable morale and don't be fooled by that e at the end it's not a long vowel sound but a short vowel sound morale then there's withdrawal and this just means we'll taking money out of the bank and there is a common verb noun collocation to make a withdrawal I need to make a withdrawal can I make a withdrawal and really I chose this word because of the difficulty with the pronunciation because I've had many Learners tell me that they really have trouble pronouncing this word it has three syllables the stress is on that second syllable that draw but it's that third syllable that I think people have trouble with that dark l so you're going to stress that second syllable and move right into that dark L which is has that all sound withdrawal draw wool withdrawal just keep practicing give it a try say it a few times and I think you'll start to feel a little more comfortable saying it the next noun is deterrent and this is something that stops people doing something because they're afraid of what may happen and you may use this noun in the phrase and say that something acts as a deterrent to something else like the teacher's strict punishments act as a deterrent to cheat it and there are also some useful adjective noun collocations saying that well something is a strong deterrent or talking about a nuclear deterrent or an effective deterrent this word has three syllables the stress is on that second syllable deterrent now one thing I want to quickly point out and this also has to do with the American accent and that is the flap t a flap T is going to sound like a soft D in Americans we love the flap T often this occurs when the t comes between two vowels like water now the T in deterrent it also comes between two vowels but we are not going to say this with a flat T and this is because the t comes at the beginning of a stressed syllable so when the t comes at the beginning of a stress syllable then you're going to say it as a true T and not a flap T and that is why you would pronounce this and say deterrent just thought you should know how will the Umbrella Academy ever become an effective crime deterrent because I'm your nuclear deterrent it's working we're safe ambiguity I like this noun

it's talking about something that may have more than one meaning and can therefore cause some confusion and you may also use this word as an adjective it's quite common ambiguous but we're talking about nouns so let's use it as a noun and I could say there is ambiguity in the new law in this case I'm saying that the law you know may have different meanings or perhaps I tell you hey be specific so there's no ambiguity all right I want things to be very specific and clear so there's no ambiguity all right time for Fast and the Furious one through seven this is a 14 hour meditation on the importance of family fast cars product placement racial ambiguity and family the word has five syllables and if you want to learn something about syllable stress when the word ends in i t y the stress is going to be on the third to last syllable that you ambiguity ambiguity the next noun is this one right here diarrhea and this is an illness in which your waist is not solid but liquid and I really don't think I need to go into great detail explaining the meaning of this noun I think there is no ambiguity with what I'm trying to tell you I think this is a word you have probably heard of before you probably know it already but the reason why I'm including it in this lesson is really because of the spelling and even in the UK there's a different spelling and I think a lot of native English speakers probably could not spell this word it is one that you're probably going to use more in spoken English but I think it's important because it it has to do with your health if you go to see the doctor this is a word that you may read if you're in the doctor's office or perhaps you may even need to write it down if you're trying to write some of your symptoms so it's important to to keep in mind the spelling and try to remember how this word is spelled for pronunciation the word has four syllables the stress is on that third syllable diarrhea but really I just wanted to highlight the spelling of this word and then there's whereabouts this is just talking about the place where someone or something is and often you would use this talking about someone's whereabouts the police don't know the criminal's whereabouts or or perhaps uh I could say we're unsure of her exact whereabouts that is a collocation with this noun you may hear people use this in a question like whereabouts in the U. S are you from this is a question that I sometimes get and I tell people well I grew up in the South but there are quite a few different places all over the country where I have lived and this is also a C2 word and I use the word also because when you're using it in a question like this it's not a noun it's an adverb but we're we're talking about nouns and in this case you're often going to be talking about someone's whereabouts we need his whereabouts I'm Norton the pronunciation it's pretty straightforward there are three syllables the stress is on that first syllable whereabouts let's try and do a little bit of review I hope that I was able to avoid any ambiguity when explaining the meaning of these different nouns and you know now that you probably feel good about building your vocabulary I hope that you can use that positive momentum to go ahead and watch another video Lesson because I try to make these lessons easy to follow and understand because I think that's what's really going to help boost your morale and even if you find a word confusing and you don't completely understand it please don't let that be a deterrent when it comes to building your vocabulary and just trying to learn new words and you can let me know your whereabouts down in the comments I was just trying to use some of these nouns get a little review and use them in context all I really hope is that you learn something new if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced (C2) Nouns to SUPERCHARGE Your Vocabulary

let's learn some Advanced C2 nouns to help you supercharge your vocabulary and be a little more precise when you're having a conversation now building your vocabulary it's not always easy it requires a lot of time and perseverance and I want to start with that noun that I just mentioned perseverance this refers to a continued effort to do or achieve something even when it is difficult or takes a long time and this has a POS positive connotation it's a good thing often you may use this when talking about things that are hard to do as you know learning a language takes a lot of time and energy and you need perseverance I said creative writing is hard oh yeah yeah a perseverance Steve it's all about perseverance for pronunciation this word has four syllables and the stress is on that third syllable perseverance and the second and fourth syllable have that unstressed schwa W sound sounds like uh perseverance and it's good to practice these words because sometimes people tend to avoid these longer words because they're a bit more difficult to pronounce perseverance and if you are someone who likes to learn new words and phrases please subscribe to the channel it shows perseverance and that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and as we go through the lesson I'm going to tell you the meaning of each word I'll talk a little bit about how it's used in context and I'll go over the pronunciation so you can say them just like a native speaker and the next noun that I have for you is one that I really like and that is workaholic this noun refers to a person who works a lot and actually finds it difficult not to work and you may be able to relate to this noun I I don't really think that I'm a workaholic even though sometimes I feel like I work a little too much and I'm constantly thinking about new lessons but what I really wanted to point out with this word is that suffix the h o l i c at the end of the word because this suffix means that you are addicted to something I'm sure that you may be familiar with the word alcoholic in this case a workaholic it's like your saying that someone is addicted to work and this is a fun way to play around with the language because maybe you like to go shopping are you a Shopaholic do you read a lot maybe you're a bookaholic I drink a lot of milk so someone might say I'm a milkaholic but let's not forget the reason why we're talking about this suffix is for all of you who love to work you may be a workaholic this is your wedding weekend I'm marrying a real workaholic you do know that yeah but isn't that what you want in a partner homie workaholic is probably your best aholic ever but you need to relax the pronunciation it's not too difficult there are four syllables and the stress is on that third syllable workaholic but let me let you in on a little secret it's a syllable stress rule because when a word ends in I see the stress is often going to be on the second to last syllable it's a good little rule to keep in mind so that you can easily pronounce words like workaholic now when it comes to practicing English I'm confident that you demonstrate perseverance perhaps you're a workaholic and that's why I want to take a quick moment to tell you about Elsa speak which is a great app for practicing and improving your skills and they're also the sponsor of today's lesson with this useful app you can fine-tune your pronunciation and practice speaking and I want to show you some of the amazing features when you join Elsa premium because now you can have a full-on conversation using their AI feature welcome to Elsa AI please select one of the following role plays and you can even create your own scenario I want to have a conversation with a colleague at work about an important presentation that I'm supposed to give and I'm feeling a little nervous

let's continue with more advanced C2 nouns and the next word that I have for you is hierarchy this is a system or organization in which people or things are arranged according to importance and this is a word that we can actually visualize using a chart so think about a company it has a hierarchy who's at the top the most important position well that would be the CEO and then according to this chart below the CEO we have the marketing manager and the IT manager and then there are people below them so this is a chart detailing the company's hierarchy to give you a better idea as to how this word is used in context

let's look at some news headlines is organizational hierarchy getting in the way of innovation support for legacy admissions is rooted in racial hierarchy maso's hierarchy of needs examples and explanation and his hierarchy of needs describes different levels of The Human Experience it's very interesting stuff but you know what else is interesting that's the pronunciation of this noun because it's another long word hierarchy there are four syllables the stress is on that first syllable and the second syllable you do hear that schah sound hierarchy it's a little easier when we slow it down hierarchy and then we can speed it up say it with me hierarchy excellent the next word bias this is when you support or oppose someone or something in an unfair way because you are influenced by your personal opinions and there are some useful collocations with this noun you could have a bias towards or against someone or something and then there are some adjective noun collocations like having a strong bias or an unconscious bias stereotypes that you're unaware of or you may hear somebody talk about confirmation bias when you seek out information to support the views you already have I'm getting a little tired of this bias against the leaders of our industry I thought I had an awareness to issues ways of living unconscious bias like all of it and your country owes you a debt of gratitude Dr Ryan but even you can agree that a confirmation bias is a dangerous thing when pronouncing this word it's pretty simple and straightforward there are two syllables the stress is on that first syllable bias then we have the word scrutiny this is the careful and detailed examination of something in order to get more information about it and there's a useful phrase which is to come under scrutiny and then you can use this phrase with some common adjective noun collocations and say that something comes under close scrutiny or it comes under intense scrutiny or additional scrutiny or constant scrutiny there are quite a few collocations with this noun and they're all great to know for pronunciation the stress is on the first syllable scrutiny but I want to take a moment to talk to you about the glal Tea versus a true tea because if you listen to some online dictionaries you may hear this scrutiny and you hear the true te but I'm from the US and with the American accent when the t is followed by an n Sound people may pronounce it with a gladle t and the the sound comes from the throat your vocal cords are closing and that's stopping the flow of air so when you hear me say words like Mountain certain scrutiny you hear that glottal te scrutiny just listen for it now dutton's office is under intense scrutiny for its use of force in multiple gun battles if your customers come under scrutiny abalonia your business comes under scrutiny the next word is concession this is when something is allowed or given up in order to end a dis disagreement so if we disagree on something and we need to come to a compromise you may make a concession and I may also have to make a concession and that is a common cocation with this noun to make a concession I understand that you like things a certain way and I'm willing to make some concessions but you have to be open to compromise she's right that's reasonable but surely those rules changed the moment they invited television into the coronation that was they're right and a huge concession to what popular interest I am aware that I will have to make some concessions concessions yes concessions when pronouncing this noun there are three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable concession and another syllable stress rule for you is that when a word ends in s IO n the stress is going to come on the syllable before it so that second to last syllable concession another good rule to keep keep in mind next is the noun remorse this is a feeling of sadness and being sorry for something you have done and there are some useful phrases with this noun to feel remorse for something or to feel no remorse for something or to be filled with remorse so let me show you some examples some funny memes when someone might feel remorse so you might feel remorse when those were the droids you were looking for you might feel remorse when you feel guilty for not studying and you are still not studying you might feel remorse when you buy a new phone just before they announce an upgraded model when pronouncing this noun there are two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable

now it's a little Antiquated but you may still hear it from time to time and if someone's a snob it's like they just feel they're better than other people your family would never forgive you maybe not they're snobs they're such snobs your understanding of politics is limited to who won the election on Sesame Street can you believe a snob it also refers to a person who has extremely high standards and is not satisfied with things that ordinary people like and you may hear this noun being used with an adjective when talking about food or drink but not always and it does still have a negative connotation and even though you could use it playfully if you say that someone is a coffee snob or a wine snob or a pizza snob or even an art snob for this person it must be the finest quality and then you could say that they are a snob wow lattes yeah have a bit of a coffee snob now the key to a perfect latte is in the temperature of the steamed milk I'm going to unveil The Duchess and watch every art World snob in town drool all over her for pronunciation it's pretty simple and straightforward just the one syllable snob try not to be a snob unless you are an English lesson snob and you only want the highest quality lessons then yeah you're in the right place then we have the word Exile this refers to someone who has to leave their home country and go live in another country often for political reasons and there are some useful phrases with the this noun you could say someone goes into Exile or someone is in Exile after the overthrow of the government the former president went into Exile or currently the deposed leaders are living in Exile in the neighboring country to go into Exile or to be in Exile into Exile I must go failed I have do you know the meaning of d wart refugee driven from my home in Exile one who could reclaim the Throne of Gondor he turned from that path along time ago he has chosen Exile this noun has two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable Exile I will never make you leave this Channel and go into Exile in fact I want the opposite I want I want you to stay I want to keep you here then we have the word narrative this is a word that I think is becoming more commonly used it refers to a story or a particular way of explaining or understanding events but let's talk about how this word is used because even though it's basically a synonym for the word story it's not really used interchangeably I I could say my friend likes to read love stories I'm not really going to say my friend likes to read love narratives these days this word is used when talking about the story or the events that they would like others to believe and that is their narrative let me give you the interactive English narrative so I think that this is the best channel to build your vocabulary and reach your fluency goals I I say that in practically every lesson that is the narrative that I would like you to believe let me show you some more news headlines so you can see how this word is used in context new January 6 videos praised by Republicans narrative has crumbled Notre Dame offense still has time to change the narrative and stocks holding majority of recent gains fuels bullish narrative for pronunciation there are three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable narrative now when you hear me say the word I am going to pronounce that final t as a flap T it's going to sound like a soft D this is common with the American accent when the t comes between two vowel sounds narrative you hear that that sof e narrative then we have the word xenophobia this refers to an extreme dislike or fear of foreigners their Customs their Traditions their religion and it's a word that may often be used as an adjective as well xenophobic but with this word I want to highlight another suffix this time phobia it it comes from the Greek word phobus meaning fear so whenever you see or hear phobia at the end of a word you know it's referring to the fear of something Arachnophobia is the fear of spiders claustrophobia is the fear of being confined in a small space glossophobia is the fear of public speaking and this is one that I didn't know before this lesson so I'm learning new words each and every day so there are many different words describing different fears using phobia but the noun that I want you to remember is xenophobia and when pronouncing this noun it can be a little challenging it's a longer word and the spelling and the pronunciation don't really match up the word has five syllables and the stress is on the third syllable xenophobia now there are two accepted pronunciations for this noun you could say xenophobia like I've been saying or xenophobia either one is okay both are accepted the only difference is that short e or long e in the first syllable xenophobia versus xenophobia the other thing I want you to keep in mind is of course that X at the beginning of the noun it has a z sound xenophobia then we have the word influx this means the arrival of a lot of people or things at the same time and often you're going to follow this noun with the preposition of an influx of something the T Town experienced an influx of tourists this summer or the business needs an influx of money or it may not survive when pronouncing this word there are two syllables the stress is on that first syllable but one thing I want to say is that this noun will generally follow an article either the or an and if we have the phrase an influx of then linking may occur and linking is when we connect the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word so it's going to sound like an influx of an influx of just listen for it Wendy has identified a casino and hotel in Northwest Missouri that needs

that's the narrative that I am trying to tell so I should really wrap things up and get going but don't worry I I'm not going to go into Exile I will be back soon with another lesson what can I say I'm a workaholic but if you enjoy this lesson and learn something new please hit that like button Button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced (C2) Phrasal Verbs to Sound Fluent | Speak Smarter, Not Harder

Let's learn some advanced C2 phrasal verbs. And I think these are incredibly useful phrases because we use them quite often in casual conversation even though they are, you know, a little more advanced, a little more specific, and they are all at a C2 level. And one thing that I want to make clear right away is that if you want to get these lesson notes, click on the link down below in the description. Join my community. If you're already a part of it, check your inbox. I have sent them to you. Might as well go ahead and introduce myself while I'm at it. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. And this channel, it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. So, I'd also appreciate if you subscribe, hit the like button, all of that good stuff.

Now, this is a quiz lesson. In case this is your first time participating in one of these lessons, in which I want you to write your answers in the chat, in the comments. I don't It doesn't matter when you're watching this. I want you to participate in the lesson. So, I've given you a sentence, and there is a missing phrasal verb, of course. And I'm also giving you the meaning down below to try to help you, to lead you to the correct answer. Some of these I think are going to be a little easier than others. It really depends on the phrasal verb. But, uh I I again, I I hope that you're familiar with some of them already. And if some of them are new, that's great.

I'll try to provide a little more nuance as we go through this. The local community mm the politician's office mm complaints. So, we're going to use this phrasal verb that means to receive many of something that is difficult to deal with them all. In this situation, there are many complaints probably from the constituents. They're calling into the politician's office and the local community and they mhm the politician's office complaints. I almost said I almost said the particle that follows the the verb. Maybe you you caught it for a moment there. I was thinking about giving you part of the phrasal verb, but I I decided let's just I'm just going to keep them all blank, make it a little more challenging.

So, what phrasal verb means like you're receiving something that is difficult to deal with them all and would fit this context. Now, I'll be honest. Sometimes there's more than one phrasal verb that you can use, and as we get some uh different answers and go through this, then I'll I'll let you know. what do you think? Um we're talking about flood with. To flood with complaints, to flood with inquiries. When you When you would really say something um you flooded someplace with something, like in our example, the community flooded the politician's office with complaints. There were so many of them that they didn't know what to do. They couldn't deal with it. Now, somebody mentioned overwhelmed. It really it it kind of in this context it means the same thing.

But instead of saying they overwhelmed the office with complaints, they flooded the the office with complaints, and that tells me that there were a large number of complaints. There to give you a little nuance, uh I'm putting be flooded with because often you are going to use this uh in the passive voice. So, to give you some examples, I mean I I could say um uh you know, in the in our example, the politician's office was flooded with complaints. Uh I could say the you know, in in before I I was using it in the active, but I did want to point out that a lot of it is used in the passive, like to be flooded with something. Uh here are some other examples. After the advertisement aired, the company was flooded with inquiries. The help desk was flooded with emails following the server crash. So, that's not always the case because again, I've given you an example using the active, the local community flooded the politician's office with complaints, but more often, I feel like this might be a sentence you'd come across. The politician's office was flooded with complaints using it in in the passive, mostly because you want to direct it attention to the object, in this case like the politician's office or the advertisement that was aired or the help desk, and then you're going on to say what happened. So, the next question, I think again, good some good answers in there. People uh knew that one, flooded with. It's great phrasal verb to know. The police have mm foul play in the investigation.

So, I'm giving you actually two meanings down here. The meaning of the phrasal verb is to decide something is impossible um or to exclude it from consideration. Like look, yeah, we don't need to consider this anymore. We can mm hit I I almost Again, I don't want to say it. I was about to. The other thing, because of the context of this sentence, I in case you're unfamiliar with foul play, I think that's another useful phrase to know. If you are someone who reads articles about crime, you watch TV shows or movies related to crime uh or police investigations, foul play just refers to the criminal act that results in serious damage. I think most of the time people might use it when talking about uh a murder a case and you're trying to figure out, well, who is the murderer, but we can we don't have to consider this suspect right here, and then you can use this phrasal verb. You could decide that look, that's impossible. We don't need to do it.

Great great job identifying it to rule something out. To rule out means you're going to decide that something is impossible or to exclude it from consideration. You can use it in other situations as well, even at home. If somebody does something like well, wait, was it this person? No, we can rule that out. Like they you know, this person left. But I think often you're going to hear you're going to use it in this context of law enforcement or the courtroom, and you might rule something out and say we don't need to consider it anymore. I don't know why I thought this was funny. But I just did, so I I thought that picture looked ridiculous. This was a meme. Since hair can't be preserved in fossils, we can't rule out the possibility that dinosaurs look like this.

Now, this is just a meme. It's just supposed to be funny. If if a T-Rex [laughter] had these ponytails right here, I don't think it would look as scary or ferocious. But if you rule something out, then you're not you don't need to consider it anymore because it's impossible. It's ridiculous. Let's rule that out. Here is the next one. They were best friends in school. But they over the years.

Now, I I think you all seem to be I think pretty in tune with these phrasal verbs, which is good. They These are all at a C2 level because maybe typically when I do some of these lessons, people are like, "Wait, that's not that advanced. I know that." But that's good. If you know it, then you should be proud that you're familiar with this vocabulary because it is at a C2 level. It's not one of these phrases that you will never come across or never use. over the years. And they gradually become less friendly or close to someone. That is the meaning of this phrasal verb. So, I have a Well, one one thing they're close close. Now, [laughter] I'll tell you what I'm going to I wouldn't say you wouldn't say drift away.

You're getting close. Now, you could say I I feel like grew apart. That would work as well. That is not the phrasal verb that we're talking about, even though you could say people grew apart, and that is perfectly fine. The one that I'm talking about, we can combine part of it with drift, and it is drift apart. If somebody drifts apart, then basically the relationship is uh you know, they're just not as close. And they gradually become less friendly. They were friends in school, but they drifted apart over the years. One distinction that I would make if we're talking about grew apart, drift apart, because you could use grew apart in this context, I think you could also use grew apart like people they just no longer share the same interest. And in that case, you could have like a couple like a spouse, and they you grow apart over the years, and you like different things. Whereas people drift apart, it does make me think of communication and that they are you're communicating less frequently than you did before when people drift apart and they just you just don't come into contact. Whereas I feel like when people grow apart, maybe it's more about their their interest, the things they like to do, and not necessarily because of well, distance or just lack of communication. So just wanted to add that slight nuance even though I think grow apart would they would work it would work in this context as far as happening over the years. To give you well, the the other nuance that I wanted to add as far as specifically with drift apart, it is like an unintentional thing. So it's not like whereas again, going back to grow apart, maybe there were arguments and people just started to grow apart, but in this case, it's just something that happens. You no longer see this person anymore, you start to drift apart or people move on, you get a different job, you move away and it just happens. And there are some common adverb phrasal verb time expressions that we can use. So I'm going to you can mix and match some of these, but to slowly drift apart over the years. And we have slowly plus drift apart and then our time expression or to gradually drift apart over time or naturally drift apart as we grow up. To eventually drift apart after college, a specific thing, an event or to inevitably drift apart after the marriage. If somebody I I don't want to say in that context that the two people got married, but maybe one of your friends gets married and then oh, you drifted apart after this person got married and then, you You they're hanging out with other couples and you're still doing your own thing. Doesn't matter. So, like I said, you can mix and match some of those. You can naturally drift apart over the years or gradually drift apart as we grew up.

I just wanted to point out some of these common phrases that you may hear with this phrasal verb to drift apart. You need to mm and enjoy the party. I feel like some people I don't I I don't know. Some people have said this to me before. Sometimes, you know, sometimes I like going to parties, other times I'm just like, "Eh, you know, maybe I'm not in the mood or I'm not

I'm just not feeling it. Got too much on my mind, and I seem stressed. Maybe I'm not very open, even though maybe I seem a little open in these videos." It cuz the meaning of this phrasal verb is to become less stressed, reserved, informal. And somebody, in that case, if I am acting that way, somebody would say, "Look, you need to mm and enjoy the party." So, again, there are different phrasal verbs you could use. I guess open up um

I don't know if I would use it in this context. Like, you could tell somebody open up like, "Look, you know, kind of uh uh you know, speak to people, socialize, you know, be honest." But, I feel like uh when you're trying to tell somebody to relax, I You could say chill out, but chill out would make me think that the person is acting like they're a little too in your face, a little too energized, a little too much here and there, and you're like, "Look, you got to Look, just chill out. Just chill out." But, if somebody is very tense, and they're very stressed, and they're not relaxed, you may tell this person to again, I like some of these work.

You know, lighten up, chill out, mellow out. The the phrasal verb that I was like to loosen up. And I feel like in this context of at a party or an event and you want to tell somebody to relax, you would tell them to loosen up. I'm sure you've watched a TV show or movie and you've seen this situation and somebody say, "Look, just loosen up. Go have a drink and just loosen up." All right, you need to relax, you need to somebody mentioned unwind, but of course that's not a phrasal verb, but you could use you would use this in that context if somebody seems a little stressed, they are not really, you know, somebody's kind of acting like a stick-in-the-mud, which is a nice noun phrase, informal noun that somebody is trying to avoid having fun and you're trying to say, "Look, just loosen up.

Loosen up and enjoy the party." So, there are some other words, phrasal verbs that I think you all put in there that I think would work, but the one that I wanted to highlight was loosen up. I I don't know if these quotes, some of them I think are are BS and these are just like little memes, but it doesn't really matter. I did I did like the the idea. It says, "Loosen up a bit. Loosen up a bit, laugh more, get involved with people around you, do simple things. If you only do important things, you will become dead serious." And that's another time I think if somebody's being very serious and you want to tell them, "Look, you don't need to be so serious. Just loosen up." All right, just relax. Loosen up a little bit.

Here is the next uh the next well, question and the next missing phrasal verb. Do you want to give a quick shoutout to all the the members that I see? Cindy, Lolly, Vicky, Gustav. Thank you so much for joining me today. Great to see. Welcome to some new members as well. Dato, Jar, Omara, Shakeel. Excellent. Thank you guys for participating, being part of the Interactive English community. It finally mhm me when she had been acting or why she had been acting so strangely. I think uh maybe I I think this one maybe a little easier. You suddenly realize or understand something and you could say that it what? I I think uh you'd probably know this phrase, you've heard of it. Still, it is at a C2 level and I think it is a useful one to add to your vocabulary if you're unfamiliar with it because they're you're having a conversation, you're talking about a situation and you you're going to you may find yourself at some point in this context when you say, "Oh, I suddenly realized this something or it finally mhm." And you may often use it with finally. And the answer, which I see many of you saying, is dawned on. To dawn on someone. It finally dawned on me why she had been acting so strangely. If something dawns on you and then you suddenly realize it. Um and I just to go back here really quickly, I feel like that is a common collocation and I think a lot of times you may use it end up using it more in the past. Something dawned on you and you realize it later on and you're talking about it. Oh, like oh, it eventually dawned on me that something happened or it finally dawned on me that this thing occurred. Just wanted to point that out.

Here is the next question. I know she was late, but you can't mhm that mhm. Given uh get uh Wait, wait. Maybe I I misread that. Let me start over. I know she was late, but you can't mhm that mhm her given the traffic. So, this it is a phrasal verb, but it's also it is also a bit of like an expression uh because we're going to use a specific pattern. And the meaning is to allow something someone has done in the past affect your opinion of them now. So, somebody was they did something in the past or they they were behaving in some way and you are not going to dismiss it.

You're not going to let it go. You could say it's going to influence the way that you view this person right now because of what happened. And you are going to what? All right? And in this case we're saying, "Okay, somebody was late cuz of the traffic." And they're saying, "Look, that that's the reason why." And you're saying, "Look, well, then you can't mhm that mhm her." That's kind of the the form. It is it is similar, not necessarily blame, even though that is a a little um kind of similar to what I'm I'm trying to get at here, but it's not necessarily blaming uh as far as it it being like somebody's fault, but you're basically saying, "Look, don't let this it shouldn't influence like you shouldn't be upset that this person's late because of the traffic." And you should understand. Obviously, you're not going to blame this person um if there was a Okay, so I'm not We're not

I'm not talking about blame. Uh like you're blaming that on her. Even though that kind of fits it in here, but I want to highlight this other expression in case it is new.

Because it is like a phrasal verb, but I feel like it's a specific pattern. Thank you for the hearts. See those in there. Don't worry. I catch all of it. And that is to hold something against someone. So, the phrasal verb is to hold against, but this is really like the the pattern that you will use with this phrasal verb. To hold something against someone. You're allowing like something that's happened, in this case the person was late, uh to affect your opinion about them now. Like whether you're going to be upset with her or something. So, it's not necessarily about blaming as in like this is your fault. It's more about influencing someone's opinion.

So, maybe you make a mistake and I say, "Look, I'm not going to hold that against you." All right? I'm not going to let me have an unfavorable opinion about you because of this thing. I'm not going to hold that against you. So, we could say, "I know she was late, but you can't hold that against her given the traffic." All right? So, again, not not directly interchangeable with to uh you know, blame somebody for for something. Uh and if this is new, again, that's great. It is another C2 phrase. They decided to mm their work differences to work on the project. Let me read that again. There was that awkward pause in there. They decided to mm their differences to work on the project.

So, I There are probably some other phrases that you could fit in there that would work, but keep in mind the meaning right here. You to ignore or forget something, like a disagreement, for a particular purpose. So, let's say that there is a disagreement, an argument, a fight, just something that's that's negative. And that is when you may use this. And often you that's a common collocation. Phrasal verb, their differences.

Let's mm our differences. And we're going to work together. That is a a collocation that you would use with this phrasal verb. And I see something like You could I mean you could iron out your differences, but ironing out something would mean more you're solving it. In this case, you're not really solving the problem. You're just again, you're ignoring it. And in that case, excellent um yeah. Lolly, Cindy Juliet, we're going to put it aside. Let's put aside our differences. In that case, we're going to ignore it temporarily while we work together. And they decided to put aside their differences to work on the project. So, it's not about resolving some disagreement or conflict. It's really just let's forget about it temporarily because we need to work or function together in some way. We need to put aside our differences.

So, just to point out to put aside something this that C2 meaning is to ignore something like a disagreement for a particular purpose. They decide to put aside their differences to work on the project or you must put aside your fears if you want to succeed. To put something aside because it does have multiple meanings and that's what I wanted to get up. But this is a B2 meaning is when you save something, typically time or money for a purposes for a for a specific specific or special purpose. She puts aside a little money every month for a deposit on a home. Or I try to put a put some time aside every evening uh to read to the kids.

Phrasal verb has multiple meanings. One C2, B2. Just wanted to give you both of them, even though you may be familiar, uh, with it. If you're going to put aside time or put aside money, or in this case, when you put aside your differences, great phrase, then you're just going to ignore some problem temporarily. I hope we don't I hope we don't have to, mhm, legal action to resolve this. The meaning is to do something unpleasant because no other option is available. And I hopefully based on the sentence, you can kind of guess and figure it out what the the phrasal verb that I'm talking about. We hope to We hope we don't have to, mhm, legal action to resolve this. And you're doing something unpleasant.

There are no other options. Which phrasal verb fits this sentence? And I I think you could use it. Basically, I feel like you're going to use it with something that's not positive. It's a a bit negative. And we're talking about legal action. Nobody nobody wants to get sued uh, or have to go to court. And then you could say, "I hope I hope we don't have to resort to legal action." Resort to something. You do something unpleasant because there are no other options. I hope we don't have to resort to legal action to resolve this. There are other collocations, and I just want to add that nuance, the sense of desperation.

When you resort to something, it is like that last-ditch effort. So, you resort to legal action or resort to litigation, resort to violence. That is another common collocation with this. I hope things don't resort to violence. Resort to force or resort to extreme measures. And we can use that phrasal verb. I'm sorry to mhm but I have a quick question. This means to to interrupt or join a conversation or activity when the other people don't want you to.

Now, you could use it like in a this like apology. Look, I'm sorry to mhm. Now, the phrasal verb it it has this meaning, but it is like a little more aggressive. Of course, I feel like if somebody wanted to be polite, they might say, "Look, I'm sorry to interrupt." All right? This is more of an aggressive interruption or especially an unwanted interruption. So, I might tell somebody instead of saying, "Look, don't interrupt." and you're trying to join this conversation, I could say, "Look, don't what?" It is rather informal, but a phrasal verb. And one that maybe you've heard of to give you another context, people might use this when dancing. And there's a couple dancing, and maybe I want to dance with her, and I'm going to walk up and say, "Look, may I what?" Actually, that's another. It's a You could say You could use either one, but now uh I'll I'll clarify in just a moment. So, the phrasal verb, in case you're wondering, is to butt in. All right? You're interrupting or joining a conversation or activity when, you know, people don't want to.

And that's like it has that little bit of a negative connotation. You want to be polite, I'm sorry to interrupt. But if you want to be look If you know that you're really, you know, doing this, then you could say, "Look, I'm sorry to butt in. This is an emergency, and I have to butt in." Now, I mentioned that you could do this when talking about dancing. You could say butt in or cut in. Uh would either one would work in that situation. But if somebody butts in, then they're interrupting in like a bit more of an aggressive way. Everyone mhm to help clean up after the event. To voluntarily contribute money, time, or effort toward a shared goal.

So, everybody is going to do what? There are actually there there are two different phrasal verbs that I think would work in this context. I well, I just randomly chose one, but there are a couple of them that that really have this same meaning. Everyone mhm to help clean up the event. You're voluntarily contributing something, generally like money, time, or effort um to do something. So, the phrasal verb that we're referring to. Any guesses? No? I think maybe the Okay, there it is. Now the the chat's catching up. Yes. So, you guys got it. Excellent. Well, talking about chip in. The other one that I was thinking of, pitch in.

Especially if we're talking about effort, like we all need to pitch in. We all need to to do something, but you could use pitch in in this context, but chip in is the one that I wanted to highlight, especially because you can use it when talking about money. We everyone chipped in to help clean up after the event. But, if we're talking about money, and because again, I like sharing these ridiculous memes with you, the groundhog is currently taking bribes. Everyone chip in. Everyone chip in in order to bribe this groundhog. And just so you know, I know Groundhog Day is past for those of you who may or may not know Punxsutawney Phil in Pennsylvania, I guess he saw a shadow, there're going to be six more weeks of winter. Supposedly. So, in this maybe maybe nobody chipped in to bribe Punxsutawney Phil.

Many people change after they mhm a lot of money. To suddenly receive money or property, especially by inheriting it. So, what are we going to what are we going to Many people change after they mhm a lot of money. And it has this meaning. So, that it is a common collocation to use this phrasal verb with money. To mhm money. I don't think I don't know if that helps you at all as far as piecing it together, the phrasal verb that you should use. But, many people change after they come into a lot of money. If somebody comes into a lot of money or comes into money, then they receive money or property, especially by inheriting it, but not always. You could come into money if you win money. Maybe you win the lottery or something else happens and you just suddenly come into um a lot of money.

We mhm a charming little cafe in the backstreets of Vienna. That is a real picture right there. You're To find something by accident. Which phrasal verb could we use? So, there's a the the verb I I do want to highlight, the particle that follows, there's actually several that you could use. And I'll tell you which one I would come to my mind as far as this goes. We mhm a charming little cafe in the backstreets of Vienna. We found it suddenly by accident. And in that case, you could say that you stumbled upon something. So, you could say stumble across, stumble upon, stumble on. All of them work. I don't know why personally I'd probably just uh I probably would use stumble upon um even though I'm giving you stumble across in the example. We stumbled across a charming little cafe in the backstreets of Vienna and you could use again any of those particles across upon on here are a little nuance again just

it is really unexpected maybe even lucky. Some common collocations items you might stumble across a book letter photo information stumble stumble on the truth. A place stumble upon a shop a village a cafe or people stumble across someone or a person. Now I say someone a person or even a stranger. I don't know if you would use it with a friend because it might not be as unexpected or sudden. So that's why I was saying like you stumbled across someone who you know knew a friend from a long time ago or knows one of your relatives. It's hard to it's hard to imagine what they during the war. To experience a difficult or dangerous situation and survive it.

What do you think? So if you are experiencing this dangerous or difficult situation and I keep it's hard to keep myself from saying the answer. It's hard to imagine what they during the war. And I think you've familiar with this you could say You could say what they went through as far as what somebody experienced that's not the one that's not the verb that I was going for in this case I'm talking about well it's hard to imagine what they lived through. Live through you experience a difficult dangerous situation. It's hard to imagine what they lived through during the war. To everybody's point cuz I see everybody putting went through to go through something it also means you're you're you're experiencing something, so that would work. Uh it's hard to imagine what they went through during the war. That that would work as well.

One more. As the situation escalated, the police decided to mhm to avoid a riot. What do you think? They they stopped being aggressive, intrusive, annoying, and they did what? So, uh feel like annoyingly, this is not what is happening, at least in the US. I think they need to They need to do this. Um I think it would be much better if uh if ICE were to do this, and they stopped being aggressive, intrusive, or annoying, and in that case I you could say back down, um which which would work, but I in this case, I'm talking about backing off. Uh back down, back off, very similar, but if you say, look, they're you're going to back off, they're going to stop being aggressive, intrusive, or annoying, and somebody is going to back off, like this bear right here. The other one says, "Back off.

I know karate." He does. That one bear does look like a uh you know his karate. So, here are all the phrasal verbs that we talked about. Uh again, these are all at a C2 level. Hopefully, some of them are new for you. Try to listen for them. Think about the context that we use them in. Tried to give you a little slight nuance as we went through this, but if you enjoyed the lesson, you can let me know by hitting that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching, and I will see you next time. So long.

LESSON 155 OF 749

Advanced (C2) Phrases to Build Your Vocabulary

let's learn some advanced c2 phrases to help you build your vocabulary and c2 is just cambridge's highest level qualification and is really just proof that you are a highly competent speaker and i am going to teach you some advanced phrases that i think are common and i'm going to tell you the meaning talk a little bit about how these phrases are used and i'm also going to teach you how to correctly pronounce these phrases because if you're going to use them you want to make sure that you are saying them correctly and if you enjoy building your vocabulary please subscribe turn on notifications that way i can become your teacher my name is wes the channel is interactive english it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals so let's begin with our first phrase which is clear the air so to clear the air means to remove the bad feelings between people and you might use this if you have a couple of friends who are unhappy with each other or maybe some family members and there are just some bad feelings and then someone else the person who wants to get those feelings removed that's the person who's going to use this phrase so if i have a couple of friends that have been arguing and there are some bad feelings and i am the one who wants them to make up then i might tell them you know it's time to clear the air we really need to clear the air and we need to just remove these bad feelings now as far as pronunciation goes the one word that i want to focus on is the article the and you notice how i just pronounced it then i said it with the schwa sound which is an uh sound and it's definitely weaker the and typically people might say the before a consonant sound the cat the dog if the article comes before a vowel sound then people may say the the elephant the heir now i will say that people in the united states which is where i'm from may not follow this rule and they often use the before either a consonant or a vowel however in a phrase like this which is fixed and you hear these words together in this case you are going to say the clear the air make me join the army okay i'll cut off the toe what okay okay we are just gonna clear the air and then we have trial and error and this is a way of solving a problem by trying a number of different methods and then learning from the mistakes that you make and i think often this phrase is used when talking about science because perhaps somebody is doing an experiment and you could say it's just a matter of trial and error before we get the result that we want i also want to tell you that people may use this phrase with the word process and somebody could say it's a process of trial and error these words are frequently used together a process of trial and error and i could say that well learning new vocabulary it's also a process of trial and error because you're learning these phrases you're going to try to use them in context you may make mistakes but that's okay you'll learn from those mistakes and then you keep practicing until these phrases are a part of your speaking vocabulary for pronunciation what i would tell you is that with and i'm going to reduce it so it just sounds like n trial and error and then error is

it's a little challenging on its own the word has two syllables has those two r sounds just remember that the stress is on the first syllable error error trial and error and i can tell you relationships are just trial and error something else that's a little bit of trial and error is pronunciation and that's why i've been talking to you about how to correctly pronounce these phrases but a great way to practice and learn from your mistakes is by using the pronunciation app elsaspeak who was kind enough to sponsor today's lesson to tell you the truth i actually heard about this app from you i've had students tell me that they've been using elsa speak to practice their pronunciation and speaking and that's when i decided to see what it's all about so i downloaded the app and i started exploring and there there's a lot of cool things that you can do with elsa speak you can practice linking sounds or dropping consonants the schwa sound and all of this is really going to help you fine-tune your pronunciation skills you can even practice the pronunciation of different words and phrases such as the ones we've been talking about so if i put in trial and error we can then listen to the phrase trial and error and then you can practice trial and error all right and you can see you get instant feedback and that's going to help you make adjustments learn from your mistakes and continue to improve your pronunciation and right now when you click on the link below and download the elsa speak app you can get seven days of the pro membership for free but you can also use my discount to get 85 off the elsa speak lifetime membership or 40 off a one-year membership so check out those links and the discount down in to sound a little more like a soft d and then i'm going to take that soft d and link it with the vowel sound in odds at odds so you should hear that flat t and then it's getting linked with the vowel sound in odds i'm at odds with his version of the story some people say your immigration policy is at odds with your jobs program how would you respond to that then there's beyond a doubt or beyond a shadow of a doubt and in this case you are just expressing certainty that something is true i could say i think it's beyond a shadow of a doubt that the earth's climate is changing in law you may hear someone say beyond a reasonable doubt and this just means that the argument presented shows that someone is guilty and it just must be accepted as fact so a person might say we have shown that the defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in order to correctly pronounce this phrase keep in mind that the article is just going to be pronounced as the schwa sound it's just going to sound like uh and then we can do some linking and link some consonants with that schwa sound beyond shadow of doubt so two things bianda of beyond a shadow of a doubt so hopefully you can hear that linking occurring beyond a shadow of doubt beyond a shadow of a doubt i can say beyond a shadow of a doubt that clark kent loves lois lane the next phrase is one that i use quite often and that is play it by ear i really like this one it means that you are deciding how to handle a situation as it develops instead of acting on some well previous plan that you had so i i think i would often use this when traveling that i like to have an idea of what i'm going to do but i also want to be able to change those plans as the day develops so i could say yeah you know let's just play it by ear i know we're going to try to do these things but you know we can make some changes if necessary we'll just play it by ear and when it comes to pronouncing this phrase there's also some linking going on the final consonant sound in play can get linked with the vowel sound in it play it play it let's play it by ear so when are you getting back from florida i don't know play it by ear why go with the flow this means to do what other people are doing or just agree with other people simply because it's the easiest thing to do so you may hear somebody tell you hey you should just relax and go with the flow or i could talk about myself and say i'm just going to go with the flow i really don't have a strong opinion about things i just want to do what's easiest so i'm just going to go with the flow and when saying this phrase keep in mind there are some overlapping sounds those th's so that final th in with is going to overlap with the beginning th and the the only difference is that in with that th is voiceless and in the the th is voiced so when you're pronouncing this those sounds will overlap and you're really going to say that voiced th go with the flow go with the flow i'm gonna go with the flow i'm done complaining i'm evolving just gonna go with the flow then we have the phrase to put one's foot down and this just means to use your authority to stop something from happening and often i think people would use this phrase in the first person talking about something that's happening at that moment in which case they're going to use the continuous tense i'm putting my foot down so think about somebody who is more of an authority figure like parents would say this to their child if they want to go out to some party and the parent doesn't want them to go they could say no you're not going to that party i'm putting my foot down i'm using my authority to stop this from happening i'm putting my foot down there are two things that i want you to keep in mind when pronouncing this phrase the first is that if you're saying it in the continuous tense the t in pudding comes between two vowel sounds so again being from the united states i am going to use a flat t so it'll sound like a soft d i'm putting my foot down the other thing i want to say is that foot down there's some co-articulation going on because the position of your tongue when you say foot all right that stopped t your tongue is going to be at the top part of your mouth but then when you move into saying down your tongue with that d sound is also going to be at the top so you're not going to touch it twice and say them as two different words you're really going to say foot and then move right into that d sound in down foot down foot down and your tongue is really just coming up to the top part of your mouth one time foot down i'm putting my foot down come on you guys i'm putting my foot down either the dog moves out or i do then there's down the drain which is it's not a good phrase because it means that work or money has just been wasted so if i were to say all that work down the drain that the work was well it wasn't used it was wasted maybe it was destroyed just down the drain or the money that i won went right down the drain okay i used it all up probably carelessly it's gone now and it just went right down the drain the pronunciation of this phrase it's pretty straightforward the only thing i would say is that the article is going to be pronounced with that schwa sound the it's that weaker sound down the drain i bought you a ticket for the my pad raffle dad oh that's tooth fairy money down the drain sweetie i never win anything next is to come under fire and this just means to be criticized and really someone or something comes under fire i could say the government has come under fire after the failed response people are angry they're upset they're criticizing the government so the next one and it's also one of my favorite phrases from this lesson and that is jump to conclusions and and what this means is that someone is just guessing the facts about a situation with without having enough information and you would say someone is jumping to conclusions often i think people may use this with not in that case you're telling someone let's not jump to conclusions let's not guess until we get more information so i could say let's not jump to conclusions we need more evidence that is beyond a shadow of a doubt so in the meantime let

let's just not jump to conclusions for pronunciation the only thing that i would say is that preposition 2 it can either be pronounced two but sometimes it's pronounced with that schwa sound and it's going to sound like ta and often i think you will hear people say when they're using this phrase jump to conclusions okay i'll say it slowly again so you can hear that to jump to conclusions and then when i say it quickly jump to conclusions so it's a very subtle difference but i'm still using that schwa jump to conclusions this was stolen from there were accessories to a federal crime let's not jump to conclusions a lot of things start with you then there's out of one's depth and this means that a person is not having the knowledge experience or skills to deal with a particular situation or subject i think you would often hear somebody saying this phrase to another person in which case they're saying look you're out of your depth it's too difficult you don't have the experience or the knowledge you're out of your depth a few things when it comes to pronunciation out of so that t again it comes between two vowel sounds so i'll pronounce it as a flap t and then i will link it with the vowel sound in of out of out of and then just just keep in mind depth it ends with that voiceless th it's very slight but you should pronounce that voiceless th depth out of your depth out of your depth i know what i'm doing you don't you're out of your depth ruth and i'm not going to let you drag jonah down with you okay and then there's to do someone or something justice and this just means to be accurate or fair by representing someone or something as that person or thing truly is and let me let me give you a couple of examples i think it'll make more sense so this phrase is often used in the negative and with the pronoun it doesn't do it justice so it's like i'm i'm talking about a situation and then saying that it's just not an accurate representation like the the book is so much better than the movie the movie doesn't do it justice or the grand canyon is breathtaking pictures don't do it justice that pictures are just it's just not a fair or accurate representation of the grand canyon you really gotta go there pictures they just don't do it justice so when you say this phrase if you're using the pronoun it then there's going to be some intrusion intrusion is when you are adding a sound in between two other sounds so in this case we're going to add a slight w sound between do and it do wit this allows us to link those two vowel sounds together it doesn't do it justice it just doesn't do it justice doesn't do any justice i'll tell you that you always said you like my nose i love your nose it's real big up there so i hope that i have demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that these phrases are useful and i truly think that when you are learning advanced phrases like these you are not out of your depth you have the experience you have the knowledge you just need to learn them and just get a little practice using them but i i do not want to jump to conclusions only you can tell me how much you understand and how much you have learned and i would appreciate it if you let me know down in those comments if you enjoyed the lesson and you learned something new please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and i will see you next time so long

LESSON 156 OF 749

Advanced (C2) Verbs to Build Your Vocabulary

let's learn some Advanced C2 verbs and I'm going to get right to the point and we'll begin with our first verb which is to linger so this verb actually has two different meanings the first one is to continue to exist so if I were sick and I have a cold I could say that it is still lingering and in this case you may often hear it being used in The Continuous tense with that adverb still that's a good adverb verb collocation something is still lingering how's your cold yeah unfortunately it's still lingering it also means to take longer than usual to leave and in this case you may be talking about a person or group of people some customers lingered for a while after the shop closed and and they just took longer than usual to leave when you pronounce this verb it has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable linger but I want to focus on that NG because it can be a little confusing look at these two words they are not rhyming words singer you only have that ing sound whereas linger you have the ing plus that g sound afterwards linger it's similar to the word finger these are rhyming words linger finger any of you wish to seek counseling due to lingering trauma speak with me privately yeah well it turns out that there's some lingering feelings or something Clark get out of here my mistake except yes it is your mistake it's lingering he's so annoying and if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary then I hope that you linger for a while and watch more video lessons and I would also love it if you subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and throughout the lesson I'm going to talk to you about how to pronounce these verbs because I tried to choose verbs that are a little difficult to pronounce or maybe confusing or just have something about the pronunciation that I'd like to talk to you about like this next verb Dole out this means to give something usually money to several people and this C2 verb it is a phrasal verb that may be separable so you could Dole out something or dull something out and in order to show you how this verb may be used in context I have some news headlines for you as lawmakers Dole out record Surplus many say they need more Colts Dole out 22.5 million dollars for kicker Matt gay this is talking about American football and yeah that's a lot of money to Dole out for a kicker should political parties be able to Dole out freebies when pronouncing this phrasal verb you should know that linking is going to occur and we can link the final consonant sound in Dole with the beginning vowel sound in out and this is when Lincoln commonly occurs linking a final consonant sound with a beginning vowel sound and it just helps us make a smooth transition from one word to the next Dole out it's like we're we're taking that consonant sound and just moving it over to the next syllable Dole out then we have the verb pinpoint it also has two meanings the first one is to find or say the exact position in space or time of something I may ask you the question can you pinpoint our location on the map because I just want to know where we are it also means to discover or describe the exact facts of something I could tell you doctors could not pinpoint the cause of his illness so in this case they'd they just could not describe the facts of his illness for pronunciation the verb has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable pinpoint and I'd also like to point out that final T it's really a stop T it's pretty subtle pinpoint now if you have some lingering doubts when it comes to pronunciation then I'd like to tell you about the sponsor of today's lesson which is Elsa speak this is a great app that will help you pinpoint your mistakes so that you can fine tune your pronunciation and if you're unfamiliar with it let me show you how it works you just download the app create an account and there's so much that you can do practice daily lessons improve pronunciation study by topic but let me show you some of the other cool features that Elsa has to offer you can do fun activities like like unscrambling words practicing both vocabulary and pronunciation like this one fireworks let's do one more okay party you can also practice a variety of study sets based on your needs because I know that well many of you may be practicing for the IELTS so we can well practice synonyms for very and you can listen to it both the book and the film are Dreadful and then practice saying it both the book and the film are Dreadful

now let me show you what it's like if a mistake is made and I mispronounced that synonym both the book and the film are Dreadful as you can see you get instant feedback which then allows you to try and make adjustments and right now when you click on the link below and download the Elsa speak app you can get seven days of the pro membership for free but you can also use my discount to get 85 percent off a lifetime membership or 40 off a one-year membership so check out the links and discounts in the description if you'd like to pinpoint your mistakes and improve your pronunciation and before you know it you'll sound just like a native speaker now let's get back to our C2 verbs and the next one that I have for you is plague this means to cause worry pain or difficulty to someone or something over a period of time and often you may follow this verb with the preposition by you have been plagued by something I could tell you that well my athletic career has been plagued by back injuries and to be honest I've never really had much of an athletic career that's not really true but yes over the years I have been plagued by back injuries that part is unfortunately true when it comes to pronunciation the spelling and pronunciation don't really look like they match but that final gue it's going to be pronounced with an aspirated G sound plague but often people may use this verb as well the past participle in which case it's going to end with the final D sound and those consonants that can be a difficult combination that plague plagued you've been plagued by something I'm plagued by an internal struggle if you would just use the bucket you'd be so much more comfortable Sunrise Bay was a Coastal

Community plagued by a centuries-old curse next is the verb prescribe and this is a very useful verb because it's when a doctor says what kind of treatment someone should have and it's very specific because we're really talking about someone's health and there are some common collocations with this verb because a doctor May prescribe some medicine or prescribe some pills or prescribe some rest or even prescribe some painkillers now this verb has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable prescribe and that first syllable even though it's spelled p-r-e it has a PR sound because it's unstressed prescribe say it with me prescribe excellent then we have the verb utter this means to say something or just make a sound with your voice so sometimes it can be interchangeable with say except that it's a bit more formal and not as commonly used maybe I tell you he sat through the meeting without uttering a word and that's a good collocation with this verb without uttering a word now to talk about the difference between utter and say is that well utter is not always clear she uttered something through the car window but I didn't understand what she was saying it wasn't clear but I could tell she was making some sounds with her voice and uttered something for pronunciation the verb has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable utter but what I'd really like to point out is that T I am going to pronounce it as a flap T it's going to sound like a soft D and this is pretty common with the American accent when the t comes between two vowel sounds there are many words we can say with the flap T like water better utter just just listen for it it was him he uttered something oh I'm sorry I uttered you think you're funny don't you bro it is the truth I did with his own lips what's she said though then we have the verb curb and to curb something means to control or limit something that is not wanted and you would try to curb something and in order to show you how this verb is used in context once again I have some news headlines for you this phone helped me curb my screen addiction Syria agrees to curb drug trade in meeting with Arab ministers Brazil orders Google to curb campaign against fake news law and when you pronounce this verb it's pretty simple and straightforward there's just one syllable curb but that U has more of an ER vowel sound curb to curb something then there's lure this means to persuade someone to do something or go somewhere by offering them something exciting and often you may follow this verb with the preposition into or two the employees were lured into working over the weekend with the promise of overtime or universities try to lure the top academics to their school they always set those things to pay out more so they can lure people into the casino Maurice working to your house oh very clever assistant we're luring our bees to your sugar and selling them back to us at an inflated price they're on to what now Simpson you diabolical when you pronounce this verb just make sure that you are saying that diphthong because that you it's going to sound like a combination of vowel sounds lure say it with me lure lure good then there's indulge and I really like this verb it means to allow yourself or some other person to have something enjoyable especially more than what's good for you so you may follow this verb with the preposition in and you indulge in something late at night sometimes I get a little hungry and I probably shouldn't eat anything but I like to indulge in sweets and I'll have some cookies or chocolate and often you may use this verb when talking about food and you indulge in something and you have more than what's really good for you for pronunciation there are two syllables the stress is on that second syllable and that g has more of a j sound indulge indulge what do you like to indulge in let me know in the comments then there's delegate this means to give a job job Duty or right to someone so they can do it for you and and this verb is often used in the context of work because you can't do everything so you may delegate certain responsibilities to other people and you may also say that a boss or supervisor is good at delegating and and they tell others what they need to do or perhaps someone is bad at delegating because opposed to each other can agree or exist together and you could hear somebody say something like we need to reconcile our differences that's a great collocation with this verb the boys appear to have reconciled their differences a rose and her daughter reconcile their differences that's why it's important for you to reconcile your differences you could also reconcile something with something I could say research is being done to reconcile the world's population growth with sustainability so these two things they seem opposed but we need to reconcile them and find a way for them to exist together growth and sustainability for pronunciation the verb has three syllables the stress is on that first syllable and keep in mind that the C has more of an S sound reconcile reconcile and then there's loathe which is a pretty powerful verb because it means to hate someone or something so loathe just like hate it's

it's a strong word so be careful how you're using it but of course there are probably things that I'm sure you loathe I know there are things that I loathe like I loathe sitting at an airport when my flight has been delayed or I loathe anchovies I just don't like eating them or I loathe driving in really bad weather conditions for pronunciation it's just the one syllable but make sure you're using that voice th at the end loathe let's say it together loathe loathe nice now for a little review I'm sure that you do not loathe building your vocabulary and I hope that I can lure you into watching another video Lesson because even though I'm not a doctor that is what I would prescribe in order for you to develop your English fluency and to be honest I know it's not good to watch a lot of videos and be in front of a screen but in this case of course I think it's okay for you to indulge a little bit and watch many different video lessons I have a lot on this channel especially vocabulary lessons in which you will find me Doling out words left and right but in all seriousness I just want you to keep practicing keep improving and I'm not going to linger around any longer I'm going to say goodbye but as always I hope that you learn something new if you enjoy the lesson please hit that like button thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced (C2) Vocabulary in 60 Minutes | Phrases, Verbs, Nouns, and Adjectives You Should Know

This is a massive vocabulary lesson because in the next hour I am going to teach you many different C2 phrases, verbs, nouns, adjectives. And if you're wondering what that means, C2, this is Cambridge's highest level of proficiency and really just means that, well, you are a proficient speaker of English. And what I would encourage you to do is just take your time. As you go through the lesson, think about the examples, probably rewatch the lesson a week from now or a month from now. Because the more you do that, the more easily you're going to be able to build your vocabulary, which is what a lesson like this is all about. Before we begin, I'd like to make a quick announcement about my speaking course because if you would like to practice and improve your speaking skills, click on the link down in the description and when you do, you will find a special discount just for you. The course is all about helping you speak confidently, speak clearly, and speak naturally. Each week there is a different speaking topic. You'll learn vocabulary related to that topic. I'll also teach you some of the language nuances like when to use certain words and phrases. We do engaging speaking activities and there are also pronunciation video lessons included in the course. So, click on that link down in the description if you would like to improve your speaking fluency and well, yeah, I just hope to speak to you soon. So, without further ado, let's begin our lesson and learn a lot of C2 vocabulary. I am going to teach you some advanced phrases that I think are common and I'm going to tell you the meaning, talk a little bit about how these phrases are used, and I'm also going to teach you how to correctly pronounce these phrases because if you're going to use them, you want to make sure that you are saying them correctly. And if you enjoy building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes, the channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals.

So, to clear the air means to remove the bad feelings between people. And you might use this if you have a couple of friends who are unhappy with each other or maybe some family members and there are just some bad feelings and then someone else, the person who wants to get those feelings removed, that's the person who's going to use this phrase. So, if I have a couple of friends that are have been arguing and there are some bad feelings and I am the one who wants them to make up, then I might tell them, you know, it's time to clear the air. We we really need to clear the air and we need to just remove these bad feelings.

Now, as far as pronunciation goes, the one word that I want to focus on is the article the. And you notice how I just pronounced it. Then I said it with the schwa sound, which is an uh sound, and it's definitely weaker, the. And typically people might say the before a consonant sound, the cat, the dog. If the article comes before a vowel sound, then people may say the, the elephant, the air. Now, I I will say that people in the United States, which is where I'm from, may not follow this rule and they often use the before either a consonant or a vowel. However, in a phrase like this, which is fixed and you hear these words together, in this case you are going to say the, clear the air. Make me join the army, okay? I'll cut off a toe. What?

Okay, okay. We are just going to clear the air. And then we have trial and error. And this is a way of solving a problem by trying a number of different methods and then learning from the mistakes that you make. And I think often this phrase is used when when talking about science because perhaps somebody is doing an experiment and you could say it's just a matter of trial and error before we get the result that we want. I also want to tell you that people may use this phrase with the word process and somebody could say it's a process of trial and error. These words are frequently used together, a process of trial and error.

And I could say that, well, learning new vocabulary, it's also a process of trial and error because you're learning these phrases, you're going to try to use them in context, you may make mistakes, but that's okay. You'll learn from those mistakes and then you keep practicing until these phrases are a part of your speaking vocabulary. For pronunciation, what I would tell you is that with and, I'm going to reduce it so it just sounds like and, trial and error. And then error is is a little challenging on its own. The word has two syllables, has those two R sounds. Just remember that the stress is on the first syllable, error.

sounds, so I am going to pronounce it as a flat T, which is going to sound a little more like a soft D. And then I'm going to take that soft D and link it with the vowel sound in odds. At odds. So, you should hear that flat T and then it's getting linked with the vowel sound in odds. I'm at odds with his version of the story. Some people say your immigration policy is at odds with your jobs program. How would you respond to that? Then there's beyond a doubt or beyond a shadow of a doubt. And in this case you are just expressing certainty that something is true. I could say I think it's beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Earth's climate is changing. In law, you may hear someone say beyond a reasonable doubt. And this just means that the argument presented shows that someone is guilty and it just must be accepted as fact. So, a person might say we have shown that the defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. In order to correctly pronounce this phrase, keep in mind that the article is just going to be pronounced as the schwa sound. It's just going to sound like uh and then we can do some linking and link some consonants with that schwa sound. Beyond a shadow of a doubt. So, two things, beyond a shadow of a doubt. So, hopefully you can hear that linking occurring. Beyond a shadow of a doubt. Beyond a shadow of a doubt. I can say beyond a shadow of a doubt that Clark Kent loves Lois Lane. The next phrase is one that I use quite often and that is play it by ear. I really like this one. It means that you are deciding how to handle a situation as it develops instead of acting on some, well, previous plan that you had. So, I I think I would often use this when traveling that I I like to have an idea of what I'm going to do, but I also want to be able to change those plans as the day develops. So, I could say, yeah, you know, let's just play it by ear. I I know we're going to try to do these things, but, you know, we can make some changes if necessary. We'll just play it by ear. And when it comes to pronouncing this phrase, there's also some linking going on. The final consonant sound in play can get linked with the vowel sound in it, play it, play it. Let's play it by ear. So, when you're getting back from Florida? Uh I don't know. Play it by ear. Why? Go with the flow. This means to do what other people are doing or just agree with other people simply because it's the easiest thing to do.

So, you may hear somebody tell you, hey, you should just relax and go with the flow. Or I could talk about myself and say, I'm just going to go with the flow. I really don't have a strong opinion about things. I just want to do what's easiest, so I'm just going to go with the flow. And when saying this phrase, keep in mind there are some overlapping sounds, those THs. So, that final TH in with is going to overlap with the beginning TH in the. The only difference is that in with that TH is voiceless and in the, the TH is voiced. So, when you're pronouncing this, those sounds will overlap and you're really going to say that voiced TH. Go with the a Go with the flow. I'm going to go with the flow. I'm done complaining. I'm evolving.

Just going to go with the flow. Then we have the phrase to put one's foot down. And this just means to use your authority to stop something from happening. And often I think people would use this phrase in the first person talking about something that's happening at that moment, in which case they're going to use the continuous tense. I'm putting my foot down. So, think about somebody who is more of an authority figure like parents would say this to their child if they want to go out to some party and the parent doesn't want them to go. They could say, "No, you're not going to that party. I'm putting my foot down. I'm using my authority to stop this from happening.

I'm putting my foot down." There are two things that I want you to keep in mind when pronouncing this phrase. The first is that if you're saying it in the continuous tense, the T in putting comes between two vowel sounds. So again, being from the United States, I am going to use a flat T, so it'll sound like a soft D. I'm putting my foot down. The other thing I want to say is that foot down, there's some coarticulation going on because the position of your tongue when you say foot, all right, that stop T, your tongue is going to be at the top part of your mouth, but then when you move into saying down, your tongue with that d sound is also going to be at the top. So, you're not going to touch it twice and say them as two different words. You're really going to say foot and then move right into that d sound in down. Foot down. Foot down. And your tongue is really just coming up to the top part of your mouth one time. Foot down. I'm putting my foot down. Come on, you guys. I'm putting my foot down. Either the dog moves out or I do. Then there's down the drain, which is it's not a good phrase because it means that work or money has just been wasted. So, if I were to say, "All that work down the drain," that the work was well, it wasn't used, it was wasted, maybe it was destroyed. Just down the drain. Or the money that I won went right down the drain. Okay, I I used it all up, probably carelessly. It's gone now, and it just went right down the drain. The pronunciation of this phrase, it's pretty straightforward. The only thing I would say is that the article is going to be pronounced with that schwa sound, the. It's that weaker sound. Down the drain. I bought you a ticket for the my pad raffle, Dad. Oh, that's tooth fairy money down the drain, sweetie. I never win anything.

And and what this means is that someone is just guessing the facts about a situation without having enough information. And you would say someone is jumping to conclusions. Often I think people may use this with not. In that case, you're telling someone, "Let's not jump to conclusions. Let's not guess until we get more information." So, I could say, "Let's not jump to conclusions. Uh we need more evidence that is beyond a shadow of a doubt. So, in the meantime, let's just not jump to conclusions." For pronunciation, the only thing that I would say is that preposition to, it can either be pronounced to, but sometimes it's pronounced with that schwa sound, and it's going to sound like tuh. And often I think you will hear people say tuh when they're using this phrase. Jump to conclusions. Okay, I'll say it slowly again so you can hear that tuh. Jump to conclusions. And then when I say it quickly, jump to conclusions. So, it's a very subtle difference, but I'm still using that schwa. Jump to conclusions.

This was stolen from there. We're accessories to a federal crime. Let's not jump to conclusions. A lot of things start with you. Then there's out of one's depth. And this means that a person is not having the knowledge, experience, or skills to deal with a particular situation or subject. I think you would often hear somebody saying this phrase to another person, in which case they're saying, "Look, you're out of your depth. It's too difficult. You don't have the experience or the knowledge. You're out of your depth." A few things when it comes to pronunciation. Out of. So, that T again, it comes between two vowel sounds, so I'll pronounce it as a flat T, and then I will link it with the vowel sound in of. Out of. Out of.

And then just keep in mind depth. It ends with that voiceless th. It's very slight, but you should pronounce that voiceless th, depth. Out of your depth. Out of your depth. I know what I'm doing. You don't. You're out of your depth, Ruth, and I'm not going to let you drag Jonah down with you, okay? And then there's to do someone or something justice. And this just means to be accurate or fair by representing someone or something as that person or thing truly is. And let me let me give you a couple of examples. I think it'll make more sense. So, this phrase is often used in the negative and with the pronoun it. Doesn't do it justice. So, it's like I'm talking about a situation and then saying that it's just not an accurate representation. Like the book is so much better than the movie. The movie doesn't do it justice.

Or the Grand Canyon is breathtaking. Pictures don't do it justice. That pictures are just it's just not a fair or accurate representation of the Grand Canyon. You really got to go there. The pictures, they just don't do it justice. So, when you say this phrase, if you're using the pronoun it, then there's going to be some intrusion. Intrusion is when you are adding a sound in between two other sounds. So, in this case, we're going to add a slight w sound between do and it. Do it. This allows us to link those two vowel sounds together. It doesn't do it justice. It just doesn't do it justice. It doesn't do you any justice, I'll tell you that.

You always said you liked my nose. I love your nose. It's real big up there. So, I hope that I have demonstrated, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that these phrases are useful. And I truly think that when you are learning advanced phrases like these, you are not out of your depth. You have the experience, you have the knowledge, you just need to learn them and just get a little practice using them. But I do not want to jump to conclusions. Only you can tell me how much you understand and how much you have learned, and I would appreciate it if you let me know down in those comments. In today's lesson, I want to teach you some advanced C2 verbs. Let's begin with the verb to relish. What this means is to like or enjoy something, and really you're just adding a bit of emphasis. So, as I just said, I'm sure you relish learning new vocabulary. You enjoy it and you know that you're enjoying it. And you can follow this verb with either a gerund or a noun. So, to give you a couple of examples with gerunds, I could say, "I relish traveling to exotic locations." Or "I relish eating ice cream on a hot summer day." And then, if you're going to follow it with the noun, there are some common collocations. And these are words that are frequently used together. So, you may relish the thought, prospect, or idea of doing something. Or you may relish the chance or the opportunity to do something. And those are some useful collocations. When it comes to pronouncing the verb, it has two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, relish. She won't survive. I don't relish hurting anyone, Stephen. But she's not a child. Mhm. Well, Victoria relishes her status as queen bee, right? Pathologically. Coincides. So, this verb has two meanings. The first one is to happen at or near the same time. And often you're going to follow the verb with the preposition with. So, you would say that something coincides with something else. And Uh, you're not really talking about everyday activities like going to the coffee shop coincides with this. You're talking about events that may not occur regularly. So, I could say, "Look, I'm sorry. I can't go to your birthday party because it coincides with a business trip that I have to take. It's happening at the same time." It also means to be the same or similar. So, I could say, "If our schedules coincide, then we can plan to travel together. We'll take the train if our schedules coincide and

For pronunciation, the verb has two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, squander. And keep in mind that s q u a has that squa sound. To squander something. Screw you, dick. You squandered your gift. Squandered my gift? Made 68 albums. Did I want to be made manager? Sure. A great opportunity squandered? Absolutely. A crushing blow? Yes. And the next C2 verb that I have for you is commemorate. And this means to remember officially and give respect to a great person or event, especially by some public ceremony or by making a statue or a special building. And I thought that I would show you some different news headlines so that you can see how this verb is used in context.

Events to commemorate Martin Luther King Jr. Or Tulane to host campus celebration to commemorate historic Cotton Bowl win. And that's talking about American football. Museum to commemorate 70th anniversary of 1953 floods. Democrats commemorate January 6th attack with tears and silence at US Capitol. So, these are just some random news headlines that I found on the day that I created this lesson. And it's just using the verb in context. So, hopefully that gives you a better understanding. When pronouncing this verb, it has four syllables. The stress is on that second syllable, commemorate, commemorate. And just keep in mind that first and third syllable have that schwa sound, that unstressed vowel sound, which sounds like uh, commemorate, commemorate. And the next verb That's That's your hint. What verb is that? And the verb that I'm talking about is gasp.

Gasp. And it has two different meanings and it's really a difference between talking about, well, one breath or many breaths. So, the first meaning is to take a short, quick breath through the mouth because of shock, pain, or surprise. It's just that one breath. Gasp. And people may use this as an interjection and saying something surprising like, "And he never returned home and saw his family again." Gasp. Or it's used in storytelling with those dialogue tags to describe speaking. "Help me," he gasped. It also means to breathe loudly and with difficulty, really trying to get more air. And in this case, it's several breaths. And often, people may end up using it in the continuous tense, gasping. Uh, I could say that the wave knocked me over and I was gasping for air. That is a common collocation with this verb to say that someone is gasping for air. When it comes to pronunciation, I think the most challenging thing about this verb would be saying it in the past tense. Gasp, it's a regular verb. So, in the past, it's going to end with e d. And because that final p sound is voiceless, the e d is going to take on a t sound. So, we have the p sound followed by the t sound, which can be a little difficult. It's going to sound like p-t, p-t. Gasp. Gasp. Give it a try. Gasp. Excellent. The next verb is intervene. And this means to intentionally become involved in a situation in order to improve it or just prevent it from getting worse. So, if there is an argument or a fight, someone may intervene. I could say that the referee intervened to stop the fight. They just didn't want it to get worse. I could also say the Federal Reserve has intervened in financial markets in order to stop inflation. And they're getting involved in the situation to try to improve it. Now, for pronunciation, the verb has three syllables. The stress is on that third syllable, intervene.

One thing I want to point out when it comes to the American accent, because I'm from the United States, is when the t follows an n sound, especially in unstressed syllables, it may elide and people may drop it. So, instead of intervene, you may hear someone say intervene. So, just keep that in mind. In the United States, you may hear both pronunciations, one with the t Go intervene. Go ahead, intervene all you want. I'm just afraid you might be interfering while we're intervening. and one without. I want to say something terrible to someone I love. I cursed my thumb. I'm going to intervene here. And then there's to label. This refers to a word or phrase that's used to describe the characteristics or qualities of a person, event, or thing and really in a way that's unfair. So, you may label someone as something. That is a common phrase to label someone as something.

In my lifetime, I have been labeled as a troublemaker uh, at school when I was younger. I've also been labeled as a slacker, uh, which is a noun that means someone who does not work very hard. And of course, I would disagree with this. But it happens if we get the wrong impression of someone or something and we may label them as this thing, which is usually negative. Now, for pronunciation, the word has two syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, label. The other thing I'd like to point out is the second syllable, it ends with that dark l, which is that all sound. And then if we're following it with the word as, I told you that's a common phrase, well then we can link that dark l with the beginning vowel sound in as, label as, label as. They impose struggle and hardship on us. They label us as criminals for pushing back. A mortgage officer had messed up Miranda's application. They had inadvertently labeled her as separated. The next verb is imply. And this is a very useful verb. It means to communicate an idea or feeling without directly saying it. And because you're not directly saying it, people may use this verb when asking a question. And they would ask, "What are you implying?" So, I'm going to give you an example. I'm going to imply something without directly saying it. And I just want you to think about what it is that I'm implying. So, if I said, "Gosh, I really hope that you like this video lesson." And when I say like, I'm talking about enjoy, that you relish learning new vocabulary. And if only there were some way for you to commemorate this lesson so that it gets labeled as a great vocabulary lesson.

And now I'm using it in a positive way. It gets labeled as a great lesson. If there was just something that that you could do to commemorate this video. And I'm just pointing to that thumbs up because I'm implying that you should hit the like button. And I think that you were probably able to guess that. So, when it comes to pronouncing this verb, it has two syllables. The stress is on the second syllable, imply. Now, I I don't think the pronunciation is too challenging. What I think is difficult about this verb is that it's sometimes confused with another verb, which is infer. And that's the next C2 verb that I want to talk to you about, to infer something. This means to form an opinion or guess that something is true based on the information that you have. So, if you see me and I'm just soaking wet, what might you infer about the weather?

I imagine that you would infer that it's raining outside. Or maybe you see me and I'm really happy and I'm smiling, grinning from ear to ear. What might you infer? I I really don't know. You can let me know down in the comments. The verb, it has two syllables and once again the stress is on the second syllable, infer. And I don't think the pronunciation is too challenging. Just try not to confuse those two verbs, to imply, to infer. If by me you are inferring that I have BO. I'm likely he wasn't inferring, he was implying. You you infer. Was I? I see you guys are inferring that I'm stupid. That's not correct. We were implying it.

You then inferred it. The next verb is to speculate. And I think this is a very useful verb because it's pretty common. People do this all the time, to speculate. It means to guess possible answers to a question when when we don't have enough information to be certain. So, we do this quite often because well, I think people just like speculating about different things when trying to explain something that happened and we don't have all the answers and we may speculate or we're trying to guess what will happen in the future and we can only speculate. To give you an example, I could say journalists are speculating what the president may say in his upcoming announcement. And I I think in general it's well, it's not always good to speculate or at least we should tell people that that is what we're doing because sometimes people will speculate and then others will just take that as the truth and it can cause some problems. Now, the verb has three syllables, the stress is on that first syllable, speculate. And I really think this verb is well, pronounced the way it's spelled. It's pretty straightforward, to speculate. Succumb.

So, to succumb has two different meanings and once again, I'll show you some news headlines so that you can see how this verb is used in context. So, the first meaning is to lose the determination to oppose something and really you're just accepting defeat. Visit these popular tourist traps before they succumb to climate change. This is how Israel's economy could succumb to populism. Samsung is first to succumb to a slowing economy that is crushing semiconductors. The next meaning is to die or suffer badly from an illness or injury. Battling Morocco eventually succumbed to injuries. And in this case they're they're talking about their football team. To succumb to injuries sustained after falling from mobile tower. When pronouncing this verb, it has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, succumb. And just keep in mind there is a silent b at the end of the verb, to succumb. And then there's the verb trudge. To trudge means to walk slowly with a lot of effort, especially over a difficult surface or when carrying something heavy. And often you may follow this verb with a preposition. Trudge up, trudge down, trudge over, trudge through. Maybe you had to trudge up a mountain or perhaps you had to trudge through the snow and in both situations you're walking slowly with a lot of effort. For pronunciation, it's just one syllable, that dg has that j sound, similar to the word judge. These are rhyming words, trudge, judge. The other thing I'd point out is that if the verb is followed by a preposition that begins with a vowel sound, then linking may occur. Trudge up. Trudge over. All right, something to keep in mind. Let's do a little review. Now, I am not going to speculate as to whether or not you will watch another video lesson. I I'm sure that you relish building your vocabulary and because you're still here right now, then I'm just going to infer that you will watch another video lesson because I don't think you want to squander this amazing opportunity to continue improving your overall English fluency and I really don't want you to succumb to any feelings of inadequacy when it comes to your language abilities. I want you to stay positive, I want you to stay motivated and I want you to continue learning new things. All right, that's a little review using these verbs in context. you will be in awe of the nouns that I'm going to teach you and I'm sure that you will learn something new. And awe, this is the first word that I want to teach you. That's right, this is a noun, awe.

And it's referring to a feeling of great respect, sometimes mixed with fear or surprise and often you're going to use this word in the phrase in awe of someone or in awe of something. So, I I could say the children were in awe of their grandfather. Okay, they had that feeling of respect. Or we watched in awe as the lion attacked the buffalo. So again, it's like you have respect for mother nature but it's also mixed with a bit of fear and surprise. When pronouncing this word, it's just that vowel sound, awe, like you would have in the word saw. And when talking about the phrase in awe of we can link that final consonant sound in in, that n sound with the vowel sound awe, in awe. In awe of someone or in awe of something. And as we go through the lesson, I want to talk to you a little bit about the pronunciation because I I tried to choose words that are a bit challenging like this next one, bureaucracy. So, this is talking about complicated rules or processes used by an organization especially when they do not seem necessary and this noun, it really does have a negative connotation and frequently you may use this when talking about larger companies, governments or institutions and you may even emphasize it with a phrase like a lot of. There is a lot of government bureaucracy. Or the company is so slow to change because there's too much bureaucracy. With all the bureaucracy in a hospital, sometimes you have to bend the rules to help a patient. No, I didn't I didn't do it for Leslie. I did it because I hate bureaucracy. I'm giving you both the IPA and phonetic spelling so you can actually see how the word is pronounced. And bureaucracy, it has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, bureaucracy, bureaucracy. Frenzy. This is talking about uncontrolled and excited behavior or emotion that may sometimes be a little violent. So, I could say Black Friday is a shopping frenzy. It's busy, it's a bit aggressive. Or you may hear this noun being used in the collocation feeding frenzy, which refers to a group attacking a prey. But you really could use feeding frenzy when referring to a situation in which people are trying to get as much of something as they possibly can. Your brother is creating his own media feeding frenzy and all of it is negative. Or in the village had one of those crazy sales, it was a footwear feeding frenzy. You could use this noun in the phrase to whip someone into a frenzy and what this means is like you're causing someone to feel this way, this uncontrolled emotion. As the crowd that had gathered to hear Herbert Love's be was whipped into a frenzy. As far as pronouncing this word, it's pretty simple and straightforward. It just has two syllables, the stress is on that first syllable, frenzy. But for the most part I I really wanted to share with you those phrases that you can use this noun with. And the next one that I have for you is cliche. This is a saying or remark that is often used and therefore it's not interesting and it's not original. So, I I could tell you something like, well look, you know what they say, opposites attract. That phrase, opposites attract, it's pretty common, well-known, it's it's not original and maybe you tell me, come on Wes, that's so cliche. And if you were to tell somebody, look, oh it's so cliche, it it kind of has a bit of a negative connotation because basically you're saying that well, you're you're just not impressed with what someone's saying to you, it's just not interesting. Or maybe I I start out by saying something like, hey, I know it's cliche but time heals all wounds. All right, so I'm basically admitting that what I'm the saying that I'm using, it's cliche. So, there there are many different sayings in English that you could say are cliche.

I really just want him to be happy. Maybe I'm being cliche, I don't care. I know that you're just looking at this word and thinking, wait a second, there are no accent marks in English. Well, this is a word that English has borrowed from French and that's why again, the spelling and the pronunciation don't really match. Cliche, it has two syllables, the stress is on that second syllable and that c h e with the accent mark sounds like shay, cliche. The next word is paradigm. So, this noun is talking about well, a model of something or just a very clear and typical example of something. And I thought well, a good way to give you an example is just to show you some different news headlines so you can see how this word is used in context. A paradigm shift EU Russia relations after the war in Ukraine. Are we witnessing the emergence of a new paradigm? And and this article goes on to talk about the the mental health system. But what I really want to point out are the words that are being used with this noun. These are collocations talking about a paradigm shift or a new paradigm. When pronouncing this word, it has three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, but it's that third syllable that can be a little tricky because once again, this is when the spelling and pronunciation just do not match. So, the third syllable has a silent G and the vowel sound it's a long I sound not a short vowel sound. paradigm paradigm But our society has undergone a paradigm shift. In the information age Sheldon, you and I are the alpha males. Let's just keep the momentum going with our next word, which is momentum. So, this is talking about the force that moves an object or an event developing or making progress. So, if we're talking about the force that moves an object, think of well, physics.

As the car goes downhill, it gains momentum. If we're talking about an event developing or making progress, well, then you could think of a competition. The home team lost momentum when their star player got injured. And and once again, I want to point out those collocations, those words that are used with this noun. To gain momentum or to lose momentum. The word has three syllables. The stress is on that second syllable, momentum. Now, one thing I'll say, and this is really about the American accent. Sometimes when the T follows an N sound, it may elide and it gets removed. And this happens with words like internet or center. So, if you're in the United States, you may hear somebody drop that T and it's going to sound like momentum.

So, I figured we start out local just to get our momentum going. Now, again, this is specific to the US and I'm only telling you this because that's where I'm from. But in general, you can't go wrong pronouncing that T, momentum. Why are you taking so long between fireworks? I'm building momentum, man. Then we have morale, which is a great noun to know. It's talking about the amount of confidence felt by a person or group of people, especially when in a difficult or dangerous situation. And once again, there are a lot of great collocations with this noun. So, you could use them with certain adjectives like high morale or low morale or employee morale. Or you could use them with a some different verbs as well. To raise morale, to boost morale, to bring up morale. I really hope that these video lessons boost your morale and just make you want to continue learning. You think I should, don't you? Absolutely, sir. Show force, boost morale. Trying to keep morale high. Just trying to raise morale. The pronunciation can be a little tricky. Just know that the stress is on that second syllable, morale. And don't be fooled by that E at the end. It's not a long vowel sound, but a short vowel sound, morale. Then there's withdrawal. And this just means well, taking money out of the bank. And there is a common verb noun collocation to make a withdrawal. I need to make a withdrawal. Can I make a withdrawal? And really, I chose this word because of the difficulty with the pronunciation because I've had many learners tell me that they really have trouble pronouncing this word. It has three syllables. The stress is on that second syllable, that draw. But it's that third syllable that I think people have trouble with, that dark L. So, you're going to stress that second syllable and move right into that dark L, which is has that all sound, withdrawal.

drawal withdrawal Just keep practicing. Give it a try. Say it a few times and I I I think you'll start to feel a little more comfortable saying it. The next noun is deterrent. And this is something that stops people doing something because they're afraid of what may happen. And you may use this noun in the phrase and say that something acts as a deterrent to something else. Like the teachers strict punishments act as a deterrent to cheating. And there are also some useful adjective noun collocations saying that well, something is a strong deterrent or talking about a nuclear deterrent or an effective deterrent. This word has three syllables. The stress is on that second syllable, deterrent. Now, one thing I want to quickly point out and this also has to do with the American accent and that is the flap T. A flap T is going to sound like a soft D and Americans, we love the flap T. Often this occurs when the T comes between two vowels like water.

Now, the T in deterrent, it also comes between two vowels, but we are not going to say this with a flap T and this is because the T comes at the beginning of a stressed syllable. So, when the T comes at the beginning of a stressed syllable, then you're going to say it as a true T and not a flap T and that is why you would pronounce this and say deterrent. Just thought you should know. How will the Umbrella Academy ever become an effective crime deterrent? Because I'm your nuclear deterrent. It's working. We're safe. ambiguity I like this noun. It's talking about something that may have more than one meaning and can therefore cause some confusion. And you may also use this word as an adjective.

It's quite common, ambiguous. But we're talking about nouns, so let's use it as a noun and I could say there is ambiguity in the new law. In this case, I'm saying that the law, you know, may have different meanings. Or perhaps I tell you, hey, be specific so there's no ambiguity. All right, I I I want things to be very specific and clear so there's no ambiguity. All right, time for Fast and the Furious 1 through 7. This is a 14-hour meditation on the importance of family, fast cars, product placement, racial ambiguity, and family. The word has five syllables and if you want to learn something about syllable stress, when the word ends in ity, the stress is going to be on the third to last syllable, that gu, ambiguity ambiguity.

The next noun is this one right here, diarrhea. And this is an illness in which your waste is not solid, but liquid and I really don't think I need to go into great detail explaining the meaning of this noun. I think there is no ambiguity with what I'm trying to tell you. I I think this is a word you have probably heard of before. You probably know it already. But the reason why I'm including it in this lesson is really because of the spelling. And even in the UK, there's a different spelling and I think a lot of native English speakers probably could not spell this word. It is one that you're probably going to use more in spoken English, but I think it's important because it it has to do with your health.

if you're in the doctor's office or perhaps you may even need to write it down if you're trying to write some of your symptoms. So, it's important to to keep in mind the spelling and try to remember how this word is spelled. For pronunciation, the word has four syllables. The stress is on that third syllable, diarrhea. But really, I I just wanted to highlight the spelling of this word. And then there's whereabouts. This is just talking about the place where someone or something is. And often you would use this talking about someone's whereabouts. The police don't know the criminal's whereabouts. Or or perhaps I could say we're unsure of her exact whereabouts. That is a collocation with this noun. You may hear people use this in a question like whereabouts in the US are you from?

This is a question that I sometimes get and I tell people, well, I grew up in the south, but there are quite a few different places all over the country where I have lived. And this is also a C2 word. also because when you're using it in a question like this, it's not a noun, it's an adverb. But we're we're talking about nouns and in this case, you're you're often going to be talking about someone's whereabouts. We need his whereabouts. Und hat whereabouts? Unnoten. The pronunciation, it's pretty straightforward. There are three syllables. The stress is on that first syllable, whereabouts. Let's try and do a little bit of review. I hope that I was able to avoid any ambiguity when explaining the meaning of these different nouns. And you know, now that you probably feel good about building your vocabulary, I hope that you can use that positive momentum to go ahead and watch another video lesson because I try to make these lessons easy to follow and understand because I I think that's what's really going to help boost your morale. And even if you find a word confusing and you don't completely understand it, please don't let that be a deterrent when it comes to building your vocabulary and just trying to learn new words. And you can let me know your whereabouts down in the comments. I was just trying to use some of these nouns, get a little review, and use them in context. Learn some advanced C2 adjectives to help you build your vocabulary. And I will be very clear with my explanation and I will not be ambiguous. And that's the first word that I want to teach you in today's lesson, ambiguous. It means having or expressing more than one possible meaning, and often this is done intentionally. So, let's have a look at this image right here.

Is it a rabbit or is it a duck? What do you see? A rabbit or a duck? I could say that this image is ambiguous, all right? It has more than one possible answer. And mostly you're going to use this adjective to refer to something that someone says or perhaps the way that something is worded, like a contract. I could say the contract is ambiguous and open to interpretation. That it may have more than one possible meaning, it's ambiguous. I'm looking over my text correspondence with Beverly and I don't see anything that would have given her offense. Everything's ambiguous. I spell everything out. Then we have complementary. So, this word has a couple of different meanings.

The first one is praising or showing admiration for someone. I could say that well, sometimes you are very complementary about some of my vocabulary lessons and I really appreciate that. Now, the C2 meaning, the more advanced meaning for this word, it refers to well, tickets, books, or any item that may be given for free, especially by a business. So, in this case, I want you to think of a hotel or a flight. So, if I go to my hotel room, I might say, "Oh, I was given a complementary bottle of water." All right? It was already in the hotel room, it's free. Or on an airplane, when you fly, you may be offered complementary snacks. Now, when it comes to pronunciation, very quickly, I just want to let you know because I'm from the United States, sometimes people will drop that T because it follows the N sound and it's going to sound like complementary. Okay?

So, complementary or complementary if you're in the US. Hi, what's the damage here? Nothing. For the for these? Free. These are complimentary. Complimentary, free, whatever you want. Handy is the next adjective that I want to teach you. If you say that something is handy, it just means that it is useful or convenient. Mostly, I think people are going to use this adjective to talk about items in which they can well, use for a variety of reasons or just items that are really helpful in a difficult situation. You could say, "Wow, this is just really handy." My wife thinks that her Apple Watch is pretty handy because she can use it for a variety of things.

And you can also use this adjective in the idiom to come in handy. And if you say that something comes in handy, that just means that it's useful. Very handy. Indispensable. Now, you will use this adjective when you want to say that something or someone is so useful, so good, so important that you cannot manage without it or without him or her if we're talking about a person. And most of the time, you're going to use this as a predicate adjective and it's going to follow the verb to be. She is an indispensable part of the team. The office should not get rid of the coffee machine, it's indispensable. And legitimate is the next adjective that I want to teach you. And this has two different meanings, both of them C2. The first meaning is allowed by law. So, when I was younger, I had a fake ID and it looked legitimate. Okay? Like it was lawful. And I I used this ID when I was in university to buy beer, you know, I was younger, the US you have to be 21, which I think is a little old, but that's neither here nor there, but the ID looked legitimate. The next meaning is reasonable or acceptable. So, I could say her argument was legitimate, so we refunded her money. That the argument was reasonable and we gave her a refund. It was legitimate. And with the pronunciation of this word, that first T, because I am from the United States, I will pronounce it as a flat T, which is going to sound like a soft D, legitimate, legitimate. You assert that Mr. Rhodes harassed you. How do you know he didn't have a legitimate reason to be in your office? Then there's questionable, which means not certain or wrong in some way. And questionable, it has that A B L E suffix, which means

That doesn't sound like something you'd do. She has very questionable taste. Next is grim and I probably shouldn't be smiling when I say this adjective because it means worrying and without hope. So, it's not a good thing if you say something is grim. And typically, you're talking about the way something looks, appears, or seems. So, I could say, "Well, the weather today looks grim. I don't think we should go outside." Or, you know, to be honest, the future of American politics right now, it looks grim. People are very divided, there's a lot of misinformation out there, and yeah, I think a lot of people would agree that it looks grim.

Son of a bee sting, she's turning the entire office against us. This is grim. Real grim. What are we going to do? The next adjective is coherent. This also has two different meanings, both of them C2. And the first meaning is referring to an argument, plan, or idea that is clear and each part connects to each other in a reasonable way. So, really you're just saying that something is very easy to understand. I could tell you that the lawyer made a coherent argument. The next meaning refers to someone who you understand what they're saying. And in this case, I think most of the time people will use this in the negative to say that you don't understand someone. I could tell you he's he's not coherent at the moment. Or I could just use the antonym and say incoherent. But just keep that in mind when talking about a person, I think often you will use this in the negative to say that someone is not coherent or incoherent.

You don't hear that loud, high-pitched, incessant humming coming from the vents that is making it impossible for me to think straight, let alone string together one coherent sentence? Dubious. And I like this adjective mostly because I just like saying dubious, all right? That sounds dubious. And it means that something is just not completely true or just should not be completely trusted. And I think we can all relate to this one. Think about email scams and I would get an email with this subject heading, "Congratulations, you've been selected." And it just it's all it just looks dubious. And these are actually legitimate emails that I have received just this past week and I did not open them, I did not click on anything because they're dubious. It didn't compress the whole thing. It should be twice that size.

I mean, 24 gigs, that's less than a fourth the file size. That seems dubious, Richard. Then there's compulsive and this means that you are doing something a lot and you're unable to stop it. attributive adjective, which means it's going to come before the noun. I could say that my neighbor is a compulsive gambler or my colleague is a compulsive liar. And because of the meaning that you're doing something excessively and you just can't stop, it really often refers to things that are not good, like compulsive gambler or compulsive liar. Read it. Uh personality overview, Mr. Stark displays compulsive behavior. In my own defense, that was last week. Then we have pushy and this is another adjective that I just like to say, pushy. But it's also not a good thing because it means that someone is behaving in an unpleasant way by trying too much to get something or to make someone do something. So, it's not good if if somebody is being really pushy.

And I want you to think of a salesperson. They want to sell you something, and sometimes they can be very aggressive, and you could say that maybe they're they're being really pushy. I could also say that, well, my wife likes to try new restaurants around town, and even if I think that the place is questionable, she really wants to go, and sometimes she can be a little pushy. And even though this adjective is not a good one, you can use it among friends or family because I think often we really want someone to do something, and yeah, I think we can all be a bit pushy from time to time. Before you go in, you fill out comment card. Okay. Uh uh don't forget the back. You people are so pushy. What? Israeli people are pushy? Then there's carefree, which means having no problem and not worried about anything. And I think you would often use this to describe a person's uh personality. And I could say he is young, carefree, and just wants to travel the world. And I think we can all relate to this word uh thinking about a different time or period in our lives where maybe we didn't have much worry. And I could say, well, remember those carefree days back in high school? You know, we just didn't have We didn't have jobs. We didn't have a lot to worry about at that time. Those were some carefree days. See, before, when I was just another employee, I was happy, carefree, the guy who hung out in the break room making fun of the boss. Then we have conceited, which means you are too proud of yourself and your actions and abilities. And I think that, well, we can all think of someone who we might describe as uh a little conceited. And that's what I want you to do right now. I want you to think of someone and make an association with this word. And I am thinking about an old colleague of mine from a long time ago who was a great teacher, but typically you don't go around just telling everyone this, and they would sound conceited. And because this is pretty common that someone is acting too proud, there are several other synonyms. You could say arrogant, proud, superior, but this is a great way to build and expand your vocabulary by learning a word like this, conceited. Friends wouldn't like cuz they look up to us. So conceited. You're so conceited. You're like full of yourself. Why are you like that? I'm not saying that to be conceited. Then we have the word rigid, which means stiff or fixed, not able to be bent or moved. And I will try to give you an example of each. So, think about, well, a metal. Uh you could say that it's rigid. You're not able to bend it.

If we're talking about fixed, I think people might be referring to well, something like a set of rules. The teachers' rules were so rigid throughout the year that they were just fixed and and very strict in that case. If we want to say stiff, then I think you're probably describing uh a person and this that they're very stiff, perhaps because they're scared or afraid. We were all so scared of the new boss. We were rigid in our chairs. All right? And you're just very stiff. have any idea how rigid you can be? I have to be rigid to hold things together in the face of Armageddon. Then we have the adjective feeble, which means weak or without energy, strength, or power. And you could use this to describe a person, especially as someone becomes much older. I could say that, well, in the future, like far away in the future, I hope, I will become a feeble and helpless old man. All right? That's probably what will happen in in the distant future. Or perhaps you're describing an institution or government that just does not have much power. Uh I could say it didn't take long to discover that the new government was feeble and corrupt. year, by sheer dumb luck, Jake eked out a feeble victory. And last year, I let the captain win because he's old and sad. So, I hope that I was coherent throughout this lesson and that my explanation was clear and that nothing was ambiguous. But I I will say that uh these words are legitimate, and you will hear them from time to time. So, I think they're very useful when it comes to building your vocabulary. But at the same time, I I don't want to be pushy. I don't want to tell you like, "Oh, you have to learn these words." It's all about just getting that exposure, learning a little bit at a time, and I just hope that you learned something new in today's lesson.

And if you did, please hit that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching, and I will see you next time. So long.

LESSON 158 OF 749

Advanced (everyday) Idioms that You Should Know for 2024

Hello and welcome to today's lesson. We are going to talk about some useful and I think common idioms that you will definitely be able to use in 2024. And this is going to be a quiz lesson. So I want you to participate. I want you to write your answers in the chat or the comments. Let me know that you're actively trying to learn and understand these idioms. And if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. And today I want to improve your well both your mostly your speaking fluency when it comes to using some of these idioms but also your listening comprehension because these are uh phrases that you will hear from time to time. So if you would like to get access to these notes right here, check out the link down below in the description. Join my email community. If you are already a part of it, then check your inbox. I've already sent them to you, but it's a good way to review and just have these idioms um on hand. So, let's begin with our first question. And we're going to start out with a an activity. Complete the idiom. So, I'm giving you part of the idiom. I'm giving you the meaning right here. And what is the idiom that we're talking about to m off some? There are two words missing. And what this means is to do or say something that helps you get rid of, you know, strong feelings or just some pent up energy. So often if you are frustrated, you're you're angry, you may do some activity. I think mostly like a physical activity, exercise, and you just want to m off some.

What do you think? Uh let me know in the chat in the comments. I always love it when when you participate in these lessons. So in in this case, what we're talking about is the following right here. To blow off some steam. you are doing something or I guess it could be again you're saying something just to get rid of that that energy. Most of the time it's something negative and you have this pent up negative energy. You want to release it. You want to blow off some steam. Um, excellent. You could say I see in the chat like let off some steam. I think that that also works. I feel like in this context, it's probably a little more common to say you're trying to blow off some steam or you would like to blow off some steam. But those are some great answers. Excellent. Um, Takaya, Alina, Ava, perfect. Uh, the next one.

Let's uh let's keep moving on. Oh, just to give you some examples as to how this is used in context, I put some news headlines up there for you. Uh, so I'll just read these because I know it's a little small. It says, "Thinking of hitting the gym to blow off some steam. An angry workout is a bad idea, research says." So again, if sometimes somebody's angry, they may want to blow off some steam. The next one, drop the vape. There are other ways to blow off some steam or to blow off steam. And then finally at the at the bottom, looking glass. Every once in a while, a guy has to blow off some steam. Again, you're just getting ready, releasing that uh that energy, those strong feelings. Then we have this one. And for those of you who have uh been in my uh speaking course, some of this is review. We've talked about these expressions, these phrases before. Um, this one been through m and well I'll I'll get to a second but the meaning of it is through many difficult times over a long period and that is the key word over a long period. So uh you're going to use this with Ben. That's why I put it in parenthesis right there. And you would say that two people been through m and m. How would you complete this idiom this expression? And I'm sure you can relate to this. I think this is relevant uh not just this year but any year when you have people these long relationships and you can say uh well done. Excellent. We've been through thick and thin. Nice.

Uh, Far Teao, Annabelle, good to see you. Angela, uh, Miranda, perfect. All right, I'll try to give some shout outs as uh, we go through this, but if you're saying that you you would talk about somebody that you have a a long relationship with, your spouse, maybe a colleague, a family member, and you could say, "Oh, of course, my wife and I, we've been through thick and thin. We've had many good times. We've had difficult times. We've been through thick and thin. And really, this is often used as a standalone statement talking about two or more people have been through thick and thin. So, to give you a little more, I thought this was a fun little picture that I found online talking showing these two cats when they're when they're just young kittens and then when they get older. But these the these would be friends that have been through thick and thin, the good times and the bad times. Cute little image. Then we have this idiom right here. To be in the same what? There's one word missing. You if you are an avid watcher of my video lessons and you've seen some of the vid idiom lessons before, again, some of these are review. It's always good to get a little bit of review. This idiom means to be in the same unpleasant situation as another person. That you and I, we are in the same. And once again, I put the verb to be in parentheses because you're often going to use this with the verb to be. And the answer, the word that we're looking for is to be in the same boat. You are both in some difficult or unpleasant situation. and say, "Yeah, you know, I know how you feel." We're in the same boat. And I feel like anytime this year, if you are also experiencing an unpleasant situation that somebody's telling you about, that's this is what you could say. Yeah, you know, I know how you feel. We're in the same boat.

Great job. Uh, Miranda Muhammad, Lai, excellent, Angela. Well done. Here's the next one. And again, there's just one word missing. M the word. This is an idiom that you would use when you're trying to tell someone that just keep something secret. Often you would say the secret or you would tell someone the secret. And then you're going to use this idiom really just as a reminder that they should keep quiet. Don't tell anyone else the word. And I like this idiom. It's one that I I feel like I end up using from time to time. It's a bit more playful. If you're sharing some secret information, you're say, "Hey, you know, so don't tell anybody the word."

And I I was kind of curious because I haven't taught this idiom before. How many people would recognize it? But if you watch movies or TV shows, this is this is certainly one that you will hear. The the word that's missing is mums. Mums the word. I see some people said like mum. Um Julia Ava. To be a little more specific. You keep it with that apostrophe. S. Mum's the word. Mum's the word. So I tell you a secret.

And if I follow that with, hey, you know, mum's the word. I'm letting you know. Don't tell anybody. This is a secret. Mum's the word. All right. Now, I am giving you a sentence and I'm just the the idiom is the blank right there. And I want you to think about what idiom would fit this context and complete the sentence. And again, I'm giving you the meaning down here. And I think this one is especially important for 2024 and any year beyond. You should take what I say with a you can look at the picture in the background. That's a little bit of a hint. But this means to not completely believe something that you are told because you you think it may unlikely be true or it's not likely to be true.

So what again whether you're listening to me or anybody else online I I think this is a good habit to get into. You want to doubt the things that you hear. You want to check and make sure that the information is true. And I would even tell you yeah you should take what I say with a m and what what's the idiom? I think this is a very common one. And the answer I would say a grain of salt. Take what I say with a grain of salt. What many of you you guys rock that one. Nice. HK Tom uh Angela Annabelle Tayo. So this is the idiom to take something with a grain of salt. Some news or information you hear. You don't necessarily just want to believe everything that you see online, especially if you're on social media.

And I gave you another example down there. Don't believe everything you read on social media. You should take it with a massive grain of salt. And you hear me emphasize that word massive because that is a collocation with this idiom. If you want to emphasize that, okay, you should certainly question what it is that you hear or read, take it with a massive grain of salt. Now, one thing I want to point out that some of you are probably wondering like, "Wait a second. Uh, I saw many people took pinch of salt like, "Yes, Lolly, you're correct." In British English, that is the idiom. So whether you said grain of salt or pinch of salt, both of them are correct. But just so you know, if you're talking about if you're in the US, you could say, "Hey, I think yeah, take it with a grain of salt." If you're traveling in the UK, then say, "Well, I think you should take it with a pinch of salt." Both of them have the same meaning. It's just a slight little difference between American English and British English.

Of course, I gave you the answer, take something with a grain of salt because I am from the United States. But whether you said grain of salt, pinch of salt, both of them are correct. And I saw many many great answers there. We are traveling to new well NYC New York City for New Year's Eve. Um we really for our hotel room. The meaning of this idiom is to pay too much money for something. And really, you're paying more than the fair amount or whatever you think is fair. And you could say you for this thing. This is an idiom that you're often going to follow with that preposition for. You m for something.

You're paying too much, more than the fair amount. And think about the context. You go to New York City, New Year's Eve. the prices are going to go up. The prices for those hotel rooms, they're going to go up a lot and you're going to pay a lot more for the fair the fair price. And that is part of the idiom to pay for something. So, the answer is to pay through the nose. In this case, I'm um talking about actually wait, I think I we really um I made us a little slight mistake. You probably can see that there with the verb tenses. I should said we traveled to New York City for New Year's. Kept it in the past tense. We paid through the nose for our hotel room. Or in this case, we are traveling. That's like the future continuous. We will pay through the nose for our hotel room. Apologize for that.

How about this one? And if those of you who have been in my speaking course, I think you're this is good review. Good review. I should have seen this coming. But you know what they say, and I don't know if I'm giving you enough information there with that context, uh, but it refers to looking back at a situation in the past and you just have a clearer understanding of well, how things could have been different. And I'm using it that first sentence, I should have seen this coming. using that modal of lost opportunity to say that you should have been aware uh that this was going to happen. And it's like you can reflect back and think about something that's already happened and you say, "Well, you know what they say and you're looking back at this situation." I put those glasses there to give you a little bit of a hint, but this is an idiom and expression that may be new. And if it's new for you, that's great. So you could use this if someone's expressing regret and you want to tell them of course the way you you can look back and you see what you should have done or what you should have changed and you could say hindsight is 2020. So 2020 I put those eyeglasses there refers to your vision. And I know in the US I actually I don't know how it is in other countries. you you can let me know. But if you go to the um you know the eye doctor, the optometrist and you get an eye exam and they say you have 2020 vision, it means that you have perfect vision and you can see things clearly. Hindsight is talking about reflecting on the past. So it pretty much means what it says. When you think about the past and things that have already happened, you have a very clear understanding of, you know, how you could have made the situation better or what you should have done. And it's like, of course, yeah, hindsight is 2020.

How did I not see this? So, if this one is new, that's good. Uh, again, I feel like there are many times we express regret throughout the year, and that's why I said it's relevant for this year, even beyond. empathize with someone and say, "Oh, yeah, I know what you mean. Like, I feel the same way, but you know, hindsight is 2020." Or, "Hindsight is always 2020." You could add that adverb of frequency in there as well. Here's another example. I should never have trusted him. There were many warning signs. Okay, again, I'm expressing regret. And somebody else could say, I know, but hindsight is always 2020. All right, you can reflect back and you really know what you should have done in that situation.

Here is the next one. I have not heard uh I've not heard his name before. It doesn't what what is the missing idiom? And basically it means the same as to sound familiar. And you could use that meaning to complete the sentence. I have not heard his name before. It doesn't sound familiar, but instead of saying sound familiar, I can use this idiom instead. I was actually going to give a picture that would be a hint, but I think that would just give it away if I were to Well, I don't again, I don't want to give it away now, even though I feel like everybody's you guys got it. So, the answer, it doesn't ring a bell.

Great job, Loi, Joanne, HK, perfect, Ava. So, if something rings a bell, it just means it sounds familiar. A lot of times, the one thing I want to point out is that you may hear people use this with the negative to say that something does not sound familiar and say, "Oh, it it doesn't that that doesn't ring a bell, right? It doesn't sound familiar. That doesn't ring a bell." So, keep that in mind. That doesn't mean you'll always use it like that, but often you end up using it with the negative. Something doesn't ring a bell. So the other thing that I want to point out, you can see that question like I'm asking uh this like hey does her name ring a bell. You may use this when talking about not just a person's name but just the name of anything. It could be the name of a restaurant and like oh yeah, you know that that doesn't ring a bell. I don't remember the name. So here are some other examples using this in context.

Some news headlines. And that first one, names that ring a bell. Okay, names that sound familiar. Or Robert Dunlop. Does the name ring a bell? He invented something that you probably wrote on this morning. And they're referring to Dunlop uh the tires. I think it's a I don't know. I guess it's a still a well-known uh brand of tires. And in that case, they're like, "Oh, does the name does it ring a bell?" And then finally down here, again, I mentioned using it in the negative. If somebody's asking you if you know of something and you're not really familiar with the name, you could say, "Well, yeah, that it doesn't ring a bell. It just doesn't ring a bell." Good idiom.

Now, I want to challenge you with um a I'm giving you a picture that hopefully you can use to guess the idiom. And I'm giving you a little bit of a hint. I'm not giving you the entire meaning, just one word. That's a hint. So in this case, use this picture. What idiom do you think I'm talking about? And your hint is the word unpleasant. And I really think this picture is exactly what the idiom says. And it's one that you're going to come across in movies, TV shows. Even if you feel like you don't, you know, these idioms don't come up when you're having a conversation. I think they always help your listening comprehension because you will come across them from time to time.

And I think you guys, yeah, maybe this was a little too easy. I think it's going to get a little more challenging. Bite the bullet. Well done, uh, Lai, Annabelle, uh, Muhammad, Julia. Nice. It means to force yourself to do something unpleasant or difficult. Something's unpleasant and you say, "Okay, you know, I just I got to do it. I got to bite the bullet." And here's an example sentence for you. I know you hate going to the dentist, but if your tooth hurts, I think you need to bite the bullet and get it over with. So again, you're talking about a situation that's unpleasant and you say, or somebody might say, um, who's going to do this unpleasant thing? We need we need a volunteer.

Okay, I'll do it. I'll bite the bullet. So again, I think this happens in our everyday lives. We have to do some things that may be unpleasant and we got to bite the bullet. Here's the next one. I said it's going to get a little more difficult. I actually think this one might be even easier. Uh maybe these pictures are are too spot-on. So, you can see what's happening there. And the hint that I'm giving you is the word trouble. So, I don't want to to it away. Um, what what what do you think is the idiom? Trouble. That is the key word. And I'll go ahead and tell you it's not break the ice.

Because again, an ice breaker if we use it as a noun or to break the ice is to kind of again get feel more comfortable in a situation, learn about other people, and you're going to break the ice. So, it's not really related to the word trouble, but uh yeah, I I see what Okay, I'll let you know. The answer is to be on thin ice. You are doing something that is dangerous. It involves risk and you're on thin ice. So, well done. Um Rabbi, Julia, um Farab, sorry if I mispronounced names. Uh Muhammad I You could tell somebody, "Yeah, you're walking on thin ice." That's perfectly fine. Or just use it with the verb to be. Sometimes you may, well, I'll give you the example. I forgot to buy her a birthday present, so right now I'm on thin ice. That I'm in a dangerous or risky position. A lot of times you might use this idiom with your spouse, boyfriend, girlfriend, partner if you are if one person is upset with the other and just say, "Hey, look, you know, you're on thin ice right now that you're about to get into a lot of trouble um if you keep talking." and something that maybe my wife would say to me if I'm causing problems or I'm talking and I probably should shut up. She might say, "Look, okay, hey, just you're on thin ice." So, good idiom, good idiom to know. How about this one? This, I think, is a little more well, it's a little trickier, but again, use that picture. Look at what's going on. the hint the hint that I'll give you the word trends and think about what is happening in this picture. Again, I think the picture really accurately sums up what the idiom is and you would end up using this. Well, I'll go ahead and tell you when talking about trends and you're going to follow a trend. You're going to what the answer well done um Miranda Ava to jump on the bandwagon. So this means to start doing something because it is fashionable, it's popular, it's profitable, and you're going to jump on the bandwagon. Think about trends. people follow trends and it's oh you see somebody else doing it like oh I'm gonna start doing the same thing I'm going to jump on the bandwagon you may al also hear this when people talk about sports teams that's the example that I'm giving you right here once the Yankees the the baseball team in New York once the Yankees started winning many people jumped on the bandwagon and all of a sudden it's like oh that's my favorite team as well and people jump on the bandwagon And then we have this idiom right here.

It has to do with punishment. And look at the picture. What's going on? And you hopefully you can put this one together. This is one that I've talked about in my course as well as I I pretty sure I've done a video lesson with referring to this idiom maybe even more than once. Maybe it it goes to show you that maybe I just like using this idiom. But once again, it's always good to get review and if it's new that that's perfect. So look at the picture what's happening and I think you can kind of start to put it together. So I mentioned I said we're talking about punishment and in this case this person you can see right now here they are facing the music. That is the idiom to face the music. Great job Ava Rabi Lai Miranda Angela well done to accept responsibility for something you have done. And really I'm it's a mistake. You made a mistake. You have to accept responsibility for this mistake even if it means you're going to get punished and you have to face the music. So that's how I'm relating it to punishment. It doesn't always have to it doesn't always mean you're going to get punished, but really it's about accepting responsibility and you're tell someone, okay, yeah, I I have to face the music. All right, I made a mistake. I got to face the music. Or maybe you tell this to someone else. Look, it's better to confess and then face the music if um there's going to be punishment or no punishment. Either way, but you may need to face the music. I'm sure that this is an idiom that uh you're going you will relate to this year because I feel like everybody can associate with this that they we all make mistakes and maybe we don't want to accept responsibility but ultimately we have to face the music. So, here are the idioms. And if I wanted to run through, give you a little quick review. If you want to continue building your vocabulary and just keep learning new things, feel free watch another uh video lesson. It's a great way to blow off some steam. If you have some pentup energy, blow off some steam, watch another lesson because I feel like many of you want to build your vocabulary and it's difficult. It takes time. So in that in that regard, many of you are in the same boat when it comes to learning new words and phrases because the more you come across these idioms, whether it's in one of these lessons or watching a TV show or movie, you're going to think, "Oh, that that phrase, I remember it. That rings a bell and I know what that means." And of course, I hope that

But you know, you don't have to take my word for it. always take what I say and everybody else take it with a grain of salt. Okay, so thank you for joining me. Uh Stephanie, Lai, uh Annabelle, Juliet, it's great to see you to Kyle, uh Oleg, I hope that you have a wonderful day. And of course, I will be back very shortly with another lesson to help you build your vocabulary, improve your grammar, fine-tune your pronunciation. We do a little bit of everything to help you improve your English fluency.

Advanced Adjectives (C2) to Build Your Vocabulary

let's learn some advanced c2 adjectives to help you build your vocabulary and i will be very clear with my explanation and i will not be ambiguous and that's the first word that i want to teach you in today's lesson ambiguous it means having or expressing more than one possible meaning and often this is done intentionally so let's have a look at this image right here is it a rabbit or is it a duck what do you see a rabbit or a duck i could say that this image is ambiguous all right it has more than one possible answer and mostly you're going to use this adjective to refer to something that someone says or perhaps the way that something is worded like a contract i could say the contract is ambiguous and open to interpretation that it may have more than one possible meaning it's ambiguous i'm looking over my text

correspondence with beverly and i don't see anything that would have given her offense nothing's ambiguous i spell everything out then we have complementary so this word has a couple of different meanings the first one is praising or showing admiration for someone i could say that well sometimes you are very complementary about some of my vocabulary lessons and i really appreciate that now the c2 meaning the more advanced meaning for this word it refers to well tickets books or any item that may be given for free especially by a business so in this case i want you to think of a hotel or a flight so if i go to my hotel room i might say oh i was given a complimentary bottle of water all right it was already in the hotel room it's free or on an airplane when you fly you may be offered complimentary snacks

now when it comes to pronunciation very quickly i just want to let you know because i'm from the united states sometimes people will drop that t because it follows the n sound and it's going to sound like complementary okay so complementary or complementary if you're in the u.s hi what's the damage here nothing for the for these free these are complimentary complimentary free whatever you want and if you go ahead and subscribe to the channel and turn on notifications well then you will receive complimentary english lessons and i can become your teacher my name is wes the channel interactive english it's all about helping you practice and improve your english skills and i promise that these lessons will really come in handy and handy is the next adjective that i want to teach you if you say that something is handy it just means that it is useful or convenient mostly i think people are going to use this adjective to talk about items in which they can we'll use for a variety of reasons or just items that are really helpful in a difficult situation you could say wow this is just really handy my wife thinks that her apple watch is pretty handy because she can use it for a variety of things and you can also use this adjective in the idiom to come in handy and if you say that something comes in handy that just means that it's useful oh that's the latest liquid crystal tv very handy indispensable now you will use this adjective when you want to say that something or someone is so useful so good so important that you cannot manage without it or without him or her if we're talking about a person and most of the time you're going to use this as a predicate adjective and it's going to follow the verb to be she is an indispensable part of the team the office should not get rid of the coffee machine it's indispensable busu is an indispensable language learning platform that can help you reach your fluency goals it's indispensable and i want to thank busu for sponsoring today's lesson and i want to tell you how it can help you practice and improve your language skills so busu really comes in handy if you would like to learn english or any of these other languages you can use it on your desktop or as an app on your phone they have different levels that you can choose from but there are really two things that make busu indispensable well at least in my opinion first they offer these bite-sized lessons which makes it easier for you to achieve your goals and i always tell learners to try and get a little bit of exposure to the language each and every day and with busu you can set up a study plan and learn even just 10 minutes a day and complete a lesson it's all up to you the second benefit is that it allows you to practice the four primary language skills like reading and listening to help you build your vocabulary and improve your grammar as well as speaking and writing like this activity right here in which you introduce yourself and then you send that on to the busu community to get feedback which is another cool feature because you're not just learning the language on your own you can connect with other learners from around the world so check out busu with the links below you can sign up and start learning for free and try out busu premium with a seven day free trial it's complementary and i'm serious you should check it out this is a legitimate way to improve your language skills and legitimate is the legitimate you assert that mr rhodes harassed you how do you know he didn't have a legitimate reason to be in your office then there's questionable which means not certain or wrong in some way and questionable it has that able suffix which means you're capable of something in this case it's like you're capable of asking questions is this right or wrong is it good or bad and really yes it implies that something is just it's just wrong so my wife would say that my sense of fashion is questionable and to be honest she's she's right it is questionable uh but you could also say that well something may be ethically questionable is it the right thing to do or you could even refer to the way food tastes and say wow this food it tastes questionable i don't know if it's still good and yeah if food tastes questionable then you probably should not eat it there's a solid chance i may have insulted the owner that doesn't sound like something you do she has very questionable taste next is grim and i probably shouldn't be smiling when i say this adjective because it means worrying and without hope so it's not a good thing if you say something is grim and typically you're talking about the way something looks appears or seems so i could say wow the weather today looks grim i don't think we should go outside or you know to be honest the future of american politics right now it looks grim people are very divided there's a lot of misinformation out there and yeah i think a lot of people would agree that it looks grim son of a bee sting she's turning the entire office against us this is great real grim what are we gonna do the next adjective is coherent this also has two different meanings both of them c2 and the first meaning is referring to an argument plan or idea that is clear and each part connects to each other in a reasonable way so really you're just saying that something is very easy to understand i could tell you that the lawyer made a coherent argument the next meaning refers to someone who you understand what they're saying and in this case i think most of the time people will use this in the negative to say that you don't understand someone i could tell you he's he's not coherent at the moment or i could just use the antonym and say incoherent but just keep that in mind when talking about a person i think often you will use this in the negative to say that someone is not coherent or incoherent you don't hear that loud high-pitched incessant humming coming from the events that is making it impossible for me to think straight let alone string together one coherent sentence dubious and i like this adjective mostly because i just like saying dubious all right that sounds dubious and it means that something is just not completely true or just should not be completely trusted and i i think we can all relate to this one think about email scams and i would get an email with this subject heading congratulations you've been selected and it just it's all it just looks dubious and these are actually legitimate emails that i have received just this past week and i did not open them i did not click on anything because they're dubious it didn't compress the whole thing it should be twice that size i mean 24 gigs that's less than a fourth the file size that seems dubious richard then there's compulsive and this means that you are doing something a lot and you're unable to stop it and this is often used as an attributive adjective which means it's going to come before the noun i could say that my neighbor is a compulsive gambler or my colleague is a compulsive liar and because of the meaning that you're doing something excessively and you just can't stop it really often refers to things that are not good like a compulsive gambler or compulsive liar read it uh personality overview mr stark displays compulsive behavior in my own defense that was last week then we have pushy and this is another adjective that i just like to say pushy but it's also not a good thing because it means that someone is behaving in an unpleasant way by trying too much to get something or to make someone do something so it's not good if somebody's being really pushy and i want you to think of a salesperson they want to sell you something and sometimes they can be very aggressive and you could say that maybe they're being really pushy i could also say that well my wife likes to try new restaurants around town and even if i think that the place is questionable she really wants to go and sometimes she can be a little pushy and even though this adjective is not a good one you can use it among friends or family because i think often we really want someone to do something and yeah i think we can all be a bit pushy from time to time before you go in you fill out comment card okay don't forget the back you people are so pushy what israeli people are pushy then there's carefree which means having no problem and not worried about anything and i think you would often use this to describe a person's uh personality and i could say he is young carefree and just wants to travel the world and i i think we can all relate to this word uh thinking about a different time or a period in our lives where maybe we didn't have much worry and i could say well remember those carefree days back in high school you know we just didn't have we didn't have jobs we didn't have a lot to worry about at that time those were some carefree days see before when i was just another employee i was happy carefree the guy who hung out in the break room making fun of the boss then we have conceded which means you are too proud of yourself and your actions and abilities and i think that well we can all think of someone who we might describe as a little conceited and that's what i want you to do right now i want you to think of someone and make an association with this word and i am thinking about an old colleague of mine from a long time ago who was a great teacher but typically you don't go around just telling everyone this and they would sound conceited and because this is pretty common that someone is acting too proud there are several other synonyms you could say arrogant proud superior but this is a great way to build and expand your vocabulary by learning a word like this conceited friends wouldn't mind because they look up to us so conceited clint you're so cozy it's like full of yourself why are you like that i'm not saying that to be conceited then we have the word rigid which means stiff or fixed not able to be bent or moved and i will try to give you an example of each so think about well a metal you could say that it's rigid you're not able to bend it if we're talking about fixed i think people might be referring to well something like a set of rules the teacher's rules were so rigid throughout the year that they were just fixed and and very strict in that case if we want to say stiff then i think you're probably describing a person and this that they're very stiff perhaps because they're scared or afraid we were all so scared of the new boss we were rigid in our chairs all right and you're just very stiff do you have any idea how rigid you can be i have to be rigid to hold things together in the face of armageddon then we have the adjective feeble which means weak or without energy strength or power and you could use this to describe a person especially as someone becomes much older i could say that well in the future like far away in the future i hope i will become a feeble and helpless old man all right

that's probably what will happen in in the distant future or perhaps you're describing an institution or government that just does not have much power uh i could say it didn't take long to discover that the new government was feeble and corrupt the first year by sheer dumb luck jake eeked out a feeble victory and last year i let the captain win because he's old and sad so i hope that i was coherent throughout this lesson and that my explanation was clear and that nothing was ambiguous but i i will say that these words are legitimate and you will hear them from time to time so i think they're very useful when it comes to building your vocabulary but at the same time i i don't want to be pushy i don't want to tell you like oh you have to learn these words it's all about just getting that exposure learning a little bit at a time and i just hope that you learned something new in today's lesson and if you did please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and i will see you next time so long

Advanced Adjectives to Build Your Vocabulary

today's vocabulary lesson is all about helping you be a little more precise when you are talking about some situation or if you're telling a story these adjectives will help you do just that so as we go through this lesson i'm gonna tell you the adjective i will tell you the meaning i will also try to tell you some nouns that i think these adjectives are commonly used with some collocations and i will also give you an example sentence so that you can see how it's used in context are you ready the first adjective that i have for you is off hand and what this means is little or no preparation so you may hear it used in the context of an offhand comment or an offhand remark somebody says something and it's just offhand it's an offhand comment there is little or no preparation before they say this thing now keep in mind because you are not preparing you are not really thinking about it sometimes offhand remarks can get people in trouble they say something without really thinking about it and then when they do think about it maybe they're like um perhaps i should not have said that that comment i should not have made that remark but because it was offhand well i did i said it and i can't take it back so in that sense it may not be something that that you want to say an offhand comment or offhand remark this adjective also means thoughtless or inconsiderate and in that sense you may hear it being used with the noun manner you could hear somebody talk about another person's off-hand manner it's just perhaps a little insensitive it's inconsiderate the way that this person behaves their offhand manner it makes you want to stay away from this person you don't want to be around them because they're a bit thoughtless my mother made an offhand remark about my boyfriend

the next adjective is forthcoming and this just means that something is about to be made available something is about to appear or maybe it's about to be produced it is forthcoming some kind of event is forthcoming it is about to be produced it is about to appear it is forthcoming it will be here in the future forthcoming you can also use this adjective to describe a person if they are honest and candid this person tells the truth you could say that that he or she is forthcoming they are making the truth available they are honest they are candid the police said that new evidence will be forthcoming then we have the adjective widespread and if something is widespread it means that it is happening in many different places and among many different people now this adjective is very versatile you may find it before the noun and you might hear somebody talk about widespread chaos it's everywhere you can also find this adjective after the linking verb to be and you say that that something is widespread it's happening in many different places for example perhaps you could talk about a disease that is widespread now in both of those examples that i gave you one thing to be aware of is that i think often when you talk about something that is widespread you're talking about something that is negative something that's not good whether it's uh some kind of disaster and there's widespread chaos or like i said you could say that the disease is widespread it's happening everywhere that's not always the case but often i think it is associated with something that is negative when you're referring to something that is widespread there was widespread dissatisfaction with the president and his administration next is straightforward now this adjective has two meanings and usually i think this adjective is going to follow the linking verb to be and you could say that something is straightforward which means that it's not complicated that it's easy to understand the instructions they were straightforward i was able to understand them easily because they were straightforward you can also use it to refer to a person who is honest and tells the truth and you could say you know he or she is straightforward this person straightforward they tell the truth and when they tell the truth they are they're very forthcoming and they tell everything they tell all of it so remember straightforward two different meanings not complicated easy i could say that well your directions they were pretty straightforward i used the map and i could easily find the place because your directions were straight forward or it means honest sincere for example i try to be straightforward with you guys when i tell you about these words and the way in which they are used and the other words that we use them with i really try to be straightforward with all of you i easily put the cabinet together because the instructions were straightforward then we have so-called now this is one of my favorite adjectives again it has two different meanings the first one is just talking about something is named in a particular way for example if you're referring to a group of countries not many countries have nuclear weapons and you could say that the this group of countries they are the so-called nuclear powers they are named in this particular way the other meaning which i think is a little more commonly used when we're talking about so-called and it's also why it's one of my favorite adjectives and the meaning is

it's used to show that a word is not suitable to describe something or someone let me give you some examples he's just a so-called expert so-called expert and if you refer to somebody as a so-called expert it means that well that they should not be called an expert that word should not be used to describe this person or you could say somebody is just a so-called doctor maybe they think of themselves as a doctor but you don't think they're a real doctor you could say well you know she's just a so-called doctor uh it's not the word should not be used for this person it's not suitable for them again when you're using it in this context it's not a compliment you are not being nice to somebody else now with those examples you can see that this adjective will come before the noun when you refer to somebody as like a so-called expert or a so-called doctor or a so-called friend that the adjective will come before the noun so called celebrities and other so-called role models may not have a good influence on children then we have egregious i want to have a quick look at the pronunciation because this word has three syllables and the first and third syllable will have that schwa sound that uh sound agree just that second syllable has the long e sound egregious and egregious it's a great adjective to help you be more specific and precise because what it means is something is really really bad it's shockingly bad and you could say that it is egregious you can also use it before the noun if you want to describe something for example you could say that um this person exhibited egregious behavior that it was really bad or perhaps if you want to use it after the linking verb to be you could say what the government did was egregious it wasn't just bad it was really bad so again instead of using the word bad which i think is very common and possibly even overused you can be more precise more accurate and say that something is egregious if the government is spying on its citizens that is an egregious abuse of power then we have frivolous and this adjective means that that someone is behaving in like a silly or foolish way kind of showing that that this situation is not important that it's not serious and you could refer to it as frivolous for example perhaps you have a couple of people they're they're dating they're seeing each other but you could describe their relationship as frivolous it's a frivolous relationship which means that it's not serious it's not that important they're they're just dating they're having fun but you could say that it is a frivolous relationship so it's often used to describe some sort of situation if you want to say that it's unimportant you could just say it's frivolous the judge decided to throw out the frivolous lawsuit next is excruciating this well it's not a good adjective because it means that you're talking about something that is very painful it's excruciating and i often think of physical pain that you have to go in for some type of operation some type of surgery it was really painful it was excruciating you can often use this adjective with the noun pain and this is a common collocation excruciating pain you could say i got injured playing soccer and it hurt really bad and i was in excruciating pain it was very painful excruciating he was in excruciating pain after twisting his ankle

next is noxious let's look at the pronunciation quickly this adjective has two syllables that first syllable that knock and then shuffs that schwa sound you hear that in the second syllable noxious and what it means is something that is harmful something that is poisonous and you could use it to describe some noxious fumes if there is some kind of gas a noxious gas in the air it is poisonous it's harmful you could say it is noxious be careful do not confuse this adjective with the word nauseous because that's describing the way somebody feels if they feel nauseous they feel sick this is a different word it is a different adjective noxious is harmful poisonous for example a noxious gas we're trying not to breathe the noxious fumes from the bus then we have inveterate so this adjective means that something is done as a habit and in that case it's not likely to change often we use this adjective to describe a person and you could say that someone is an inveterate gambler that they are always gambling it's not going to change they are an inveterate gambler or maybe a person is an inveterate liar that they are always doing this it is a habit that they always lie they are an inveterate liar again i think that you would often use this adjective that you were saying something about this person that is probably negative whether it's talking about somebody who is an inveterate gambler an inveterate liar that you are using it to describe a person in a negative way because they do some they have some kind of bad habit that they can't break in veteran she has been all over the world because she's an inveterate traveler then we have nefarious and this adjective means that something is morally bad we use it to describe some kind of situation or perhaps even a person that is morally bad and i say morally because it's to show that the person who's doing this thing they know better they know that it's wrong and you could say that well because of that this thing is nefarious i often think it follows the linking verb to be and you'd say that something is nefarious but you can use it before a noun as well for example you could say that well he had a nefarious plan to steal from the company that he was going to steal from the company and the plan was nefarious it was morally wrong this person knew better it was nefarious the grinch had a nefarious plan to steal christmas

next is the adjective preposterous and this just means that something is it's ridiculous it's absurd so often i think it's used in the sense that somebody would just say that's preposterous they're they're talking about a situation they're describing it as ridiculous and you would hear them saying that's preposterous or you can say that if you want to describe something that you think is absurd and just say well you know that's preposterous somebody tells you something that you can't believe you think it's crazy it's absurd you can just say you know that's preposterous you think i ate the sausage that's preposterous now even though these adjectives may not be well widespread that you are going to hear everybody use them every single day the reason they are not widespread is because they are a little more advanced they are more specific it is to help you be more specific when you're describing a person or describing some situation so i want you to go out and practice using them that is my request that's what i want you to do and i don't think that this request is absurd it's not preposterous i want you to go out practice them or at least try to identify them when you are listening to a podcast or you are watching a tv show or you're reading a book see if you can try to pick them out because again as you're able to continue getting exposure to these words it's going to help you remember their meaning so that you can use them confidently and correctly the next time you are having a conversation that's all for now keep up the good work and i will see you next time

LESSON 161 OF 749

Advanced Adjectives to Describe Personality & Behavior

welcome to today's lesson in which i want to teach you some useful and advanced adjectives that you can use to describe people and this is a great lesson because well we talk about people all the time we describe ourselves we also talk about our friends our families our colleagues so these are useful adjectives that you can use mostly to talk about the way people act or behave so many of these adjectives really describe someone's personality

now when we use adjectives often we might use them before the noun in which case they are called attributive adjectives or they might follow a linking verb in which case they are a predicate adjective as we go through these i will tell you which ones i think are more common as an attributive adjective before the noun or those that i think are more commonly found in the predicate and would follow a linking verb so i'm going to do a few things throughout this lesson i will tell you the meaning of the adjective i will then talk a little bit about how it's used and then give you some example sentences so that you can really see how it's used in context so let's begin with overzealous this is a great adjective which means that someone is showing a little too much eagerness or enthusiasm almost to the point where well you find it a little strange that they are this eager or they're this enthusiastic about something so you could describe that person as being overzealous so this is an adjective that you can use either before a noun or it can follow a linking verb either one so you might describe people and say somebody has overzealous parents they're showing a lot of enthusiasm for their kids their yeah her parents are very overzealous perhaps perhaps when when our little girl gets older maybe maybe i will be an overzealous parent and i will be so enthusiastic about everything she does or maybe you have some overzealous colleagues that anything that happens they're always enthusiastic perhaps they're always eager to do things and you might think well they're a little overzealous i imagine that you guys are overzealous students that you are so excited to build and learn new vocabulary during the concert some overzealous fans ran onto the stage

next is tenacious this adjective means that somebody is just not giving up perhaps stubbornly that they just absolutely refuse to give up even though maybe maybe they should now when i think of this word i actually think it's used in more of a positive manner when you describe somebody as tenacious and they are not giving up they refuse to give up they're being very stubborn but they should keep going it is a good thing that they don't give up in that sense if you want to say you know well you know she is a tenacious student she refuses to give up no matter how difficult it is she's tenacious even though he's short he always gives a tenacious effort then we have candid and if you say that someone is candid then basically you're just saying that this person is truthful and that they are honest so we can use this adjective and describe someone and say that they are a candid person or perhaps they give a candid response to a question personally i think it's maybe more common to follow the linking verb to be and you would describe somebody that he is candid or she is candid they are truthful and honest and if you're describing somebody in that way it's almost like you're trying to say well this person can be believed we can trust this person because they are candid and they give candid responses and i guess i just i'm just gonna keep using the word candid again and again so that it helps you remember the meaning this candid photo shows some of the poor living conditions surrounding the city

next is facetious and this is one of my favorite adjectives now the first thing that i want to point out is the pronunciation because looking at this adjective it may not be pronounced the way that it's spelled facetious that first syllable is going to have that schwa that pha and we're just basically going to pronounce the letter c facetious and what it means is that somebody is joking and they're not being serious and perhaps in an inappropriate way in a in a sense they should be serious but they're joking around they are being facetious and i think it's commonly used just like that that in some kind of situation you're talking to somebody else and you're joking with this person perhaps they don't know about it and you have to tell them and say look i'm being facetious i'm joking i'm not being serious so that is a phrase that that you might often hear with this word somebody actually having to tell the other person say wait i'm being facetious or maybe you could say that of another person if somebody doesn't understand that this person is joking you say well look he's being facetious she's being facetious they are joking they're not being serious they're being facetious sometimes it's hard to take my boss seriously because he's always being facetious then we have the word obtuse now this is not a good adjective you don't want to be called obtuse because what it means is that somebody is lacking in intelligence and maybe they're a bit slow to understand and you would often use it with the linking verb to be and say that someone is obtuse that they are slow to understand and you could describe that person and say yeah you know he's a bit obtuse he's slow to understand he doesn't he's not a very smart person they're obtuse or if there's a situation and

somebody it's like they don't want to hear the truth and they're trying to deny it and they don't want to listen and you could say well they are being obtuse that they refuse to believe what is obvious what is sensible but they just don't want to believe it they're being obtuse sometimes my uncle can be so obtuse he refuses to listen to anyone

next is the word boorish and again this it's not a great adjective you don't want to be referred to as a boorish person because it means that someone is rude or insensitive and often i think it's used before the noun behavior and this is a commonly used collocation and you might describe somebody's behavior as boorish their boorish behavior it's rude it's insensitive they may exhibit boorish behavior keep in mind that this adjective is unrelated to the word boring that is a very common adjective but they have different meanings if somebody is boorish they are rude or insensitive boorish behavior his boorish behavior caused me to hang up on him then we have jittery and this is another great adjective and it's it's used to describe someone who is nervous and they are unable to relax often i think it's used as a predicate adjective and you'd say someone is jittery so there is probably some kind of situation that would make someone nervous they're unable to relax and you could describe them as jittery perhaps they have to give a very important presentation and before the presentation you can say wow you know he's really jittery it's also used in a situation that if somebody just they're unable to relax because they want to leave for example i have been in some very long teachers meetings in my life and the meetings just go on and on and on and i just i don't want to sit there anymore and i start to get jittery i start moving around i start shaking my legs and i just i want to get out of there i can't relax i'm jittery the boy was so jittery he had a tough time staying seated then we have capricious now with this one again let's first look at the pronunciation that first syllable has the schwa sound that uh sound and then the pri is just pronounced as pre capricious capricious and what this means is that someone or something is impulsive or unpredictable so you could use this adjective and say that well the weather is capricious it's unpredictable you don't know what's going to happen or if you describe a person as capricious it makes me think of somebody who maybe they make a decision and then they change their mind almost immediately and want to do something else and then they change their mind again and want to do something completely different you could say that they are capricious or maybe a person is a capricious shopper capricious shopper capricious shopper that's hard to say capricious shopper capricious shopper capricious shopper i actually would just say that that person is capricious that they are impulsive they are unpredictable and you might describe them as capricious because of his capricious nature he couldn't commit to chewing just one thing then we have the adjective gullible and this just means that a person is easily persuaded to believe something essentially they just believe whatever you tell them they are gullible it often follows that verb to be and i think we've all met people before in our lives who are pretty gullible whatever you tell them they just believe you so this is a great example of when if you are being facetious they are not going to understand that you're joking they will believe you because they are gullible and then you would have to tell them look i'm being facetious i'm not being serious i think it's also used to describe somebody in a temporary situation because let's be honest we've all been gullible at one point or another so in that case i think of perhaps somebody is trying to trick somebody else or maybe there is some sort of scam and you for some reason you fall for it you're not thinking clearly you could say you know i you know i was just gullible i don't know why i believed this thing but i did i was gullible i couldn't believe i fell for this internet scam i was so gullible then we have adamant and this adjective means that a person is refusing to change their mind or be persuaded often i think this adjective is followed by the preposition about you are adamant about something that you just refuse to believe anything else and often i think of maybe some sort of cause that a person is fighting for they are very passionate about this cause and you could say they are adamant about this thing i am adamant about protecting the environment uh i am adamant about teaching you guys vocabulary i refuse to believe that you will not learn and build your vocabulary i am adamant about teaching it to you i think we can all think of different things that we are adamant about that we just want this thing to happen we won't be persuaded otherwise you are adamant about something the doctor was adamant she have surgery immediately then we have feckless and this is used to describe a person who is weak or ineffective and just really lacking in the strength of character that this person is feckless and i think it might be also used to describe somebody's personality or their traits for example you might say that someone is a feckless leader they are an ineffective leader because they lack that strong character they are feckless coach's feckless leadership led the team to their worst record in school history so i want to be honest i want to be candid with you that when you are building your vocabulary i hope that two adjectives that i could use to describe you would be overzealous that you are just eager to learn new words and that that you're tenacious too that you are not going to give up for whatever reason so that is what i hope for and i am absolutely not being facetious when i say that i'd also like you to do a little bit of an association trick right now when you hear these adjectives which person do you think of you can probably think of someone that that adjective describes so for example if i just say the word jittery who are you thinking about in your life try to associate these words with somebody that you know because that's going to help you better remember the meaning and actually retain that information and you won't forget it so i want you to go out use these adjectives when you're talking about other people or even talking about yourself that's all for right now i will see you guys next time

LESSON 162 OF 749

Advanced Adjectives to Impress Your Friends | Build Your Vocabulary

let's talk about some advanced adjectives that you can use to impress your friends like this one so called so you would use this word to say that that you think that a word that's used to describe a person or a situation is just not suitable or it's not correct so if somebody it could be a little bit of an insult if somebody were to say to me and say well wes is a so-called teacher in that case it's like you think that the word teacher is not suitable to describe me and yeah i wouldn't like that but you could hear somebody say that another person is a so-called expert that you think the word expert is not suitable for this person superheroes in new york these so-called heroes have to be held responsible for destruction done to the city someone could even argue that these are so-called advanced adjectives because

maybe maybe you might not think they're advanced because you know many of them but i guarantee you will learn something new in this lesson and i also say that you can use these adjectives to impress your friends because they are more informal words that you can use in casual conversation like this next one which is messed up and i'm not talking about the phrasal verb to mess up to make something dirty or untidy i'm talking about using this as an adjective which has a couple of different meanings so if we're using this to talk about a person it means that well someone is unhappy or just emotionally confused if we were to say that somebody had a messed up childhood perhaps it was an unhappy childhood i mean he's messed up look at him you gotta figure his family life's a disaster now if we're talking about like just some situation then this adjective could be used to to say that it's just wrong bad or full of problems and you might hear somebody say something like wow that's messed up i just cannot believe that happened that's messed up they had someone else lip-sync her part and she never got credit for it that's messed up maybe i i'm always asking you to subscribe to the channel and turn on notifications and if you have not done that yet i could say wow that that's messed up i can't believe it now to be honest i i really don't think that's messed up it's okay if you have not subscribed i'm just giving you an example but in case this is your first time here my name is wes the channel is interactive english it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and if that is what you would like to do then yes you can subscribe if you want it's not messed up if you don't the next word is cocky and this is an adjective that you could use to describe a person and it means that that someone is very confident but really in a slightly annoying way and i think this is a word that we can all relate to because i i think you would often use it when people are competitive and you you think you're better than somebody else and you're just being competitive and yeah we can all act a little cocky from time to time when i saw you that wedding i knew we'd be having dinner together well aren't you cocky then we have dope and if you say that something is dope it just means that you think it is very good or cool and mostly i think younger generations would use this word but people my age and even older they they also use it and a collocation with this adjective you could say that something is pretty dope and i hope that you think these lessons are pretty dope and if you do you can let me know by hitting that like button now speaking of things that are dope i have a pretty dope opportunity that i would like to share with you because if one of your new year's resolutions is to dramatically improve your english skills then you should check out the lingoda language sprint this is going to be a two month language sprint and if you successfully complete it you can get up to 100 cashback and i say that this is a dope opportunity for two main reasons first you can improve a lot in a short period of time because this is an intensive language challenge you will take a lot of classes and second these classes are affordable and you can get your money back which is pretty dope now you have two challenges to choose from you can take the super sprint challenge in which you will take 30 classes a month for two months and if you attend all those classes you can get 100 cash back or you can take the sprint challenge in which you will take 15 classes a month for two months and if you attend all those classes you can get 50 cash back you must sign up for the language sprint by february 1st because classes are going to begin on february 11th and i can honestly tell you lingoda it is a great school for learning a language i have even studied with them you can see me right there taking a class in spanish and i really enjoyed the classes because lingoda has experienced teachers teaching an interactive curriculum these are small my code was 2022 to get your discount let's get back to those advanced adjectives we just talked about dope so let's go in the opposite direction and the next word that i have for you is lame and and this has a couple of different meanings the first one is that it can mean that something is weak and and undeserving of being believed so in this case you're probably talking about an excuse or an argument and you would use this adjective with those words a lame excuse or a lame argument limited seating i am just one tiny person yeah but she doesn't know that limited seating oh that is such a lame excuse it can also mean uninspiring or boring and you could describe something well maybe like a meeting and say well the meeting was lame we didn't learn anything it was just lame you know they say a scent can make a memory come alive

so i made one of him it's lame i'm no it's not lame out of whack i i really like this phrase it means that something is not working properly mostly because well like the natural balance has been upset so think about your your body has like a natural balance but if something is off if something is not working properly then you could say yeah my my body's just all out of whack or maybe i could say the public transportation is all out of whack today because of the bad weather that it just it just upset that natural balance and things are not working it's all out of whack what was the matter with it your variable tuna was out of whack wow and you fixed it then we have the word woke and this is an adjective that i think has become more and more popular over the years especially in a place like the united states and what it means is really just

well aware and mostly it refers to awareness of social problems such as racism or inequality and the one thing i want you to know is that you you may hear people use this word in either a positive way or a negative way so if i were to say like oh yeah we need to be a bit more woke when it comes to some social issue that's more of a positive way of using this adjective now others may talk about like woke people or woke culture and they're they're using in a way in which they're saying that well they don't care for it that they think it's too much so just be mindful as to how someone is using this word we're tapping the keg at nine with the keg's consent of course he is so woke next is an adjective that i really like and that is ballsy and what it means is brave or or determined and you could say that well that this was a ballsy move or a ballsy request but most of the time i i think you're going to use this word describing a person perhaps i could say wow my my colleague is just so ballsy they're not afraid to talk back to the boss she's spontaneous she's ballsy she has no clue what she's doing and she doesn't care and then we have jaded this is a good word it means that you you just don't have interest or you're losing interest because you've experienced something too many times and often you may use this adjective with some verbs like you you feel jaded or you have become jaded those are those are some common collocations and i i also think that you're more likely to use this adjective with things that are maybe typically work related you've experienced it a lot and then you just

you start to become jaded had i become so jaded that i didn't even recognize romance when it kissed me on the lips next is moody which is an adjective you can use to describe a person it means that their mood can suddenly change and they become upset or angry well perhaps for a variety of reasons and i think this would be more well talking about a temporary state that it's not permanent something happens and just somebody yeah they're acting a bit moody maybe they they didn't eat breakfast in the morning and they become a little moody or perhaps they they didn't sleep much at night i know when i don't get a lot of sleep yes i i can be a little moody it's just her psycho fans that get all crazy right the moody junior hi girl moody you call this moody then we have legit and really this is just an informal word that's been shortened it just means legitimate so instead of saying legitimate you would just say legit is something allowed by law is it reasonable is it acceptable and perhaps you're talking about some situation and you want to know well is this okay you might ask look is this is this legit should we be doing this is this legit no way is this legit well it's a legit threat but it's definitely not from the real black hood the next adjective is clingy and this is used to describe a person who really just sticks on to someone else or or something else and often i think you would use this to talk about somebody that you you really do have a relationship with that you know pretty well maybe your your friend is a little clingy or your co-worker is clingy or maybe even uh your partner can be clingy children children can certainly be clean basically everything we know guys hey it'll be touchy clingy yeah then we have feisty and i say it like feisty it means like active and and full of determination and i i kind of said it like this because i think it somewhat has a negative connotation and people may use this adjective referring to somebody else who's kind of like fighting back or or talking back or just they're willing to push back you could describe that person as just feisty it's called your band of karate thugs or i'm going to the police got it you're advised you want but i like that i like it then we have ballen and and yes you you would probably spell it like this with with the apostrophe it's very informal so it's it's going to be an adjective you would use more in spoken english and will definitely hear in in movies and tv shows you're here to join me all these japanese businessmen in the car kinky kinky and then i thought i would wrap things up with an informal adjective from the uk one one that i like and that is cheeky and if you say that well someone is cheeky it means that they're like slightly rude or not showing respect but really in a humorous way and this is an adjective you are probably not going to hear in the united states but i really like this one so i wanted to share it with you including respect for elders and the like i cheeky

now let's do a little review because when it comes to these video lessons i hope that you are clingy i hope that you just want to to hold on to them and stick to them and watch them again and again and keep learning new things because well these lessons are legit i think you're going to learn a lot and i really don't think you will ever get jaded because the lessons they're not lame they are dope and i know that right now just hearing me say this i'm sure i sound very cocky and i wanted to give you a quick little review it's always good to to practice uh the things that we just learned so if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and i will see you next time so long

Advanced American Idioms | LIVE QUIZ LESSON

everyone welcome to today's lesson uh my name is wes this is interactive english and the channel it's it's just all about helping you practice and improve your english skills if this is your first time here please let me know in the comments in the chat love hearing from new people and i also enjoy uh hearing from people who regularly watch our videos as well uh great to see so many familiar faces i have i think it's a fun lesson and it's a useful lesson especially for your comprehension so i'm going to talk to you about idioms we're going to talk about some advanced idioms and i put the um the flag from the united states because i think these are idioms that people will use in the u.s that that does not mean that they're only used in the united states i think many of these idioms are pretty common across all english varieties if you're talking about british english or in canada australia south africa i think many people may use these idioms but the reason why i say they're advanced is because they're not um they are a little more difficult i think the meaning of these idioms are very different from their individual words and the way that we're going to do this is we're going to practice i'm going to give you it's it's kind of a quiz lesson so i'm going to give you some questions and i want you to try to answer and think about the the idiom in english and it this is going to be challenging it will be difficult i hope that you learn some new idioms today and the one thing i want to say is this will be very helpful for your comprehension i'm i'm teaching you these idioms not so that oh i have to go out there and use them if you can if you find yourself in the appropriate situation that's great but i think it's really useful for your comprehension because you will hear these idioms from time to time if you're in a conversation or watching a movie tv show listening to a podcast or an audio book these are idioms that you may hear and it's really helpful for your conversation so this will be challenging i'm just going ahead and throw that out there uh i want to give some quick hellos to uh people that are here with me hello lollygatrudist uh great to see some members excellent um bombas and nat karina uh arafan takayo hey takayo how are you um and i i want you guys to participate throughout this lesson and i will give you some questions give you a moment to think about the answer and then of course i will tell you the answer so let's go ahead and start and we're going to practice with some of these idioms the first way that we're going to do this is i'm going to give you the meaning of the idiom and then i'm going to give you a picture that to kind of help you out and i want you to just write the idiom what idiom am i talking about in english so the the first one is this right here to do or say something that lacks evidence or support and you see the picture use that picture hopefully it'll help you again i know this is difficult i know this is challenging but just bear with me and i will show you the idiom and then the meaning as well so you can kind of think about it but if you're thinking about like you're you're saying something that lacks evidence or support often i think people will use this idiom at the beginning of a sentence when they want to make a guess about something all right and the picture there is well you see a bird that is out on a limb the key word there is limb that's what i was hoping that you would think of but i i know that that that may be very difficult because the idiom that i'm talking about is to go out on a limb and if you say that you're going to like go out on a limb you're saying something or doing something that lacks evidence let me give you uh more of an explanation i told you that somebody would use this when they're about to maybe make a guess they don't really have much evidence but they're going to make a guess and they'll say i'm going to go out on a limb and say that and then they share their opinion i'm going to go out on a limb and say that he was lying all right i don't have evidence but i'm going to suggest that and you'd say i'm going to go out on a limb all right so that's a good idiom um that's a good idiom to learn you go out on a limb you're saying something not with much evidence and remember i think it's mostly it's often used in that context people would say well i'm going to go out on a limb and say whatever guess it is all right excellent um i hope some of you got that one let's look at this one the next one hopefully this is a little easier i think the picture um you could probably perhaps guess it a little more so is to greatly annoy or upset someone use that picture think about what's happening in the picture there's a car driving and there is a what what is that those are bricks but i was trying to go for a wall all right so think about what

edm that would be in english if you are uh greatly annoying someone or perhaps you're upsetting uh this person you could say that this person is what excellent uh i'm a uh anna perfect we're talking about driving someone up the wall to drive someone up the wall means that you are well you're very annoyed and you would say that uh like i said you could um say this person is driving me up the wall so if somebody is driving you up the wall then they are annoying you um and upsetting you excellent uh [Music] we have uh voice uh ramon excellent i'll try to get in as many shout outs as i can and again if you're just joining us we are doing a little bit of an idiom quiz and these are more advanced idioms and i think it's definitely a little more advanced in the way that i'm trying to quiz you on these so again i'm giving you the meaning when someone is so frustrated or annoyed they can no longer cope or they can no longer deal with this situation and you would describe this and somebody would they would say this idiom right here and it that's what it means and use this picture uh to help you guess what the idiom is that's a picture that's a rope all right um so i just told you it's a rope that is part of the idiom so think about that hopefully that may help you especially if you've heard this idiom before um you some you're frustrated you can no longer cope excellent yes uh ramon uh sid what somebody would say is that they are at the end of their rope so so if i were to tell you i'm at the end of my rope it means that i'm so frustrated i can no longer deal with this situation and often i think people may use this if you're maybe having an argument or a disagreement with somebody you're very frustrated uh perhaps parents with children they're they're very frustrated with their children and you could say they they can't cope they'd say uh i'm i'm at the end of my rope so it's in that case people might use it as kind of a warning that if you're frustrated with somebody and you're telling them look i'm at the end of my rope that you're you're really about at this point that you're no longer to cope excellent um so are you ready uh these are some other good i see some other good and uh idioms guesses that people are using here's another one and then i'm gonna switch it up the way that i'm asking you this so here's the the meaning of the idiom and there are some pictures to help you so if uh you are talking about personal issues in front of other people that are not involved so really if you're talking about your personal issues that in front of other people and you don't need to be doing this what would you how would how would you describe that situation you have a picture right there of laundry all right dirty laundry so that that is your clue that is your hint uh dirty laundry and people are talking about their issues in front of other people and i think often people would use it to tell somebody not to do this so perhaps you're at a party with a group of people and you're talking maybe you're having a little bit of an argument with your friend your boyfriend girlfriend husband wife and you you start talking about your personal issues your relationship whatever and the other person i say look we don't need to let's let's not do this let's not do this so often um you may use this with the negative excellent um we have some excellent uh mzz uh you guys are close uh michael perfect the the idiom is to air out one's dirty laundry to air out your dirty laundry is if you are talking about your personal issues in front of other people and like i said i think you would think somebody's in a group and two people are talking and somebody is really they're talking about their personal issues with maybe this other person and they say look let's let's not air out our dirty laundry or you don't need to air out your your dirty laundry um excellent yes so you i think you might hear it used with that word let's like let's not air out our dirty laundry we don't need to do this stop airing out your dirty laundry excellent uh maggie perfect how are you excellent great to see you uh so those are again a couple of idioms that we've talked about so far so i've given you uh to go out on a limb you're kind of saying something without evidence we can also drive someone up the wall which makes them a little crazy you if you want to say that you can no longer cope you're at the end of your rope and uh to air out your dirty laundry is talking about your personal issues so now we're gonna switch it up i have some more idioms for you uh but the way that i'm going to do it this time now i'm i'm going to give you uh like a conversation and i'm gonna give you a blank so i'm gonna give you the context and then i'm gonna give you one word which uh is a hint to what the idiom is so let me show you that will be a better way to explain it so think about here's this situation right here one person there's a blank because this person is using the idiom the key word is speak so this that word is part of the idiom and the other person says hey tom we were just talking about you so think about what what idiom might this person be using it's really um it's kind of it's an expression that people would use in english to when this situation occurs and i think we can all relate to this situation so what is what's this first person saying right here you know the situation somebody tom this guy he just arrived and they were just they were just talking about him and you would say this excellent um julio lulu perfect um ramon julie uh gertrudis lolly i think i i think you may have heard this uh expression before speak of the devil

so i told you i think we can all relate to it we're having a conversation talking about somebody that person just arrives or perhaps they call and you could say speak of the devil which refers to it's used informally in speech to say that a person was being talked about and then they suddenly appear they appear or it could be like a phone call that their their presence is felt excellent the next one that i have for you is this and this one i think is a little more it's not as common but i it's good again it's good for your comprehension i told you guys i think this if anything the expectation is not that you're going to learn these and just go out and start using them but so that you understand them if you happen to hear them uh in another conversation or movie tv show so they say i understand it's a big risk

but we need to that's the idiom the key word that i'm giving you is caution so you the the context is they're going to take some risk and they're following it up with this idiom what idiom am i talking about keyword is caution all right so excellent uh ramon very very quick on that answer perfect uh ahmed yes the answer is to throw caution to the wind if you're saying that you're going to throw caution to the wind it's basically saying that you're going to you're not going to be careful and in that situation if there's something that's a risk then perhaps you're not going to be careful and you would throw caution to the wind so to throw caution to the wind to give you the meaning is to behave in a way that is not considered sensible or careful to throw caution to the wind all right now let's look at this next one here's another conversation that these um these three ladies are having she says i need your help finding my ring so the ring is lost it's so valuable to me and then she would say this idiom right here so based on this context this situation i need your help they're looking for this ring that well that's what i was going to say they're going to look for it the ring is lost they're going to look for it it's very valuable it's very important to her and before they start looking for the ring perhaps she uses this idiom right here um so what do you think uh this one this context i it's you well i don't want to give you i don't want to give you the meaning i told you that i was just going to try to give you an example uh of a situation and the key word is stone

all right so what phrase would you say it's an idiom and you would tell somebody this stone and well it's using the word stone and you're trying to find it all right you need to find this um all right you guys are close um close it's more of a command so think of it that way you're going to tell somebody a command using stone i think ahmed mcc you guys were close but the idiom that i'm referring to is when you would tell somebody leave no stone unturned so most of the time i think you're going to you hear it as a command if you're telling a group of people or another person to look for something carefully really look hard and say look everywhere leave no stone unturned so in this situation i was trying to think that well the ring is valuable it's very precious they're going to look for it and she might say leave no stone unturned it means to do everything you can to achieve a good result but i think it's it's typically used in the context of looking for something you're trying to find it and you would leave no stone unturned this could be an example as to when you might hear this perhaps you're watching some tv show that involves uh the police and a criminal and they're looking for the criminal they're looking for the thief and they need to find this person and they may tell the group of police officers leave no stone unturned we need to find uh the thief the next one that i have for you again is this situation um this this person right here saying i don't want to hear a long explanation please just what and then that's that's the idiom the key word is chase okay so think about it again think about the situation what do you think the idiom uh the english idiom is and maybe maybe you've heard of it maybe you haven't again i hope that that you are learning some new idioms right now that's what i hope and i don't expect you to remember all of them i think when it comes to idioms it's just good to get exposure it's good to become a little bit familiar with them because over time as you're listening to music podcasts watching tv you get that exposure to the language you're just going to hear these idioms and then you'll be able to remember them well i think you guys wow you guys rock this one okay so i don't want to hear a long explanation please just cut to the chase all right excellent i gotta give some shout outs there um excellent muthalite anna julio uh anawat chris stella trying to find some new names i haven't said abraham uh mike perfect so uh gertrudis maggie cut to the chase it means that you're you're telling somebody quick like come to the point what are you trying to say what are you trying what point are you trying to make cut to the chase all right so we've had uh let me back up and review some of these so the this last part we've talked about speak of the devil i told you that it's used informally to say that some somebody suddenly appears and then you could use this phrase and typically it's used as a standalone phrase somebody well speak of the devil and then maybe you start talking about um you just start having a conversation or if you want to throw caution to the wind you're behaving in a way that's not careful and somebody might throw caution to the wind or to leave no stone unturned i said that you're looking for something and and you want to have that good result and you might again use it as a command and you're telling a group of people we need to find this thing leave no stone unturned and we just talked about this cut to the chase i think this is a common one because uh sometimes like i'm i'm a person that may not come directly to the point and somebody would say this to me like wes just cut to the chase all right tell us tell us what you're thinking all right so i i have more idioms for you again i want to keep going a little more practice but i'm trying to switch it up in the way that we're practicing these and now it's going to be even a little more difficult so uh this time i'm going to give you um i'm going to give you the situation and i want you just to listen to what i'm saying listen to the situation and then i may give you a key word that has that that the idiom has and you can try to guess it okay so in this first one uh it's talking about a situation in that somebody is not speaking directly all right and maybe another person is just saying look just tell me what's on your mind please cut to the chase give it to me straight and they might be telling this person stop stop doing this thing and that's the idiom stop all right stop speaking indirectly instead of saying that they're going to use this idiom and say stop what just give it to me straight stop what so the idiom is really when um somebody is speaking indirectly

but i told you that i think it's used when you people may use this when you're telling another person to stop doing that and they say don't do like stop doing this um and you guys wow excellent uh stella julie um ramon chris you guys got it to beat around the bush so if somebody's doing that again i tend to do that and not come and somebody would say wes cut to the chase stop beating around the bush just just say whatever it is you want to say so i think that's a good way to remember it and a good way to kind of listen for it somebody might tell another person stop beating around the bush you need to speak uh directly excellent uh yes gettrudus lolly perfect um maggie you guys rock that one so let me give you another situation and i'll give you another word that the idiom has so this situation um you're going to do something for another person perhaps you're going to get a birthday present for your friend and then you talk to your other friend and they say oh i have the perfect present for for this person um i'm going to get them [Music] some shirt that they always wanted and your friend says well i already bought that shirt i already i'm going to give i already uh i'm already giving that birthday present so you have to find somebody else and you say oh no you did what so it's kind of like they they took your idea a little bit and if you want to use an idiom that they've taken your idea and it's maybe a good idea and now you cannot get sick you cannot have success you're not gonna get praise for this great idea you'd say well that person did what and think of the word steel that would be the key word that i'm going to give you in this context in this situation so if somebody they they took your idea for a birthday present and you say oh my goodness you stole what all right and i think this is a good idiom i think it is a little i guess you could say it's fairly common um but again the meaning is very different from the individual words yes excellent uh sid anna uh gary uh sorry i've mispronounced names i'm talking about the idiom to steal someone's thunder so in that context that situation that i gave you right here um these people are talking and this person says i was going to get her that same birthday present you totally stole my thunder you took like my idea so in this case it's not something that is really you're kind of just saying that maybe playfully perhaps it wasn't planned so maybe there's not they're not going to be angry but perhaps if you could talk about a situation which would make somebody angry if somebody steals your idea at work and they take all the credit they get all the praise and you say this person they stole my thunder so to steal someone's thunder is you are preventing them from um that praise or that success to steal someone's thunder i think i showed you guys the the last one yes to beat around the bush you're avoiding talking to someone i think most people do it because it's unpleasant or it's difficult to talk about so they might beat around the bush um we just talked about steel one's thunder let me give you uh another situation um the next one so this would be a situation in which think about you are competing in some kind of competition and before the competition begins the the rules change and because of that you are surprised you're confused you're you don't know what to do and i could say wow this really what and the key word that i would give you is loop all right think about that situation that i just described with if the idiom has the word loop in it so if something if if something confuses you it distracts you um and i gave you that situation about perhaps somebody changing the rules at the last minute and you're telling somebody well that really what and the idiom has the word loop in it okay so i told you again this is definitely um it's definitely an advanced quiz because now i'm just you're really just having to listen to me give you the information and then try to figure it out all right uh yes um irvin excellent some of you are very close um what i'm talking about what you would say is this here's the situation at the last minute they changed the rules of the competition and it really threw our team for a loop

so if something throws you for a loop it kind of it confuses you to the point where it's like well maybe you you don't know what to do so i know some of you had mentioned that you're out of the loop that is another idiom but if somebody is out of the loop it means that they are unaware of some information in this case you are aware of the information but it just confuses you it distracts you and you you don't know what to do you could say it it threw me for a loop and typically i think you would use it in a situation in which you are you are temporarily unfocused and you're not sure what to do and then you you refocus and you're able to in this case like you're able to compete in the competition and you're you're just going to do the best you can but for a quick for a brief moment you were

you were thrown for a loop so i really think it's often used to describe a temporary situation where something is just shocking and it just like it says it upsets you it confuses you because something unexplained happens and i tried to give you that in the context of somebody changes the rules and it's it's unexpected and that may throw you for a loop so um it's a it's a good idiom the next one uh the next situation uh that i have for you is if uh okay uh i can relate to this uh my wife and i we can relate to this that over time maybe your place starts to get a little messy and you you know that you need to clean up and as it begins to get messier and messier you could say well this is really starting to what and the the key word that i'll give you

that's hand hand that's part of the idiom so think about that situation that i just told you that uh your place it's just over time you haven't cleaned in a while everybody's very busy it's getting messier and messier and you say oh goodness this is really uh this is really starting to what so it's a situation that it's it's getting really chaotic it's almost getting too much and you might use this idiom has the word hand in it um what do you think that situation and then and this is something that i'd like to use this idiom because i think you could use it to describe a lot of situations that are just too chaotic and you say all right i need to do something this is starting to all right excellent uh i think you guys got that one uh erwin ramon uh well thank you mustafa sid uh daryan uh

amman uh i'm talking about to here it is let me show you the situation so somebody might say we really need to clean up our place this mess is starting to get out of hand and say yeah you're right so in that case uh if something is getting out of hand it's getting out of control it's a situation it becomes chaotic and sometimes it's unmanageable so you could say it's getting out of hand so let's review those um that i just went over so to avoid talking about something because it's difficult or unpleasant is to beat around the bush oftentimes i think somebody might you might be telling somebody to stop doing this you're like just tell me just be honest tell me the truth stop beating around the bush we have to steal someone's thunder is like your somebody takes your idea somebody takes your credit your praise they stole your thunder so it's a great it's a great idiom be careful with that preposition so if somebody takes your idea they steal your thunder if you take their idea then you steal their thunder so be careful with that preposition to throw someone for a loop is when something unexpected happens and you're temporarily upset or confused and like wow that that really threw me for a loop i wasn't expecting that it threw me for a loop and i talked about something that is unmanageable it gets a little chaotic it's difficult to control you may say you may say that this is this is starting to get out of hand and i think that's a really uh great one and i hope that i hope that you learned some new idioms and before before this lesson gets out of hand i want to make a quick announcement you guys like what we do want to show us some love um want to sponsor interactive english with a membership patreon links are down below in the description great to see some members here uh today as well as uh some patrons to kyo maggie lolly uh gettrudis excellent great to see you guys uh happy that you can join me today so i hope that i hope that you were able to follow um i hope you were able to follow the lesson i i hope that it was i hope the lesson was easy to follow that's what i'm trying to say i hope it was easy to follow i hope it was under easy to understand and again the idea is not for you to just go out and try and start using these idioms it does take some time to learn idioms and use them in the correct context it's mostly i think for your comprehension because we people use idioms in everyday conversation so these are idioms that you will hear in movies tv shows podcasts songs books because i think many of you out there get exposure to the language in a variety of different ways watching youtube videos there's many different things you can do so it's good to try and practice this from time to time here is a list here is a list of the idioms from today's lesson if you want to take a snapshot a screenshot of these idioms go for it i'm not going to include these idioms in the description typically i will do that so people can review but in this case it was more of a quiz lesson so i do not want to give the answers so here is a list of the idioms that we talked about today there were 12 in total i hope that you learned some new ones and if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button down below um

i'm not going to beat around the bush i'm just going to tell you please hit that like button um and uh that's that's really it i was trying to think of some other idioms that uh i could use all right i'm gonna go now i'm gonna end the lesson because probably i might be starting to drive you guys up the wall so um thank you guys for joining me some shout outs peter marwa mustafa um mn glad it was useful excellent nabila uh julio nekla i hope you guys enjoy the rest of your weekend maggie lally excellent thank you glad you guys could join me um i know it's you early for you too maggie that's awesome uh it's impressive uh suhana mo mona uh julio gosh it goes on i had a lot of people today in class that's excellent um and i i think again the more the comments the likes it

Advanced American Idioms | QUIZ LESSON

hey everyone my name is wes this is interactive english the channel is just all about trying to help you practice and improve your english skills and today i have it's a quiz lesson i'm going to quiz you on some advanced english idioms and these are idioms that i think are pretty common in the united states you may hear these uh in conversation from time to time so for some of you this may be new and for others you may be familiar with it because if you follow the channel regularly what i've done is i've taken an older live lesson and i've just shortened it so if you have already seen it then this would be a good time to review and see if you remember the answers and see if you remember these idioms so without further ado here is your idiom quiz the first way that we're going to do this is i'm going to give you the meaning of the idiom and then i'm going to give you a picture that to kind of help you out the the first one is this right here to do or say something that lacks evidence or support and you see the picture use that picture hopefully it'll help you again i know this is difficult i know this is challenging but just bear with me and i will show you the idiom and then the meaning as well so you can kind of think about it you see a bird that is out on a limb the key word there is limb that's what i was hoping that you would think of but i i know that that uh that may be very difficult because the idiom that i'm talking about is to go out on a limb and if you say that you're going to like go out on a limb you're saying something or doing something that lacks evidence i hope some of you got that one let's look at this one the next one hopefully this is a little easier i think the picture um you could probably perhaps guess it a little more so is to greatly annoy or upset someone use that picture think about what's happening in the picture there's a car driving and there is a what what is that we're talking about driving someone up the wall to drive someone up the wall means that you are well you're very annoyed and you would say that uh like i said you could um say this person is driving me up the walls again i'm giving you the meaning when someone is so frustrated or annoyed they can no longer cope or they can no longer deal with this situation and you would describe this and somebody would they would say this idiom right here what somebody would say is that they are at the end of their rope so so if i were to tell you i'm at the end of my rope it means that i'm so frustrated i can no longer deal with this situation here here's another one and then i'm gonna switch it up the way that i'm asking you this so here's the the meaning of the idiom and there are some pictures to help you so if uh you are talking about personal issues in front of other people that are not involved how would you describe that situation the idiom is to air out one's dirty laundry to air out your dirty laundry is if you are talking about your personal issues in front of other people so now we're gonna switch it up i have some more idioms for you uh but the way that i'm going to do it this time now i'm going to give you uh like a conversation and i'm going to give you a blank so i'm going to give you the context and then i'm going to give you one word which is a hint to what the idiom is so let me show you that will be a better way to explain it so the thing about here's this situation right here one person there's a blank because this person is using the idiom the key word is speak so this that word is part of the idiom and the other person says hey tom we were just talking about you what idiom might this person be using it's really um it's kind of it's an expression that people would use in english to when this situation occurs i think you may have heard this uh expression before speak of the devil so i told you i think we can all relate to it we're having a conversation talking about somebody that person just arrives or perhaps they call and you could say speak of the devil which refers to it's used informally in speech to say that a person was being talked about and then they suddenly appear the next one that i have for you is this and this one i think is a little more it's not as common but i it's good again it's good for your comprehension they say i understand it's a big risk but we need to that's the idiom the key word that i'm giving you is caution the answer is to throw caution to the wind if you're saying that you're going to throw caution to the wind it's basically saying that you're going to you're not going to be careful to throw caution to the wind to give you the meaning is to behave in a way that is not considered sensible or careful to throw caution to the wind all right now let's look at this next one here's another conversation that these um these three ladies are having uh she says i need your help finding my ring so the ring is lost it's so valuable to me before they start looking for the ring perhaps she uses this idiom right here the idiom that i'm referring to is when you would tell somebody leave no stone unturned so in this situation i was trying to think that well the ring is valuable it's very precious they're going to look for it and she might say leave no stone unturned it means to do everything you can to achieve a good result but i think it's it's typically used in the context of looking for something you're trying to find it and you would leave no stone unturned uh the next one that i have for you again is this situation um this this person right here saying i don't want to hear a long explanation please just what and then that's that's the idiom the key word is chase so i don't want to hear a long explanation please just cut to the chase cut to the chase it means that you're you're telling somebody quick like come to the point what are you trying to say what are you trying what point are you trying to make cut to the chase i'm trying to switch it up in the way that we're practicing these and now it's going to be even a little more difficult so i'm going to give you the situation and i want you just to listen to what i'm saying listen to the situation and then i may give you a key word that has that that the idiom has and you can try to guess it in this first one uh it's talking about a situation in that somebody is not speaking directly all right and maybe another person is just saying look just tell me what's on your mind please cut to the chase give it to me straight and they might be telling this person stop stop doing this thing and that's the idiom stop speaking indirectly instead of saying that they're going to use this idiom and say stop what to beat around the bush so if somebody's doing that again i tend to do that and not come and somebody would say wes cut to the chase stop beating around the bush just just say whatever it is you want to set you're avoiding talking to someone i think most people do it because it's unpleasant or it's difficult to talk about so they might beat around the bush so let me give you another situation if you want to use an idiom that they've taken your idea and it's maybe a good idea and now you cannot get sick you cannot have success you're not gonna get praise for this great idea you'd say well that person did what and think of the word steel that would be the key word that i'm gonna give you in this context in this situation and you say oh no you did what i'm talking about the idiom to steal someone's thunder so in that context that situation that i gave you right here these people are talking and this person says i was going to get her that same birthday present you totally stole my thunder so to steal someone's thunder is you are preventing them from um that praise or that success to steal someone's thunder let me give you uh another situation um the next one so this would be a situation in which think about you are competing in some kind of competition and before the competition begins the the rules change and because of that you are surprised you're confused you're you don't know what to do and i could say wow this really what and the key word that i would give you is loop what you would say is this here's the situation at the last minute they changed the rules of the competition and it really threw our team for a loop and

typically i think you would use it in a situation in which you are you are temporarily unfocused and you're not sure what to do and then you you refocus and you're able to in this case like um you're able to compete in the competition and you're you're just going to do the best you can but for a quick for a brief moment you were you were thrown for a loop the next situation uh that i have for you over time maybe your place starts to get a little messy and you you know that you need to clean up and as it begins to get messier and messier you could say well this is really starting to what and the the key word that i'll give you that's hand hand that's part of the idiom over time you haven't cleaned in a while everybody's very busy it's getting messier and messier and you say oh goodness this is really uh this is really starting to what here it is let me show you the situation so somebody might say we really need to clean up our place this mess is starting to get out of hand and say yeah you're right so in that case if something is getting out of hand it's getting out of control it's a situation it becomes chaotic and sometimes it's unmanageable so you could say it's getting out of hand before this lesson gets out of hand i want to make a quick announcement you guys like what we do want to show us some love want to sponsor interactive english with a membership patreon links are down below in the description here is a list of the idioms from today's lesson if you want to take a snapshot a screenshot of these idioms go for it i'm not going to include these idioms in the description typically i will do that so people can review but in this case it was more of a quiz lesson so i do not want to give the answers and again the idea is not for you to just go out and try and start using these idioms it does take some time to learn idioms and use them in the correct context it's mostly i think for your comprehension because we people use idioms in everyday conversation so these are idioms that you will hear in movies tv shows podcasts songs so here is a list of the idioms that we talked about today there were 12 in total i hope that you learned some new ones and if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button down below all right i'm gonna go now i'm gonna end the lesson because probably i might be starting to drive you guys up the wall

Advanced Business Vocab to Help you Speak Naturally & Professionally

Right now, you are going to learn a lot of powerful business English vocabulary. And I say powerful because these are incredibly useful words and phrases that you can use in a meeting, giving a presentation, just talking with colleagues. So, this is not only going to help your speaking fluency, but I also think it will really help with your listening comprehension because you're also going to hear this vocabulary. And if you would like to get these lesson notes, click on the link down below in the description. Join my email community. If you're already a part of it, then I have sent them to you. expression to set the tone at the top.

And what this refers to is just really the character and values established by an organization's senior leadership. those people, the CEOs, uh the the CFOs, the executives, those people are at the top and they are the ones setting the tone at the top. Here's an example sentence. The CEO's aggressive and dismissive comments set a negative tone at the top, leading to a decline in employee morale and a toxic work environment. That's not a good situation. The one thing I really want you to keep in mind is the phrase set the tone. So, if you want to be specific, set the tone at the top referring to the company's leadership. But this is a phrase that you're going to hear quite often even in other situations. And to give you an example, I have some of these news headlines for you so you get a better idea as to how it's used in context. AI stocks now set the tone for global markets. or Dave Anderson on why leaders must set the tone early to drive daily success. And you got to establish that character, those values early on. And finally, invitations make lasting impressions and set the tone. So, we're using it in a non-b businessness context, but again, it still refers to the character values, the the mood that you're trying to convey whenever you set the tone. I am trying to set a positive tone when it comes to building your vocabulary because I want to teach you a lot of different phrases. And if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. The next phrase is to get someone up to speed. And again, you could use this in other contexts, but I think it's very useful in a business setting because you may not have all the information and in that case, someone else could get you up to speed. So that that's basically what it means to have all the latest information about something and you really want to get up to speed and figure out well what's happening, what's going on. An example, he arrived a little late, but his colleague was able to get him up to speed on the project's progress. And you're getting someone up to speed and letting them know everything that's going on. Then we have a I think a a useful phrase, instill confidence. So whenever we're talking about business and work, I think confidence is a very important noun. And in this case, when you instill confidence, we're using it with that verb. It means to create or establish a feeling of trust, self assurance, or certainty in others. When you instill confidence in your colleagues, or you instill confidence in your employees if you are the owner of the company, here's an example. The project leader calm and competent approach serve to instill confidence in a stressed team. So, this is a common collocation with the word confidence.

But because I I mentioned that this noun is useful when talking about business, let's look at some other collocations with this word. So, you could instill confidence in someone. And often you're going to follow this phrase with the preposition in. So, I've gone ahead and included it with all of these collocations. You can also build confidence in someone or increase confidence or maintain confidence or restore confidence or shatter confidence which in that case is a negative thing if you shatter someone's confidence in their ability to do something. So, these are some great phrases to know and it's also an excellent way to keep building your vocabulary and and learning the phrases the words that are often used together.

Here is the next one. Pay close attention to detail. So, it's it's very common to say to pay attention if we want to make it a little more descriptive to pay close attention and then to give you more information to pay close attention to what? Well, I think in business it's important to pay close attention to detail. This is to think about something carefully and avoid sloppy mistakes. She is really careful and pays close attention to detail. This is a positive thing. It has a positive connotation. If you are someone who pays close attention to detail, I try to do it, but it's not always the case. Sometimes uh you know I I do find mistakes in in some of these slides after I I go through them but you know that's okay. Nobody's perfect but I still try to pay close attention to detail. Then I have an idiom which is to level the playing field. And if you are trying to level the playing field you referring to a situation in which everyone has a fair and equal chance of succeeding. The new pay uh equity policy aims to level the playing field between new hires and long tenur employees. So this is an idiom that you of course you could use when talking about business. I I'll give you another example. Right now uh everybody's talking about AI and there are some major some big companies involved uh in the development of AI and then there are other companies that are much smaller. But I could ask you, you know, do you think it's a level playing field? Do you think these companies are in a situation that it's e it's equal, it's fair? Or do you think some of these big companies have a much bigger advantage? Maybe they have connections, ties with the government, they have other operations that help give them a lead. And again, I'm asking you, look, do you think it's a level playing field?

or in the case of saying we need to level the playing field. We need to create that situation of of fairness. Here's a a fun little comic just to give you an example. He says, "We're still not on a level playing field because they have more lawyers." And of course, this is funny. I I guess maybe I'm from the US. There's a lot of there are a lot of lawyers in the US. And just looking at that picture, you're probably thinking, "Wow, that's a lot of lawyers." But they're saying, "Look, the other people the other people have more lawyers, so it's not it's not a level playing field." Here is the next one. To take the initiative. This is a this is a great business phrase to be the first one to do something, especially to solve a problem. And you are going to take the initiative. I think a lot of managers, CEOs, executives, they they love it when their employees take the initiative. She regularly takes the initiative and does things before anyone has to ask and you go ahead and you take the initiative. Great, great phrase, positive phrase. Then I have this is an idiom that really I think is often used when talking about a group of people or if people are working as part of a team then then you could use this idiom to pull one's weight. So you know keep in mind we're going to use that possessive adjective to pull my weight to pull your weight to pull his weight to pull her weight. And it means to do things that that should be uh that you should be doing as part of a group who who are working together.

Really essentially it's like you're doing your fair share of work. When you're working on a team, there is an expectation that you might do this work. If you do that, then you are pulling your weight. Here's another example. The company had to let him go because he wasn't pulling his weight. So, if you and I are working on a team and maybe you you work really hard, but maybe I maybe I don't pay close attention to detail and I make a lot of mistakes and I am I'm not really working that hard. You could say, "Wes, you're not pulling your weight." All right, you need to work harder because right now you're not pulling your weight. So, this is an idiom that you may hear people use in the negative when they want to say someone is not doing their fair share of work and they're not pulling their weight. To give you another idiom that is also one that you're more likely to use when talking about a team is to pick up the slack. This means to improve a situation by doing something that someone else has not done or not completed. And in that case, you have to pick up the slack. She's not working hard, so someone else will need to pick up the slack. I could use both of them in the same sentences, the both both idioms. So, if I am not pulling my weight and we're working together, then possibly you will have to pick up the slack and you're going to do the extra work that has not been completed. Now, you may pick up the slack in a variety of situations. So, maybe somebody calls in sick and the supervisor says, "Look, this person's out sick. You know, I I need you to pick up the slack." Or maybe somebody takes a vacation, which is normal. Everybody does does that. And somebody's away and then the rest of the team has to pick up the slack.

So, it's not only because somebody's lazy and they're not pulling their weight. There could be a variety of reasons why another person or a group of people has to pick up the slack and do that extra work. Then I have uh another it's not it's not an idiom, but it's more just a useful phrase that you would often hear in business to take pride in something. This is that feeling of satisfaction which you have because you've done something well. And I think often people might use it when talking about work. You take pride in your work. Not only in business, but maybe in your personal life. There are things that you might do around the home and that is a project and you could still take pride in that work. He takes pride in completing work projects on time. Or maybe you're trying to encourage or motivate someone and you tell them, "Look, you really you really need to take pride in your work and uh and and you're going to have to pull your weight because if you don't, I'm going to have to pick up the slack and I don't I don't want that to happen. So, please please take some pride in your work." Just going to keep trying to use these different phrases as we go through this just just to get a little bit of review. Then we have to burn the midnight oil. This means to to work late into the night and you're really well, let me let me give you the example. She's been working hard all night and burning the midnight oil. So when I think of somebody burning the midnight oil, maybe they're working until 10:00, 11:00, midnight. So it's not necessarily staying up all night, but they're just working really late. And therefore you could say someone is burning the midnight oil. But it is a a idiom that's really used in a work context. Whether you're talking about your job or even school work that could also be something that would apply to this idiom. If a student is burning the midnight oil. Now that this one is even you're you're working more because if you say that you are working around the clock to work around the clock is really to work all day and all night without stopping. I really think people probably use this more to add emphasis and they don't literally mean they've just been working non-stop 24 hours and they keep going and going and going. So, you might just add emphasis if you want to tell somebody, "Oh, I'm trying to finish the project and I I've been working around the clock." Keep that in mind. Uh, you're burning the midnight oil. You're just working late. If you want to add a little more emphasis and say, "Look, I day and night I've been working around the clock. He's been working around the clock in order to meet the deadline."

Due diligence. This is a a very important phrase because I I think people should certainly do their due diligence before making an important decision. And this just means the investigation or exercise of care that a reasonable business, a reasonable business or person is normally expected to take before entering into an agreement or contract with another party. You should do your due diligence before signing the contract. So think about that context. There is a negotiation in which maybe you're going to come to some sort of agreement, but you want to make sure that you have all the information and that you investigate all the different angles and you perfect you understand perfectly what's going on and you want to do your due diligence.

Due diligence. All right. It's very very great phrase to know. Then we have uh I think this is a common idiom uh to go the extra mile. This means to make more effort than is expected of you. Let let's say that you have a your work responsibility but you actually do more than what is expected and in that case you could say that you went the extra mile. She is the type of person who will go the extra mile. I I don't know about you, I try to go the extra mile when putting together these lessons and give you a lot of information, talk about some of the nuances as well as the context in which you would use them. And for this idiom, I want to talk about a little bit about where small mistakes are made. So, think of this as a fixed expression because sometimes I'll hear people replace that article with the indefinite article and to go an extra mile. That's not you're you're really going to use the to go the extra mile.

The other thing that I'll sometimes here is people may try to make mile plural and they may say miles to go the extra miles. It just sounds awkward. So it no matter the situation, just really think of this as a fixed expression to go the extra mile or in the past you went the extra mile to lead by example. This really means what it says. You're just modeling the behavior that you expect from others rather than just giving instructions. So, if I want you to work a certain way or burn the midnight oil and really just work hard, pay close attention to detail, then I need to lead by example. I should be doing the same thing. And I want you to know that yes, I am pulling my weight. So, I think like it says, a great manager always leads by example, not by commands. So instead of me just telling you like oh do this do that I need to lead by example and that is going to encourage others to then follow my lead. Here is uh again nice little fun example with this phrase lead by example. It says leadership is action not position and those little ducklings are following that dog who is leading them through the water. No show. It's not a good thing, but it is a great phrase to know. This refers to a person who is expected to be somewhere but who does not arrive. And you could say that person is a no-show. Keep in mind this is used as a noun. And you would say someone is a no-show. If they're not at a meeting, and they should be, uh, for example, uh, at our weekly meetings, he's usually a no-show. It does have a negative connotation if you're saying someone's a no-show because the expectation is that this person should be at this meeting or they should be in their office or at some place and they're not. And you could say this person is a no-show. Then we have dilemma. This refers to a situation in which a difficult choice has to be made between two or more alternatives, especially ones that are equally undesirable. Therefore, it's like you have these options and you don't really like any of them. And in that case, you are faced with a dilemma and you really you have to make a choice. Uh I could say we are faced with an agonizing dilemma and it seems there is no correct choice. So, just keep that in mind when talking about a dilemma. A choice has to be made. To give you a little more context, here are some more news headlines says best of Beth Ashley, the retirement dilemma. What to do now? A lot or return or stay the dilemma facing Syrians living in Europe. Again, there it's referring to a choice. And then finally, fam, the family business dilemma. Who is next in line? I really trying to emphasize this idea of there there's a choice because the next word that I want to talk about is conundrum and this really refers to a confusing or difficult problem or question. Arranging child care over the school holidays can be a real conundrum for working parents and this is a problem that you are faced with and I might say wow that is quite a conundrum.

Sometimes these words may be interchangeable but I do want to highlight that there is a difference there is a nuance between these words. So, let's let's look at this part uh and basically of trying to break it down how they're similar and how they're different. Are you going to find your kids a daycare or will one of you stay home? Okay, that that's a real dilemma.

When I say that's a dilemma, then the emphasis is really on the difficult choice that that has to be made. Stay home or find the daycare. Are you going to find your kids a daycare or will you stay home? That's quite a conundrum. When I use conundrum in this case, then I'm really just commenting on the problem that it's a difficult problem and you're trying to solve it. So, just keep that in mind. Even though both of them work in this example, when you use dilemma, you're really focusing more on that choice. When you use conundrum, you're you're really you're more talking about just the problem in general. It's very difficult. It's very complex.

whenever you say that well that's that's really a conundrum that you're you're you're faced with then we have to get the ball rolling this is one that I don't know why I feel like I end up using this quite often and say look whenever I want to start something okay let's let's get the ball rolling to make something begin or happen come Monday morning we really need to get the ball rolling and start planning the conference and there are many different situations in a work environment in which you could use this. You're starting a project, you need to get the ball rolling. You're starting even a new position and like, okay, let's let's get the ball rolling. Even in just your daily life, if you're planning something and you need to begin it and you could say, "We should get the ball rolling." Great, great idiom to know. To delegate authority. This is a phrase that means to assign decisionmaking power and responsibility to a subordinate or a team. And you are delegating authority to someone else or another group of people. Effective managers know when to delegate authority rather than micromanaging every minor task. as you can see from the example does have more of a positive connotation. Even though you are assigning something to another person, it shows leadership that you are setting this tone. you're setting the tone that you trust other people and you feel comfortable delegating authority because you know that the team that everybody on the team is going to pull their weight and nobody's going to and you're not going to have to pick up the slack. So, it is used in a positive way when you say somebody is delegating authority or they need to delegate authority. Let's uh talk about some more common collocations with the word authority. Once again, I'm going to keep saying this. It's an excellent way to build your vocabulary when you learn these words that are frequently used together. We've already talked about to delegate authority, but it's also common to say that someone needs to respect authority or to command authority or to assume authority, to demonstrate authority. You could even exert authority and not a good situation if someone abuses authority. So, these are some phrases that you are often going to hear and can even use when talking about the noun authority. Business model. I think this is a phrase you're probably familiar with. It's quite common if you're if you read any articles, you listen to the news, they may talk about a company's business model, which is the a description of the different parts of a business or organization showing how they will work together successfully to make money. Here's an example. Despite recent challenges, the company is not planning to change its business model. I think if you're trying to maybe you're you're planning to go into business with another company, of course, you need to do your due diligence and understand and investigate what's going on. And I think it's important that you understand the other company's business model. You know, how does how does it work? What are they trying to sell? What are their goals?

What what's their mission? So, very useful phrase. And again, maybe I I'm sure some of this is review, and it's always good to get a little review. Then there's the phrase nervous wreck. This if you say someone is a nervous wreck, it refers to a person who is extremely anxious, worried, or stressed to a point being emotionally overwhelmed, or debilitated. I have never spoken in front of such a large audience. I'm a nervous wreck. So, you could just say that you're a wreck and referring to like, okay, I'm just I'm overwhelmed. But this is a common collocation to say somebody is a nervous wreck whenever you want to capture that high level of anxiety that a person is experiencing.

And I I think this is a common example if somebody is going to give a presentation in front of a large audience or in front of their colleagues and people may feel or they may feel like they become a nervous wreck and you experience that anxiety to have some loose ends to tie up. This means to complete the parts of something that have not been completed. And I feel like maybe that that definition, this dictionary definition may be a little hard to follow. In general, if you tell someone that you have some loose ends to tie up, you're really just saying that there are certain things that must be done before you leave or before you go on to the next thing. And really, you might use this because it it doesn't matter what you're doing. Maybe you don't want to explain or go into detail.

Then there's a very very common expression to get everyone on the same page. This is to ensure that a group of people has a shared understanding, agreement, and knowledge about a particular topic, project or goal. And uh you you want to get everyone on the same page. I think you're working uh with a group of people. It's incredibly important that you get everyone on the same page. That way, everyone knows what they have to do and they can pull their their own weight so that the work gets done and some other person's not going to have to pick up the slack. Let's take a moment to get on the same page about the project deadline. So I'm using get everyone on the same page. I think quite often people will just use part of this expression, the idiom on the same page.

So there are different there are different uh verbs you can use with this and I've highlighted them right here. Some common collocations to get everyone on the same page. And everyone is optional uh if you want to use it or or not. You could say we need to get all the employees on the same page or we need to get um the the team members on the same page. But you could also keep everyone on the same page. You could often use it with the verb to be and say everyone is on the same page. I think you and I, we are on the same page uh when it comes to building your vocabulary, learning these new phrases, making it a part of your active memory so that you can just use them in in conversation. And you could also have everyone on the same page. These are verbs that you may use with this idiom on the same page. To run behind schedule, this happens to me. I I try to be punctual, but sometimes, you know, I run behind schedule. It happens. I'm sure you can relate to this as well. And there has been a time when you were running behind schedule to do something or happened later than planned or expected. So you could be talking about finishing a paper and you're running behind schedule. Finishing a project and you're running behind schedule. Or just your work in general. Uh you're working with others. Say, "Guys, I'm running behind schedule. I apologize. Would it would it be possible for someone to pick up the slack? Here is my example sentence. It seems that she is often running behind schedule. And you can kind of see that that woman uh running down the street right there trying to capture the the meaning of this expression to run behind schedule.

Next is the phrase a tough act to follow. This refers to someone who has been so successful that it will be very difficult for the person who comes next to be as good. And there are many work situations that that you could then use this when whenever somebody's being replaced. And if somebody has done an excellent job in this position like the maybe they were the head of marketing and they get promoted in the company, another person has been hired to become the new uh head of marketing. But you could say wow this you know this is he this person was is a tough act to follow. They did such a good job that it is going to be challenging for the next person to perform their job as well. her leadership style made her a tough act to follow for the incoming manager. So really when you whenever you use this, you're really giving the other person a compliment. The person who is leaving and moving on to another position or even perhaps retiring, you're giving that person a compliment and saying they did such a good job that for whoever comes in next, well, it's it's going to be a tough act to follow. I want to point out that you could use a couple of different words in here when talking about a tough act to follow. You could also say that it's going to be a hard act to follow or a difficult act to follow. And to demonstrate this, I'm using Engram Viewer, which is a useful resource whenever you want to compare the frequency uh of different phrases or words and understand which one is more commonly used. To be honest, I I was a little surprised. I thought it might be more common to say a tough act to follow, but as I learned when I checked that out on Engram Viewer, more often you're going to come across the the phrase and say that wow, this is going to be a hard act to follow. But really any of them would work hard, tough, difficult whenever you're talking about a well a tough act to follow.

Then I want to share with you this word which is I I really think this is a useful business word especially in the context of an interview and somebody says well you know talk about some of your strengths uh and they want to know more information about you of course they're they're trying to do their due diligence and understand who what kind of employee you would be and you could say I'm very personable and if you say that you're personable it just means you're you're having an agreeable or or pleasing personality that you're you can meet people and talk with them and work with them and you can get along with others. It really kind of implies all of those things. So, it has a positive connotation if you want to describe someone as being very personable. She's intelligent, hardworking, and personable. All of those are great adjectives when you want to give somebody a compliment and describe the way that they work. So just a word to keep in mind for your next job interview whenever they ask like, "Okay, tell us tell us a little bit about yourself." You say, "Well, I'm hardworking. I'm also very personable." All right. I like to think I'm personable because again, it does have a positive connotation.

Keep someone posted. This means to make sure someone knows what is happening. especially in in a situation that is quickly changing. I could say, "I want to know what happens during the meeting. Please keep me posted." And you want to give someone updates. It is a little similar to get someone up to speed. But there there is a difference. If I'm telling you like, hey, keep me posted, then I'm really asking you to, you know, let me know from time to time what's happening so that I understand what's going on. If you're going to get someone up to speed, it really implies that the other person is behind in some way, they they just have not been around or maybe they're new and then you're trying to get that person up to speed.

me posted. I I think often, especially managers, they they want to know what's going on. Even though they're willing to delegate authority to others, they they still want to know what's happening. and therefore they may tell someone else or the team in general, look, just keep me posted so I'm aware of what's going on. To hit the nail on the head, this is an idiom whenever you want to say that something is exactly right. Now, of course, you could use this in other situations that may not be business related. Whenever somebody says something and you agree and you think, "Wow, that was exactly right." You could say you you hit the nail on the head.

When she said the project failed due to poor communication, she really hit the nail on the head. It is a little more informal because it's an idiom, but still you could use this in a work setting whenever you want to let someone know or your colleague or whomever that was exactly right. Yeah, you really you really hit the nail on the head. Then there's a pivotal role. This is a phrase that refers to a role that is central, essential, and crucially important to success. And you could say it is a pivotal role. And often you may follow this with the preposition in. Innovation is playing a pivotal role in the company's ability to maintain its market share against competitors. And it's playing a pivotal role in this. Here are some other common collocations. Once again, I've just gone ahead and included in as part of the phrase because it often follows them. But whenever we're talking about the noun role, we've talked about a pivotal role. But you could use other adjectives as well that that really they're interchangeable. If

I say somebody has a vital role in doing something or they have a major role or an important role or a unique role or an essential role or even a starring role. This the last one is more for movies and and shows. It's like somebody has a starring role in this this movie. Uh I guess you could use it in business if you just want to have some fun and play around with it. But in general, I think these other ones are more commonly used and you're trying to emphasize the importance that someone has whenever they are playing a pivotal role in something or a vital role or a major role. Take one for the team. Okay. So this is an idiom that means to make a personal sacrifice for the collective benefit of your colleagues. And in that case, you are going to take one for the team. She's willing to do any task and is always ready to take one for the team. In this example, it's almost like maybe nobody wants to do a certain task, but she's willing to do it. Okay, I'll, you know, make the personal sacrifice. I'll take one for the team. This is a fun idiom and one that uh it's very specific when you're talking about taking one for the team and someone is making that personal sacrifice. To phase out, this is a phrasal verb which means to gradually stop using or producing something and you are going to phase it out. the government announced that it would gradually phase out the use of coal powered plants. So the key word in here is gradually because you're not stopping it immediately when you phase something out. There is a period of time and you're going to reduce more and more and more until it's done and you're going to phase something out.

great phrasal verb for business because I think this happens all the time when companies maybe there's a policy that you're going to phase out or maybe there's a department that you're not just going to get rid of everybody all at once but maybe you're just going to phase it out over time. There are many different business applications that could get phased out over time and it's a very descriptive phrasal verb and one that yes, I definitely think you should know and use. Here are some news headlines to give you a bit more context. Uh it says swastikas on some Finland Air Force flags to be phased out. Florida will phase out certificates of completion for students with disabilities and they're going to phase it out over time. And finally, Disney announces plans to phase out the standalone Hulu app. Once again, just giving you some more information about this phrasal verb and how it may be used in a business context.

can't handle pressure situations. This is a phrase that refers to the ability to manage, deal with, or control the demands and stress of a circumstance. And I I I think you probably are familiar with it, but it's not a good thing when somebody can't deal with the pressure of a situation. And yeah, you can't. You could just say, "Look, the, you know, he can't handle pressure situations or she can't handle pressure situations." And like I said, I just used it more as a standalone uh statement, and you're basically commenting on someone's inability to deal with the pressure. And I think there are a lot of times in business where there are pressure situations, a negotiation, a presentation, and maybe people maybe they become a nervous wreck right before they're supposed to give the presentation or go into the negotiation. And in that case, you could say, "Yeah, you know, he or she just can't handle pressure situations."

thorough way than you should. So if somebody's cutting corners, they are certainly not paying close attention to detail. We can save some time if we cut a few corners. And generally, just to follow up on this example sentence, I think it really gets to why people end up cutting corners. They do it to save time and they want to finish something faster and maybe move on to something else or maybe it's going to save them some money. And in that case, they may cut a few corners, but it certainly has a negative connotation and it's not good if somebody accuses you of cutting corners. It is absolutely frowned upon if you cut corners. Frown up. This is another phrasal verb. It just means to disapprove of something or consider it bad or wrong. Public displays of affection are often frowned upon in conservative cultures. So, this is a way of kind of softening it a little bit. Instead of saying people hate this or they really don't like it, you could say it's just frowned upon. And you could use this in many different business situations. Somebody's new to a company and they're trying to figure out what they should and should not do. Maybe the way that the clothes that they wear to work and you say, "I like I'm maybe going to wear some socks and sandals tomorrow." Something that I probably would do. And somebody would say, "Look, don't do that. It's frowned upon." And I my wife would probably say, "Even wearing socks and sandals out in society, she would say it's frowned upon." Even though, hey, you know, I I like it. All right, that's that's me. I'm just putting it out there. Here's an example. I use sarcasm at work, but slapping the out of someone is frowned upon by management. So, trying to make a little light joke using this phrasal verb and saying that something is frowned upon by management. In this case, yeah, definitely you shouldn't slap people at work. It's not a good thing. Empower employees. This refers to giving them the employees the authority, resources, and autonomy to make decisions and take ownership of their work without constant oversight. Great corporate leaders will empower their employees to do the right thing. It's a positive thing because you it shows that you trust the people that work for you when you empower your employees to make decisions and you trust that they're going to do the right thing. This is another great phrase we talked about, for example, to delegate authority. Managers, CEOs, executives may delegate authority to their subordinates, people below them, because they trust them and they're going to empower their employees to make the right decision. Above all, this is a phrase that just means most importantly. I included it because you could use this in a presentation when talking about a list of things. most importantly above all and then you could say what it is. Any furniture you buy must be cheap, attractive, and above all practical. This is a common phrase, one that you probably know and maybe even use. Like I said, some of this is review. It's always good to get a little bit of review. And just to reiterate the usefulness of this phrase, whatever you want to say, most importantly, above all, back to the drawing board. And this is something that probably nobody likes to do, but you may have to do it from time to time and go back to the drawing board. You're going to go back to the beginning of a process to start it again. Mostly because it's not working.

We made a major mistake, so we need to go back to the drawing board. I think any time you're working on a team and you're trying to put something together and you realize that it's not working, instead of saying we need to start over, which you could say it's perfectly fine, you could then just use this idiom, we need to go back to the drawing board and we're going to have to start again. Empty promise. It has a negative connotation. I'll go ahead and tell you that it refers to a commitment or assurance that is not sincere or is unlikely to be fulfilled. My boss told me that I'd get a raise at the end of the year. I don't know if I believe him.

It may just be an empty promise. It's not good to make empty promises because I think people will pick up on that over time and they're not going to trust you if you are making an empty promise. Here is a fun little visual kind of showing with this empty promise and you're you have this person who is of course lying. You can see their nose right there and they're dangling that carrot in front of people uh to get them to do what they want. And ultimately, it's just an empty promise. Hopefully, the visual makes it a little easier to grasp the meaning. Take the reins. This means to take control or assume leadership of something such as an organization, government, or project. The after the CEO retired, the COO took the reins.

Refers to like the reins uh on a horse. It's what you're going to use to control the horse. And that's where this phrase comes from when you take the reins. Instead of just saying like, oh, this somebody uh left the project and this the person was a very important leader on the project. Whoever steps in to fill their shoes, it's going to be a tough act to follow, but I think I can do it. I am willing to take the reins. I am willing to take control of the situation and I will lead this new project or this effort. So use this whenever you want to basically say that somebody is taking control of a situation or could be a project any type of leadership role and they are taking the reins. Then we have to fall on deaf ears. It just means to be ignored or disregarded. If you say that something it's falling on deaf ears. Put something on the back burner. I like this idiom. It just means to postpone or deprioritize something. And I think in a work context, there are multiple things that you may need to do. And that's why I think this idiom is useful when you depprioritize something and you put it on the back burner. It doesn't mean that you're going to completely ignore it and never get around to it. You're just depprioritizing it and say, "Okay, let's just put that on the back burner and then we'll get to it later." Here's an example. Right now, we have more pressing issues. So, let's put your idea on the back burner for now. And you may be wondering, well, where where does this idiom come from? Well, think about a stove.

which is where people are need to address things more immediately where they're cooking. And if something uh is not a priority, they're just going to move it to the back burner so that they can get to it later. So, this is where the idiom comes from. Uh, I thought this was just a little humorous, neglected. Kitten has been put on the back burner. And yeah, it's just it seems like uh the cat's comfortable there getting a little nap while uh put on the back burner. Hit the ground running. This just means you are ready to work immediately on a new activity. If you accept this new position, you're going to have to hit the ground running and you just get started immediately and start working. I think you can use this in different contexts whenever you're starting something, a project, a new position, and you say, "Look, let's let's just hit the ground running, and we need to get going." So, it does have a positive connotation whenever you want to say that you or someone else is going to hit the ground running.

Walk the talk. There's a couple of things that I want to say about this uh phrase. It really just means to back up one's boastful talk with meaningful action. So sometimes maybe you if you want to instill confidence in your employees, you may be a bit boastful and this is what we're going to do. This is these are our milestones. This is what we're going to achieve. And you think, wow, that's that's going to be difficult. but because I want to lead by example, I am going to burn the midnight oil and make sure all of these things get done. And in that case, you could say, "Wow, Wes, he's really walking the talk. He is doing the things that he says he's going to do." Here's another example. Employees trust leaders who walk the talk, not just make promises, especially especially those empty promises. Those are not good. I I said there's a some things I wanted to mention about this because there are different ways to phrase this and I I I tried to provide a slight little nuance between them. So, walk the talk backing up one's boastful talk and I am emphasizing the word boastful because it's like you're bragging, you're being very ambitious, but you are actually following it up with meaningful action. When you walk the walk, it simply just means you're going to do what you say. It doesn't mean you're being boastful about it and saying like we're the best, we're the greatest or this is what we're going to achieve. You're just saying this is what needs to get done and yeah, I'm going to do it and I'm going to walk the walk. Or if you talk the talk, it just means to talk about an action in a confident way. That's that that boastful boastfulness so that you seem to be very good at what you're doing. And this is more I I think a little, you know, empty when somebody says they're gonna they just talk the talk. And this one is I I don't think there's really the follow through and the the doing these actions, which would be the walk, the walking the walk or walking the talk. If you just say somebody's just talking the talk, that they're just talking about the things they want to do, but they may not actually do it. So there is a difference between these phrases. Even though if we go back to engram viewer, you can see that I think all three of them are, you know, used at about the same frequency whenever you want to express these different ideas. But I do want you to keep in mind the subtle difference when you use these different phrases. But for the most part, I I feel like walk the talk and walk the walk are somewhat similar uh in and talk the talk is a little different. Then we have on the cusp. This just means on the verge of some beginning point or or the start of some major development. And often you're going to follow this phrase with the preposition of. We you are on the cusp of something. We are on the cusp of a technological revolution. And you could say that right now with AI or even robotics. And there are going to be some major changes in the way that we go about our lives. And we are on the cusp of something that is going to dramatically change our lives. Really, when I think about this phrase, you're you're you're adding a bit of emphasis leading up to something that is major. So, uh, you're probably going to use it or hear it in a presentation and somebody's being a bit dramatic and they want to emphasize that there is going to be a major change and you say that you are on the cusp or we collectively are on the cusp of something major. Here's another well a quick little uh example I think trying to well get you more to appreciate the now. It says you can be on the cusp of something. Appreciate the cusp, not the something. Appreciate this moment now. And I think that's true. I think we are on the cusp of a major uh development with AI. And I want to appreciate the way that things are being done right now because there are going to be a lot of major changes. Some I might like, others I might not like and be like, "Wow, I really wish we could, you know, go back to the way things were when we when we were just on the cusp of this thing." Then we have a phrasal verb branch out. This means to extend or expand one's activities or interest in a new direction. So I could say he started as a mechanic but has branched out into engine repair for boats. So, you could use this uh and it is a good thing when you branch out. If you're talking about your own career and you're doing this type of work, but you have another interest and you're going to try to branch out, learn more about it so that you can also do this other thing. or if I'm just talking about a company in general that this is their business model and they're going to branch out and try something different in order to grow the business, get new customers, and the company is going to branch out. So, no matter whether you're talking about a person or a company, you could use this phrasal verb in a positive way when you say that someone or some company is branching out. Let's uh let's stick with another phrasal verb. Hammer out. This just means to work out details through discussion. And you're going to hammer out the details or hammer out an agreement or hammer out a framework. Those are some common collocations. But in general, I think you're going to use this when there's maybe a negotiation or a meeting and you're trying to figure things out and you have this back and forth. And that is when you could use this and say you're trying to hammer out the details. Or like in this example sentence, after months of negotiations, the two companies finally managed to hammer out an agreement. So just to review those collocations that I just mentioned, to hammer out the details, hammer out the an agreement, or maybe to hammer out a framework. So great phrasal verb in that negotiation back and forth negotiation context.

Bend over backwards. This is an idiom. It refers to well to try extremely hard to help or please someone. And you're bending over backwards to well, possibly to help someone. I've been bending over backwards to help you. You may end up using this out of a sense of frustration or to express that. If I say, "I've been bending over backwards to help out the other colleagues on my team. Unfortunately, it's fallen on deaf ears and I'm being ignored." But I I Yeah, I just been bending over backwards to help people and it's frustrating that nobody will listen. So you're just emphasizing the fact that you are trying extremely hard to either help or please someone when you are bending over backwards. Then we have to overcome obstacles. This is a common collocation. It just means to succeed in dealing with or conquering difficulties or barriers that stand in the way of achieving a goal. It took

years to grow a successful business and we had to overcome many obstacles along the way in your career. Uh as you do your job, of course, there are many different obstacles that you need to overcome. So once again, this is a common collocation. We have the noun obstacles and you're you're often going to use it with the verb you to overcome these obstacles. So this is a of course this is a good thing when you overcome obstacles. Here are some news headlines. Just want to give you more context even though I feel like this is a common one. You've probably heard this phrase before. International Women's Day. Give girls role models to overcome obstacles or seven ways to overcome obstacles to using AI and healthcare. And finally, collaborations help the denim industry overcome obstacles. I want to help you overcome obstacles when it comes to building your vocabulary, which is why I do these lessons and try to go through these words and in a very meticulous way and pay close attention to detail. And that is why I want to remind you once again that if you want to get these lesson notes, join my community, click on that link down below in the description. LESSON 166 OF 749

Advanced Color Vocabulary to Brighten Up Your Conversations

I guarantee this will be one of the most colorful English lessons you will ever watch. What's up everyone? My name is Wes. This is interactive English, which is all about helping you practice and improve your English skills. And today I have, well it it, it's two parts. It's a vocabulary lesson as well as a pronunciation lesson. I'm going to talk to you about 12 colors and these are, I'd say these are advanced vocabulary words because some of these colors you may not be familiar with when I show you the colors, you'll notice them, but you might not know the name, but learning these colors will help you be a little more precise when you're having conversations and you're talking about the colors that you see in nature such as flowers or maybe the clothes that people wear or even the cars that they drive. Learning these colors will help.

I'm also going to teach you the pronunciation of these words and I will give you both the phonetic spelling and the IPA so that you know how to pronounce them perfectly. The first color I have for you and I, I really like this color that is turquoise. Now turquoise has two syllables and the stresses on the first syllable, Turquoise. Turquoise. This is a blue, green color that is actually named after the the gem and Turquoise is a French word that actually means Turkish because the gem was imported from Turkey. So now you know how to pronounce turquoise and you know a little bit about its history. And when I think of turquoise, I think of the water, the ocean, it's just this turquoise. This blue green I think is really beautiful.

It looks very nice and you could describe it as, wow, you know that that is a beautiful turquoise color. This is another example of turquoise. Now if you're wondering what this rubber spoon looking thing is, it's actually used to wipe cream on a baby's bum. It's not for me. We have a baby girl. That's why we have this. I hope you believe me.

The next color is fuchsia. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, fyoo-shuh. Fuchsia. Now you may be looking at this color and thinking, well isn't that just pink? It is a bit of a strong pink. But this red purplish color is actually named after the flower of the fuchsia plant. So that is a great example as to when you might talk about this color and use it when, when talking about flowers, perhaps you could use it when talking about the color of somebody's shoes or maybe even a color of lipstick. Fuchsia.

Next is navy and this is actually a shade of blue and you might often hear it used in combination with the word blue and people will just say navy blue. And the word has two syllables and the stresses on that first syllable ney-vee. Navy blue. Now this is just a dark blue color and it's also another color that I like cause quite a few of my clothes are our navy. Let me show you and give you an example. So I could say here comes Wes sporting an all navy outfit with a navy long sleeve shirt and some navy cargo shorts that actually look a little too big. And I don't know why I look like I'm, I'm dancing instead of modeling.

Yeah. I, I don't have much of a modeling career as you can tell. Then we have the color crimson and this word also has two syllables and the stresses on that first syllable. That second syllable has a bit of that schwa, that /uh/ sound crimson, and this color is a shade of red. It can actually be described as a strong, bright, deep red, at least according to the Wikipedia page. That is a good way to describe crimson and when I think about this color, I might think of maybe a paint. You're going in the store, you want to paint your room, you want to paint whatever it is, and you might find crimson the color, this strong, the strong red, perhaps the color of somebody's car is a strong crimson red.

Then we have this color right here, which is beige. Just one syllable. Very simple, very short, beige and beige is shorthand for I think a variety of colors. It can be used to describe a yellowish brown color to a light brownish gray, and you would just say it's beige. And when I think of this color, I think you would hear it a lot when talking about the color of somebody's clothes. You could say that they have beige pants or trousers or, or a beige hat or a beige jacket. I think you often find a variety of clothes that can be identified as beige.

The next color is auburn, two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. And you may be looking at this right now and thinking, well, what is the difference between auburn and crimson? Both of them are our dark shades of red, but I would say Auburn is just slightly darker. It's a slightly darker shade of red than crimson. And when I think of auburn and the way it's used and how it might be discussed, I think of people's hair describing their hair color as auburn, or maybe somebody's going to get highlights in their hair and they want some auburn highlights. You can use this color to describe other things as well, but I just personally ended up thinking about hair, a hair color. Auburn.

Another popular color lavender. This word has three syllables and the stresses on that first syllable, lav-uhn-der. And lavender...I know you've seen this color, you may have already heard of it before. It's kind of just a light purple and when I think about this word being used, I think about weirdly enough bedsheets and linens and towels that if it has this, this light purple, it is lavender. Everybody loves lavender. I love lavender as well, which is why I have some lavender sheets. You just can't get enough lavender. Do you guys have lavender sheets? Let me know. Then we have magenta. This word has three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable muh-gen-tuh.

The first syllable has that schwa that /uh/. Magenta. Now magenta could be defined as a purplish red color. When I see it, I think it is a bit of a pink, a shade of pink, maybe more of a hot pink. But when I also think of Magenta, I again just me. I don't know why I think about the crayons. It reminds me of my childhood and I think back to when I was drawing pictures with crayons because in my box of crayons I remember vividly that there was a crayon magenta.

The next color is teal and this word has just one syllable. It's very easy to pronounce teal and this is probably probably my favorite color on this list. Teal. I like that. That blue, green color and fun fact. The name teal comes from the Eurasian Teal, which is a duck that has a stripe on its head, which is the same color teal. Then we have amber, which has two syllables and the stresses on that first syllable, am-ber. And amber is a yellowish orange color and the name comes from the material, the material amber, and when I think of amber, I don't know why I think of paint. Some places are very vibrant and colorful and walking around.

You might see buildings or homes or offices that have that color paint and amber color. The next color is burgundy. This word has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, bur-guhn-dee. And burgundy is a dark red and it has a bit of purple in it as well. And the name comes from the burgundy wine. That's where it comes from. Burgundy wine. And I think the color burgundy is often associated with with clothing. Somebody could have a burgundy colored jacket or maybe burgundy socks, perhaps a burgundy hat. Basically anything that you wear, it could be burgundy. Then we have scarlet. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable and we're going back to a shade of red.

This is a bright red with a bit of an orange feel to it and scarlett is another one of those colors. I think you might often hear it with the word red and people would describe something as being a scarlet red, such as again, the color of somebody's hair. I, when I hear the word scarlet, I think of a hair color and somebody describes it as being scarlet, scarlet red. So now you just greatly expanded your color vocabulary and, and I want to hear from you. Out of all of these colors that you just learned today, which is your favorite, I already told you that, that mine would be teal. I like that, that blue green color, that teal color.

Let me know in the comments which color you prefer. If you enjoyed this lesson and you learn something new, please hit that like button. And as always, thanks so much for watching and I'll see you next time.

LESSON 167 OF 749

Advanced English #Idiom | to pick up the slack

to pick up the slack this is a great idiom when talking about working with a group because it means to improve a situation by doing something that someone has not done or completed so if some work has not been completed maybe you have to pick up the slack we're all going to have to dig deep and band together to pick up the slack while your mother recovers and we Roy going we got a smaller crew and I'm picking up all of his slack so I think I should be compensated so if you are working in in a group you may need to pick up the slack if someone calls in sick you may need to pick up the slack if a member of your team goes on vacation and you may need to pick up the slack if other people on your team are just a bunch of slackers and a slacker is an informal noun for well a lazy person who does not work very hard and if you are working with someone else who is a slacker then yes you may need to pick up the slack

LESSON 168 OF 749

Advanced English Grammar that Will BLOW YOUR MIND

I'm going to teach you some grammar that will blow your mind. It's confusing, it's tricky, and I'm going to try to clear it all up for you. And if you are someone who enjoys fine-tuning your fluency skills and learning about grammar, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes, the channel is Interactive English. It is all about helping you reach your fluency goals. Let's go ahead and jump into it. And this is a quiz lesson. I'm not going to spend too much time on the questions, but mostly just going over the answer and talking about, you know, what's going on and providing some nuance. So, here's here's the first question. Choose the grammatically correct sentence.

She suggested me to take the train. She suggested that I take the train. Or she suggested that I took the train. This is something that a lot of people get this wrong. So, I hope I truly hope that you chose B as the correct answer. She suggested that I take the train. If you did not choose B, really really try to remember what I'm about to tell you. So, when you're talking about the verbs suggest and recommend, I want you to follow the the pattern that I'm outlining right there. You're going to use the verb plus that. I mean, you could omit that if you want to, but then the subject and the base verb. Here are some examples right here. I suggest that you wake up early. Once again, that you can have or you can remove it altogether. We recommend you dress appropriately.

She suggested I get more exercise. I recommend [laughter] that you hit the like button. Yes, that is something that I recommend. And if you love these lessons and developing your skills, yeah, I'd really appreciate it. That is what I recommend, that you hit the like button. Now, there are other patterns that you can use when we're talking about suggest and recommend, and let me go over those right now. So, we've already talked about suggest recommend plus that plus the subject plus the base verb. You could also use suggest or recommend followed by a gerund. He recommended arriving on time. That works. Or suggest and recommend plus the noun. She suggested the restaurant nearby. So, the one thing I really want you to take away is that when you're using suggest or recommend, you're not going to use the subject plus two and then the base verb, and that is a common mistake. Now, whenever I have talked about this, some people they they just don't believe me.

And just to to reiterate this, this is from Cambridge, and it's talking about the verb suggest along with typical errors. I'm not going to go over the whole thing. I I just want you to look right here. He suggested that I should apply for a job in a bank or insurance company. Not he suggested me to apply. They've even crossed it out saying, "Do not use this structure." To be perfectly honest, it really does sound awkward when I hear this structure right here. He suggested me to do something. So, remember, you're going to use suggest or recommend plus that plus the subject plus the base verb. And if you would like to get these lesson notes so that you can remember the grammar that we're going over, check out the link down below in the description. Download the notes when you join my email community. If you are already a part of the community, check your inbox.

I have sent them to you, but you can check out that link down in the description. The next question is this is something else that is incredibly confusing, and I and I understand why. What would you say? Your voice is soothing. What? Are you going to say can you read this story to me or can you read this story for me? I think when it comes to to me, for me, uh yeah, it it it can definitely be tricky. So, the answer I would say your voice is soothing, can you read this story to me?

Now, there are different nuances between to me and for me, which I'm going to go over right now, but very quickly when you think of to me, it's more like uh you know, you're you're receiving something. Can you read this to me? Can you explain this to me? Can you show this to me? If you're going to use for me, think about like it's it's for your benefit. Maybe you're not able to. So, you may say to somebody, "Hey, can you read this for me?" But when I hear that, I think about well, for some reason maybe you're not able to read it. I'm not wearing my glasses and I say, "I look, I don't know.

Can can you do this for me?" And it's for my benefit. So, you're going to use to me when it emphasizes something that is perceived. That's news to me. Whenever [snorts] you're expressing an opinion, to me your plan is not going to work. Movement, bring it to me. Uh or something that impacts you personally. If it can happen to me, it can happen to you. For me, I've already mentioned like it's done for your benefit. Can you do the homework for me? Okay, I can't do it for some reason.

Maybe I don't want to do it. Can you do it for me? Maybe to satisfy your needs. It's really helpful in order for me to get ahead. Or just something that affects you personally.

This is too spicy for me. For me as an individual. I I want to follow up on this and and really make a little bit of a distinction when, you know, perceived opinion versus, you know, something that affects you personally. And I'm giving you some examples with both of them. So, let's look at this first one. This problem sounds difficult to me. All right, this is my opinion. I don't know how to solve it. It sounds difficult to me. If I were to say, "This problem is too difficult for me. I can't solve it." In that case, I'm really talking about how it's affecting me. It's difficult for me. Hopefully, it makes sense as I'm, you know, reading this and we're looking at it and going over it. Here's another one. This is important to me. You must help.

All right, I think it's it's important to me. This is my opinion. If I were to say, "This is important for me. You must help." I think it adds a little bit of emphasis, maybe even a little desperation, because it really does impact you personally. If you're saying this is important for me. Like more I need this. And then finally, and this is probably a little more interchangeable, which again is why this is confusing. This vocabulary is new to me versus this vocabulary is new for me. If you were to say those sentences, either one, I I don't think I would really take notice as far as perhaps the difference between them. But to follow up on this, if you want to see which is more commonly used, we can check out Ngram Viewer and I put in it's new to me versus it's new for me. And as you can see, you're more likely to come across somebody using to me in this context. Like, "Look, it's new to me." This vocabulary is new to me. This is a great resource if you really just want to know, okay, this is a phrase or these words, like what are people more likely to use and you can use this resource. What do you think? We were planning a family trip over the weekend. However, when we saw the weather report, it looked like it was going to rain mm the end, we decided to wait until the following weekend. Which word are you going to put in there? I've highlighted the whole phrase mm the end. And this is a common mistake that I hear. I think people are are familiar with both phrases. But once again, I want to help you eliminate and avoid some silly mistakes. So, in this situation, I hope you would have said in the end. In the end, we decided to wait until the following weekend. Often, this gets confused with at the end. So, let's have a look at in the end versus at the end. We're going to use in the end when we want to refer to the outcome of events or disclose a result. In the end, you know, what did we decide? We did what was best for the kids. Think of in the end as like saying ultimately, um you know, this is the result. This is what we decided to do. At the end, it's really a bit more specific because you're going to use this when referring to the end of something or want to indicate a specific time or place. What happened at the end of the story? I'm talking about that point at the end of the story. And then you might say, well, in the end, the character decided to do this. It's saying ultimately, this is what happened, the result. Also, I want to point out, and this is another reason why it's confusing, at the end of the day. So, at the end of the day, this means after everything is considered, ultimately, you've already heard me mention that. In this case, at the end of the day is similar to in the end.

But if we're just talking about in the end and at the end. We're just remember when it comes to at the end, think about specific point in time. But if we're going to use the expression at the end of the day, you know, this is what we decided. Ultimately, similar to in the end. I know this can be incredibly confusing. But uh just keep in mind in the end, ultimately at the end like that specific point. Here is your next question. Did you watch my new lesson on YouTube? Are you going to use the preposition in, on, or at? So we're talking about YouTube and in this case, you're going to use on. Did you watch my new lesson on YouTube? When it comes to prepositions, this is another time when I hear people make make just common mistakes. And when this happens, I people still understand what you're trying to say. But this is more about speaking accuracy. You want to make sure you're using the right preposition. Did you watch my new lesson on YouTube? Here are some general rules that you can follow when it comes to in, on, at. So when it comes to in, think about this enclosed space surrounded on all sides. It's used to talk about locations within a larger area. Like what is going on in your neighborhood? All right, neighborhood is within some larger area. It's used to talk about workplaces or industries. With a car, van, or taxi, get in the car. With water, in a lake, in a river. With class or with printed materials, I read it in a book. On is used when referring to like a surface. Maybe it's attached to something. It's used to refer to a position on any surface. Talk about a floor in a building, on the first floor or second floor. Describes a position along a road or river. I'm sure you've heard the phrase on the side of the road. It's used to talk about being on public transit, bus, plane, motorcycle. Used with left or right and with the media, on YouTube, on Netflix. At specific points, specific location. Used to refer to a position or location as a point. At work, at school, at church. Used to refer to an address. I live at such and such address. Used to refer to most shops or public areas. Refers to group activities or with school or university. I go to school at this, you know, name the school. And finally, you're going to use it with home or work. So, these are some general rules that you can keep in mind whenever we're talking about the prepositions in, on, or at. Here is the next one. What do you think? He acts as if he mhm the boss.

Is, was, were. Which one best completes the sentence? I say best because I feel like there is a grammatically correct answer, but at the same time colloquially, you may hear something else. I don't want to be too strict with these grammar rules. So, in this case, this is an example of the subjunctive. He acts as if he were the boss. So, here is the explanation. When describing an unreal situation, because he's not the boss, the verb following as if is in the past subjunctive, usually using were for all subjects. Now, I said that this is like the grammatically correct answer, the subjunctive. He acts as if he were the boss, but uh colloquially, you may hear someone say was because you have that subject-verb agreement. He acts as if he was the boss. So, I'm not going to be too strict when it comes to this because you may hear was, but just keep in mind the grammatically correct answer would be to use the subjunctive were.

This time, I want you to choose the best question for the following statement when having a casual conversation. My friend is traveling to South America. What do you think would be the correct question? Where are he or she going? Where are they going? Where is he or she going? Which question would you ask? If I were to say, "Look, hey, I have a friend uh you know, my friend is traveling to South America." And you have a follow-up question and you're going to ask one of these. This is a little bit It's not really a trick question. I do want to focus on well, what is grammatically correct, but also what is commonly used. So, what I would say is B, "Where are they going?"

And you may think, "Wait a second. Why are you using they?" Because they refers to more than one person. But, we're talking about the singular they has become the pronoun of choice to replace he and she in cases when the gender of the antecedent, the word the pronoun refers to, is unknown. To put it in, you know, simpler terms, you can use they as a gender-neutral pronoun. If you tell me, you say this to me, "My friend is traveling to South America." I do not know if your friend is a man or woman. And when you say, you know, he or she, it can sound just a little wordy. It's just not as smooth. So, naturally in spoken English, people are going to just say, "Well, where are they going?" And I'm going to use they as a gender-neutral pronoun. And to back up my claim, all right, I'm going to cite some evidence for you. The Associated Press settles the matter. So, the Associated Press weighed in on the matter in March 2017 and as far as talking about what is accepted, especially stylistically, it came out and said, yes, you can use they as a gender neutral pronoun. It is acceptable. It is grammatically correct. So, now you know. Here is the next question. I want you to choose the grammatically correct sentence. He is used to work late at night. He is used to working late at night. He is used to working late at night.

Now, I'm sure that you chose the correct answer, which is C. He is used to working late at night. So, in this case, I'm following used to with either a noun or gerund. In the example, I'm following it with the gerund working. Used to working. It just means you are accustomed or familiar with something. Just That is the meaning of used to plus the noun or gerund. Here's another example. I'm not used to eating late at night. And I'm not used to doing something. If I'm going to use used to followed by a base verb, then this is more of a modal verb that has a different meaning. It's used to describe past habits, states, or repeated actions that are no longer true in the present.

Here's an example. I used to go dancing on the weekends. It's something I did in the past, but I no longer do it in the present. So, the meaning is going to change depending on whether you follow it with a noun or gerund or whether you're going to follow it with the base verb. Let me give you a couple more examples. So, here is used to plus noun or gerund again. The meaning is you're accustomed to something. You're familiar with it. When everything is going wrong in your life, but you're used to it. And following it with the pronoun it. You're used to it. I'm accustomed to this happening. This is a fun little meme.

Used to plus the base verb. Again, this is a modal verb. We're describing something in the past, but you just no longer do it. Thought this was funny. I used to be a people person, but people ruined that for me. And you just you are no longer a people person in the present, but in the past you used to be a people person. Here is the next question, or it's really just a fill-in-the-blank. Which phrase are you going to use? This is the first time I mhm sushi. Are we going to use have eaten, had eaten, or am eating? The key phrase that I'm going to highlight is this well, the first time.

And that would really give it away. But in this case, you're going to say this is the first time I have eaten sushi. So, the present perfect tense is used with the phrase the first time to describe an experience that is new or has just happened. It emphasizes the novelty of the experience and its connection to the present. This is the first time that I have done something. Keep that in mind as far as that phrase.

relationship. Here are some more examples that will hopefully maybe clear up some confusion. The less money I spend, the less I have to worry about saving because you're able to save. Or the faster the car is, the more dangerous it is to drive. Again, using two different comparatives, faster, more dangerous, that cause and effect relationship. The more the students study for the test, the higher their scores will be. Cause and effect. Just keep that that's the main thing I want you to keep in mind when it comes to these double comparatives. The more the students study for the test, yeah, it makes sense that the higher the test scores will be.

How would you complete this sentence? I really need is a cup of coffee. There are maybe a couple words that you could use, uh but there's one uh one in particular that I want to talk about, which is the word what. What I really need is a cup of coffee. And in this case, using what in this sentence, it is a cleft sentence, a what cleft sentence. You may be thinking, what the hell are cleft sentences? So, cleft sentences are complex sentences that have a meaning we can express with a simple sentence. Of course, you don't have to say what I need is a cup of coffee. You can just say I I need a cup of coffee. So, you can use a what cleft to draw attention to the most interesting or important part. Here are some examples.

What they did was give us a refund. Of course, I could just say, you know, oh, they gave us a refund. But, if I want to draw attention to it, I say, oh, what they did is give us a refund. What she wants is some peace and quiet. Really adding emphasis when I use this what she wants. Or what we need to do is get some batteries. I think this is a common use of a what cleft sentence. Somebody saying, look, what we need to do is this thing. And you're just emphasizing something that needs to get done. Instead saying, look, oh, we need to do this. What we need to do is blah blah blah blah. So, those are what cleft sentences. And now you know.

Which sentence would you choose? Neither of the answers are correct. Neither of the answers were correct. Or neither of the answers is correct. Just look at it right now. Which one do you think, okay, this is the right answer. And this is a little bit of a trick question. Neither of the answers is correct. What I want you to understand is this explanation. Neither is a singular pronoun. It refers to not either of two things or people and therefore requires a singular verb. Neither of the answers is correct. If you said neither of the answers are correct, that that also works. And you may use that and you may come across that casually in spoken English. So, that's why I said it's a little bit of a trick question, but to follow up on that, this is from the Britannica Dictionary talking about the usage of neither.

According to the rules of grammar, the pronoun neither, or neither if you want to use that pronunciation, is singular and requires a singular verb. Neither is correct. However, and this is why I tried to trick you a little bit, in informal writing and speech, the plural form is common when neither is followed by of. Neither of the answers is or are correct would be okay. Either one or neither of them know or knows my friend, and you can use either the singular or plural verb, but just to reiterate, neither is considered a singular pronoun. It really just depends on whether you're just saying neither or neither of something. Keep that in mind.

Here's the next one. I started learning English mhm an early age. Are you going to complete this sentence with since or from? In an example like this, I think since and from are commonly confused. So, the correct answer is B, from. I started learning English from an early age. Let's now talk about why. So, you're going to use from to denote the starting point of an event, action, or journey. You're going to use since to indicate a point in time that continues to the present. Uh I'm giving you some examples hopefully to to clear clear up any confusion. So, the doctor will be here from 10:00 a.m. tomorrow, all right? Starting at that point in time, from 10:00 a.m.

The doctor has been here since 10:00 a.m. Indicating that point that's continues to the present, since 10:00 a.m. The exhibition runs from March to May. That is the the starting point of this event or action or the exhibition has been running since March. Talking about that time in the past continuing to the present. So, just keep that in mind because this one it would sound a little awkward if you used since with early age. You're going to do something from an early age. And think of that as a collocation from an early age.

[laughter] What are you probably wondering like wait, what what do you want me to say?

It is a question. So, just keep that in mind. How would you complete this question? Everyone left. I don't know if that helps you me making these gestures, but what I'm trying to get to is these tag questions. Everyone left, didn't they? So, tag questions this is a statement and followed by a mini question. We use tag questions to ask for confirmation. Just keep in mind the the pattern here. You have a positive statement followed by a negative tag. You have money, don't you?

If I had eaten earlier, I'm right now. So, the answer, the way I'd complete the sentence, if I had eaten earlier, I wouldn't be hungry right now. This is an example of a mixed conditional. We're talking about a past condition, in which case we're going to use the past perfect along with a present result. And I'm going to use would plus the base verb. So, we have conditionals like the zero conditional, first conditional, second conditional, third conditionals, but we can mix them up, which is why uh it can be confusing. Past condition plus a present result. Here are some other examples. If you had asked for directions, you wouldn't be lost. So, in this case, you did not ask for directions, right? It didn't happen.

And what's the result right now? Well, we're lost. And I can express that using this mixed conditional. Or if they had taken the train, they would be here by now. Past condition, present result. And if I had taken my medicine, I would feel better. And unfortunately, I didn't take the medicine, and that's why I feel a little sick or nauseous right now. We decided to go out mhm, the rain. In spite of, despite, or both are correct? Maybe I'm trying to trick you here. What do you think? In spite of, despite, or C, both of them are correct. We decided to go out Both are correct. In spite of the rain or despite the rain. Both of them are correct. These These two are They're really interchangeable, but I would like to follow up on this. This is from Cambridge, talking about in spite of and despite. I'll just read through this quickly.

In spite of and despite are prepositional expressions. In spite of and despite have a similar meaning to although or even though. They express a contrast between two things. They are both more common in writing than speaking, and take note of that because I think in spoken English, people are really going to use although or even though probably more frequently. spite of. We usually use in spite of and despite with a noun. Here's another example. They arrived to the airport late despite leaving in plenty of time, and I'm using that gerund leaving. They arrived to the airport late in spite of leaving in plenty of time. Either one is correct, they mean the same thing. You can use in spite of or despite.

There is a bear in our neighborhood mhm sometimes rummages through our garbage cans. If you're unfamiliar with the word rummage, it just means to look through something quickly and carelessly. So, the bear may rummage through a garbage can. I may rummage through my closet or suitcase. Going to add a little vocabulary into this lesson for you just for fun. So, the answer is that. There is a bear in our neighborhood that sometimes rummages through our garbage cans. And when we're talking about these relative clauses that, which, who, you know, they can be confused every now and then. Just remember that that is used when referring to people, animals, or things, which when referring to animals or things, and who when referring to people. If we're talking about a restrictive clause, in that case, the information is needed. We're going to use that or who. If we're talking about a nonrestrictive clause, then and the information is not needed, then we'll use which or who. Sometimes people get confused, especially with animals, uh I may hear who, and in this case, when we're talking about dogs, cats, or in this case a bear, you're going to use that. This is a restrictive clause. There's a bear in our neighborhood that sometimes rummages through our garbage cans. I need that information. It's a restrictive clause, and if my choice is between that or who, talking about animals, I'm going to use that. He didn't realize what doing. And this [laughter] this guy looks like that in in this picture. There are several words that are missing here. And this is a This is a common mistake. I come across this quite frequently, especially in just discussions. People are talking casually, and they might say this sentence. He didn't realize what he [snorts] was doing.

He didn't realize what he was doing. But in conversation, the mistake that gets made is because of that what there. In normal with a question, the subject and verb are going to be inverted. Somebody would say, "He didn't realize what was he doing?" And to my ears, when I hear that, it sounds awkward. You're going to use he didn't realize what he was doing. This is a noun clause, and within this clause, you're going to follow the normal subject-verb pattern. Within a noun clause, the subject comes before the verb even when the noun clause begins with a question word such as what, where, when, why, who. Here are some examples.

I don't know who he is. And I think that's a common uh time when this mistake is made. Somebody will say, "I don't know." And then they're going to follow it with a noun uh a question word and then a noun clause. I don't know what, or I don't know who, I don't know how. But you want to use that subject-verb. Uh here's another example. Please tell me how you got lost. Or we know what we must do. And I'm following that subject-verb pattern. She's New York City. She'll be back tomorrow. Are you going to complete this sentence with been to or gone to? Sometimes these phrases can be a little confusing. I want to clear that up. I hope that you said gone to. She's gone to New York City. She'll be back tomorrow. So, there is a difference between been to and gone to. What is it?

So, you're going to use been to to describe completed actions. I have already been to the store and now I'm back. All right? But, I've already been through to the store. It's completed. Or we have been to India twice in the last year. And I'm I'm no longer in India at this point. Gone to is describing a visit that you have not returned from just yet. He's gone to the toilet.

He'll be back soon. You missed her. You just missed her. She's already gone to bed. Or of course I could say, she's gone to New York City. She'll be back tomorrow. Then that case you know, okay, she's still in New York. Keep some of this in mind.

Hopefully with these example sentences, it kind of sheds light as to what's going on as to the meaning and thinking, okay, been to it's completed, gone to, okay, you're not back just yet. How would you complete this sentence? It is high time you your homework. Are you going to use do, did, or have done with that phrase? It's high time. All right? We're adding a little emphasis talking about, you know, something that should have been changed a long time ago, but we're going to use the past did. It is high time you did your homework. Here's the explanation. It is high time is a phrase used to refer to something that should have been done in the past and you want to emphasize that this really needs to get done right now.

I I could say and again high time really adds emphasis, but it's also common to say it's about time, which is a phrase maybe you're familiar with or just somebody saying look, it's time we you're going to use that past tense. So, that's what I wanted to really show you right here. Giving you some suggestions as well. It's high time you subscribe to the channel and I'm really adding emphasis. If I say it's about time you subscribe to the channel, that is more commonly used and you're going to come across that it's about time yes, you did something or you know, we can take out about. It's time you subscribe to the channel.

That is also commonly used and I could use that as well. It's time that you subscribe to the channel. Hopefully more that I keep telling you that you should do this, you're then more likely to subscribe to the channel. It's high time you subscribe to the channel just adding that emphasis. I thought this was humorous and I think humor is a good way to learn the language and understand it. Well, this is just more of a rhyme. It's high time for pie time. I don't know. It sounds it's I I thought it was funny at the time. Maybe now that I'm in the moment it doesn't seem as funny. So, I apologize.

Here's the next one. Not until the last moment that the event was canceled. Are going to use did we learn, had we learn or do we learn? I hope that you chose A, did we learn. Not until the last minute did we learn that the event was canceled. I did say the right one, A, didn't I? Yes, it was A. Did we learn? I forgot for a second. Okay, here's the explanation. Uh this cuz this is inversion. We use inversion after negative adverbials, in this case like not until. This means reversing the normal subject-verb word order word order in a sentence. We can use inversion to add emphasis. All right, talking about just creative ways to add emphasis, but that's why this grammar can be confusing. And we're going to add emphasis because it has a persuasive and impressive effect. Like not until the last moment did we learn that the event was canceled. And you know, I think this is very useful in storytelling because you're adding that emphasis and it's persuasive and it's yeah, it just really captures your attention. Not until the last moment did this thing happen. So this is an example of inversion and we're going to invert the the subject and the verb in this case did we learn moving that modal ahead of the subject. Which sentence uses reported speech correctly? I'll just read the three. A, she said that she had visited the museum yesterday. B, she said that she had that she has visited the museum yesterday. Or C, she said she visited the museum yesterday. And I think I forgot sorry, it was C. There should be uh quotation marks to end the quote after yesterday. Which sentence uses reported speech? Sorry about that that mistake. It's not C, okay? I'll go ahead and tell you, C is not the answer. The answer is A. She said that she had visited the museum yesterday. In reported speech, the past perfect had visited is used to describe an action completed before the reporting verb said. So, said is the reported the reporting verb and I'm going to use the past perfect because it's completed. We're talking about yesterday. That is my time expression. She said that she had visited the museum yesterday. That is the rule to follow. These are commonly confused. At the store, we need to pick up some fruit. Mhm, apples, bananas, and watermelon. Am I going to use e.g. or i.e.? At the store, we need to pick up some fruit and I'm, you know, coming up with this list and in this case, I'm going to use e.g. So, both e.g. and i.e. they they stand for something. E.g. stands for well, this is the like the the Latin, I believe, exempli gratia. I'm not going to try to pronounce it, but it just means for example.

And you're giving these different examples. I love eating exotic fruits. E.g. for example, durian, passion fruit, horn melon, guava, and jackfruit. I.e. is the abbreviation for id est. This means in other words. I could say the the fact that they came up with something like I don't even I I I think I wrote I don't even know why I wrote this.

Hippopotomonstrosesquippedaliophobia It's a long word. I.e. instead of the fear of long words shows that psychiatrists do have a sense of humor. So, this is a word. It basically means the fear of long words. So, instead of saying this long word, I can use i.e. the fear of long words.

Instead of hippopotomonstrosesquippedaliophobia And I And again, I can't even go through it. But yeah, check this out. This is This is what it means. The fear of long words. And yeah, I guess psychiatrists do have a sense of humor. Just keep in mind, e.g. for example, i.e. instead of. Complete the sentence with the correct verb. Which verb tense would complete this sentence? By the time you arrive, I ~~had~~ my homework. This is an example, and really by the time, you know, is an indicator, but you're going to use the future perfect. Whenever you see by the time, you should think perfect tense. And then you just need to decide, okay, is it the past perfect or the future perfect? Uh so, in this case, we're going to use the future perfect construction. It's used to express an action that will be completed before a specific time in the future. By the time you arrive, you have not arrived just yet. This is in the future.

Now, what will happen before then? I will have completed, or I will have finished, my homework. I'm using the future perfect tense. If I wanted to give you an example on the right, like by the time I arrived, and I'm talking about in the past, everyone had already eaten dinner. And now I'm using the past perfect. Everyone had eaten dinner. So, anytime you see by the time, just think of perfect tense, either future or past. But since we're talking about the future perfect, it is a verb tense that is not as often used, which is why it can be a little tricky or confusing, which is what makes it more advanced grammar. And here are a lot of example sentences uh using the future perfect tense. I'll I'll just read a couple of them. Um by next Friday, I will have finished my report. And then I'm giving you, okay, what is like what's happening? The action of finishing the report will be completed by next Friday. Uh number two, by the time we arrive, uh, they will have left the restaurant. The action of leaving the restaurant will be completed before we arrive.

You can, you know, go through the rest of them. Like I said, download these notes. I really do think that reading through these different sentences help understand the grammar concepts that I've been going over in the lesson. Did you catch ~~uh~~ fish today? Are you going to use some or any? Once again, this is when I hear people make a simple mistake. We're talking about a question, so we're going to use any. Did you catch any fish today? And there are rules that you can follow when it comes to some and any, even though there are also exceptions, which is what makes grammar pretty annoying. So, in general, you're going to use some when talking about affirmative statements. And I'm I'm going to actually bounce back and forth.

Here are a couple of examples. I have some extra pizza or we have some questions. Both of those are affirmative statements. In general, you're going to use any when making negative statements or asking questions. I don't want any pizza or a question, are there any questions? Now, the exception would be that you're offering something and in that case you you'll use some. Would you like some tea? Would you like some coffee? So, when you offer something, you'll use some. There are also exceptions with conjunctions like if or whether. And in this case, it's a statement, "Please tell me if you have any questions." And we're using if, "If you have any questions." Uh, there's also, uh, useful phrases. That's some plus a noun.

And he said, I don't I don't know if you've read the book Charlotte's Web, but this is part of it. That's some pig. You're saying, "Wow, that is very impressive." And there's also the phrase and then some. You're kind of talking about a little extra or a little more than what's indicated. They paid us a thousand dollars and then some. Right? We don't know what that extra is, but that's how I'm saying it, and then some. And then the useful phrase with any by any means necessary. We must win by any means necessary. The phrases, this is more vocabulary. Don't try to think about those as far as some of these rules are concerned, but those are useful phrases or phrases that you could use with some or any, but just in general, keep it in mind. In general, some with affirmative statements and in general any with negative statements or questions, that uh I think is for the most part going to clear up any of those mistakes.

Which sentence is correct? He stopped to smoke because he was coughing, or he stopped smoking because he was coughing. There's a reason why I've chosen this as an example, mostly because of the verb stopped. So, the correct answer is B. He stopped smoking because he was coughing. Stop smoking means that you quit, while stop to smoke means that you really just paused whatever it was you were doing in order to smoke. So, the context, it wouldn't it wouldn't really fit in this case because somebody's coughing and I want to say that the person quit. He stopped smoking because he was coughing. Now, I mentioned the verb stop because when it comes to verbs that are either followed by gerunds or infinitives, for the most part many verbs uh you're either just going to follow it with a gerund or you're just going to follow it with an infinitive. Some verbs, such as the verb like, you can follow it with either a gerund or infinitive. I like teaching English. I like to teach English. Both of them are okay, and they mean the same thing. And that's the key thing that I want to highlight right here, because with these verbs right here, you can follow them with either a gerund or infinitive, but the meaning changes. Just like I was showing you with stop doing something versus stop to do something. And I'm not again, I'm not going to go through all these examples, but I just wanted to point out those verbs. Stop, try, remember, forget. You can follow those verbs with either a gerund or an infinitive, but depending on which one you use, the meaning is going to change. And hopefully that this was a very clear example. Stop smoking and you quit smoking versus stop to smoke or stop to do something and you pause whatever it is you're doing in order to do whatever activity.

So, I hope that I just blew your mind with all of this different, confusing, tricky, advanced grammar. And if I did blow your mind and you learned something new, you can let me know by hitting that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time. So long.

LESSON 169 OF 749

Advanced English Vocabulary You'll Actually Use (C2 Level)

Watch the original lesson on YouTube

I want to teach you some Advanced C2 phrases to help you build your vocabulary and C2 is Cambridge's highest level which shows that you are basically a proficient English speaker now you are probably looking at me and thinking hey this guy looks familiar but perhaps you can't quite put your finger on it and that is the first phrase that I want to teach you to put my finger on something this means to discover the exact reason why a situation is the way it is and there are three things that I want to tell you about this phrase now often the something is just going to be it which is talking about the situation to put my finger on it the next thing that you should know is you're likely to hear this being used with the negative I cannot put my finger on it or I'm not able to put my finger on it and finally

I think most of the time you're going to hear this phrase being used with can't quite I can't quite put my finger on it now I said that maybe you think I look familiar but you can't quite put your finger on it so let me help you maybe you think that I look a little like Mr Beast or Andy from the office I get that from time to time when pronouncing this phrase keep in mind linking may occur this is when we link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word and it's almost like we're moving that consonant sound over so we can link the phrase finger on it finger on it I can't quite put my finger on it just listen for it something evil I can't put my finger on it this is one thing missing what well I can't quite put my finger on it something was off but I couldn't quite put my finger on it so as we go through the lesson I am going to teach you the meaning of each phrase I'll talk about how it's commonly used as well as go over the pronunciation so that you can say them just like me and if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and if you don't subscribe you're going to be kicking yourself later and that is the next phrase that I want to teach you to kick yourself it's not a good thing this is used to say that you are very annoyed with yourself because you've done something stupid or you've missed out on the chance to do something

now often you may follow this phrase with the preposition for to kick yourself for well doing something or for not doing something so let me give you some examples of things that I have been kicking myself for so I've been kicking myself for not investing in Apple stock many years ago I've also been kicking myself for eating chocolate late at night and that's because it just doesn't help me sleep and I've also been kicking myself for not exercising enough this year that is something that I told myself that I was going to do and I haven't done enough of it and that's why I've been kicking myself for it just keep in mind we're going to use the reflexive pronoun to kick myself for something to kick yourself to kick himself to kick herself and we use that reflexive pronoun for pronunciation I think it's pretty simple and straightforward you're just going to say one word right after the other to kick yourself you know your mom's kicking herself for missing your swim team finals I still kick myself for missing that topless cheerleader with 100 foot chocolate teddy bear D you don't like boo boo but tomorrow you might and you'll be kicking yourself not entering this contest now if you would like to improve your speaking in pronunciation skills because maybe you think you're making a slight mistake but you can't quite put your finger on it well there's a great app that I think can help you so let me quickly tell you about the sponsor of today's lesson Elsa speak this is an app that I first heard about from many of you so let's check it out you just download the app and then you can start exploring many of the different features you can have at conversations practice daily lessons improve pronunciation let's say that you want to focus on a specific topic like small talk you just go to study by topic small talk and there are many different lessons to choose from but I think one of the coolest features is to be able to practice words and phrases that you want to learn so I can just put in the sentence I can't quite put my finger on it and then we can listen to it I can't quite put my finger on it and then practice saying it I can't quite put my finger on it now let me show you what happens if I make a pronunciation mistake I can't quite put my finger on it as you can see you get instant feedback which then allows you to try to make adjustments so use the Link in the description or scan the QR code on the screen to download Elsa and get 7 Days of a pro membership for free or you can use the other Link in the description to get 85% off a lifetime membership or 40% off a one-year membership so take advantage of this opportunity so that you're not kicking yourself later and check out the links and discounts below let's get back to our C2 phrases and the next one that I have for you is at your own risk this is really used to serve as a warning with full understanding that what you're doing is dangerous and you are responsible for your own safety so it's like you can do something dangerous but you are responsible so you should do it at your own risk to help give you a better understanding as to how this phrase is used I have some news headlines for you beware typing these four characters will make your iPhone crash do at your own risk to bog at your own risk town of New Market advises and enter outer space at your own risk I know that's risky and probably something that many of us don't have to worry about when pronouncing this phrase you should know that assimilation may occur this is when two sounds they blend together to create a new sound so the T and Y May blend together and you get this slight CH sound and it's almost like we're going to put that CH sound between at and your and that allows us to connect the words together at your own risk linking may also OCC her and we can link the final consonant sound in your with the beginning vowel sound in own at your own risk now one thing I want you to be aware of is that assimilation may not always occur you may hear people pronounce the words individually here are some examples get involved at your own risk enter at your own risk camp at your own risk but you may hear people blend those sounds as well as link that phrase so here are some examples and I want you to listen for those two things i' enter at your own risk no lifeguard on duty swim at your own risk get a move on I like this phrase it just means to hurry and often I think you're going to use it as a command maybe you tell someone get a move on or let's get a move on so this is an excellent way to add emphasis instead of saying hurry up just say get a move on are you listening get a move on go on no not doing it get a move on got a hit 70's charger going to move on for pronunciation the final T in get you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T it's going to sound like a soft

D and this is very common with the American accent because well I'm from the US so when the t comes between two vowel sounds many Americans May pronounce it as a flap T and then I can link the flap t with the article a get a get a move on perhaps you are thinking right now let's get a move on to our next phrase which is hard to come by so if you say that something is hard to come by it refers to getting something using effort or by chance or just in a way that has not been explained now this is a picture that my little girl Drew it's very valuable to me there's not anything like it I'm not going to sell it to you because I could say pictures like this are very hard to come by actually we have quite a few of them but that's that's just an example now you may sometimes hear people say that something is difficult to come by and if you want to compare the frequency we can check out engram viewer and as you can see it's more common to say that something is hard to come by when pronouncing this phrase I just want you to know that the word to actually has two different pronunciations a strong form and a weak form the strong form to just sounds like the number the weak form T has more of a schw sound it's much softer and this is because two as a function word it often gets reduced and The Vow sounds going to change slightly to come by something is hard to come by I just want you to listen for that week two true friends are hard to come by second chances are really hard to come by things happen on the street proof is hard comum by we seek political Asylum visas are extremely hard to come by then we have make a run for it this means to suddenly start running in order to escape from somewhere so this is another phrase that you can use to really add emphasis it's starting to rain we'd better make a run for it here are some funny memes to give you a little more context let's make a run for it she can't catch both of us I don't always get out of prison but when I do I make a run for it should we make a run for it he ain't got no backup when pronouncing this phrase more linking may occur we can link two different phrases make a and for it to make a run for it that's it we're making a run for it we're going for the rock okay maybe maybe we can make a run for it just get to the car then there's lose count this means to not be able to remember how many times something has happened or just to forget a number or total so often you're going to follow this phrase with the preposition of to lose count of something I could say I lost count of how much money we spent last month also because of the meaning not remembering something in the past you're often going to use this phrase in the past using the past simple or the present perfect I I could say I don't know how many students I've taught over the years I've lost count so as you can see it's much more common to say I lost count or I've lost count as opposed to saying I lose count in the present for pronunciation if using this phrase in the past a lesion may occur this is when sounds or syllables get removed so the final T and lost May Al lied because it comes between two consonant sounds and and you don't really hear it I've lost count or I lost count here are some examples how many times have you been cloned I've lost count how many do you have now I don't know 8,9 you lost count time for phase five of my plan or possibly phase four or possibly phase six I've entirely lost count from top to bottom another phrase that I really like it just means completely thoroughly all parts of something and again you're really add adding emphasis that something has been done completely often you may end up using this phrase at the end of a statement if I were to say I want you to paint this fence from top to bottom or they clean the house from top to bottom or we're going to have to search the office from top to bottom for pronunciation once again you're going to hear that week two top to bottom and the word bottom you're going to hear me pronounce those t's as a flat T because they come between two vowel sounds bottom from top to bottom I'm in charge of discipline conduct and Tru Andy from top to bottom K through 12 meaning we will burn the program to the ground and I mean from top to bottom Road Islands a mess from top to bottom during which you would do all your homework and clean the apartment from top to bottom then there's follow suit this just means to do the same as someone else it's like you're saying somebody does something and then another person follows suit maybe I tell you well I'm going to quit my job and I think some of my colleagues plan to follow suit they're going to do the same to give you more context here are some news headlines Brazil just banned X could other countries follow suit man driven to clear Road of litter hopes others follow suit and and in this case driven just means someone is compelled to do something and yeah let's hope that others follow suit as used sles rate expectations grow that Korea will follow suit next month I don't think the pronunciation is too difficult the word suit can be a little tricky because that ooh vowel sound it's a little longer but your lips are rounded your tongue is going to be high in your mouth so just say it after me suit to follow suit you got it he since started a trend here in Hollywood with other celebrities following suit an hour ago China mobilized forces and now Russia's following suit I was playing it cool you were too I was just following suit the next phrase is in attendance this just means present at a function or place and often you would say that someone is in attendance generally this is going to refer to an important person it could be a celebrity or even a family member it just really depends on the event or perhaps it could be used to highlight a great number of people if I were to say thousands were in attendance to give you some examples I could say graduation is a memorable event will your parents be in attendance because yeah they are important people or thousands of people are in attendance for the Super Bowl matchup Taylor Swift and Johnny Depp are some of the celebrities in attendance when pronouncing this phrase just keep in mind more linking may occur linking the final consonant sound in in with the vowel sound in attendance in attendance for the thousands in attendance and the millions watching around the world there's going to be a ribbon cutting ceremony with Governor duly in attendance I intend to propose who her tonight at the restaurant our friends and family in attendance then there's the phrase to have a chip on your shoulder it's not a good thing because it means that you are angry all the time because you've been treated unfairly or you just feel like you're not as good as other people so think about situations that involve well groups of people perhaps there is an athlete or a celebrity who feels that they have been treated unfairly by the media and yeah this happens maybe they really show that anger and then you could say he or she has a chip on his or her shoulder and I I do want to point out the grammar because we're using a subject pronoun as well as a possessive adjective I have a chip on my shoulder

maybe you have a chip on your shoulder he has a chip on his shoulder or she has a chip on her shoulder when pronouncing this phrase more linking may occur there are actually two different phrases that we can link have as well as chip on to have a chip on your shoulder you're stubborn you have a chip on your shoulder you don't care if your co-workers like you somebody's got to show them how the real world Works kid's got a chip on his shoulder 23 he's still living at home don't give them reason to say to the Press you have a chip on your shoulder will you do that for me I don't have a chip on my shoulder then there's I wouldn't dream of doing something this is used to say that you would not do something because you think it's wrong or silly so really you're you're adding emphasis and assuring someone that look this is not going to happen maybe I I tell you look you can't quit your job and you respond and say I wouldn't dream of it and that's something that I wanted to point out is that often that something is is going to be it when talking about the situation I wouldn't dream of it now you may use never with this phrase I would never dream of but as you can see it's just more common to say wouldn't I wouldn't dream of it and if I'm not going to use it keep in mind you're going to follow this phrase with the Jaren I wouldn't dream of doing something I could say I wouldn't dream of quitting my job because I really love being a part of your English learning Journey for pronunciation there's more linking linking the final consonant sound in dream with the vowel sound in of dream of I wouldn't dream of it you're not staying here tonight Lillian I wouldn't dream of it we can't leave him waiting I wouldn't dream of it temper I wouldn't dream of challenging you no no we we can go home by ourselves I wouldn't dream of leaving you alone let's do a little review I really appreciate that you've been here in attendance for this lesson and now that you've learned these phrases from top to bottom I hope that you go out and use them because you need to practice them like I'm using them right now so that you don't forget and you don't want to be in the middle of a conversation and say look I know the phrase but I just can't quite put my finger on it so one suggestion is that you just continue building your vocabulary by watching another video Lesson and if you do that I think other people will follow suit

now I I understand if you have to go and you can't watch watch another lesson right now and then you're not going to keep building your vocabulary so do so at your own risk but I I definitely think if you don't watch another lesson you're probably going to be kicking yourself later because quality lessons like this are hard to come by so I'm going to wrap things up and make a run for it but if you enjoyed the lesson and learned something new please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced English Vocabulary | Quiz Lesson

hello and welcome to today's lesson my name is wes this is interactive english and if this is your first time here visiting our channel it's all about just helping you practice and improve your english skills and today i want to help you build your vocabulary specifically we are going to be talking about some advanced vocabulary words and i say that it's advanced and i feel like i'm trying to walk a fine line here because i really i do want to teach you some more advanced words that are going to help you be more precise and that if you want to describe a situation or express yourself that you will be able to do that with these words because they are more specific i try to find words that you will come across if you're reading a story or maybe you're listening to the news and that you could still use in everyday conversation so again this is going to be an interactive lesson because what i want you guys to do is i want you to participate i'm going to give you um a bunch of different questions and then i will give you a moment to try to think of an answer and then of course i will tell you what the answer is so let's go ahead and begin and the first set of questions that i have for you i'm going to give you the word and i just want you to choose the correct meaning what is the meaning of this word so let's begin here with cajole so this i'll go ahead and tell you this is a verb to cajole to cajole someone what do you think this verb means the correct answer is be to cajole someone means to persuade someone i'm going to add something else you're persuading them with flattery and what that means is you're you're just saying a bunch of nice things to this person in order to persuade them the next one flabbergasted all right i chose this one um i think this one definitely is a little more common and this is one you may have heard i just like saying the word uh flabbergasted it's an adjective what do you think it means if somebody says that that they were flabbergasted the correct answer is a if you if somebody is flabbergasted it just means that they're greatly surprised so it's a great adjective that you can use to describe someone who is extremely surprised and you say that this person was flabbergasted the next question or the next vocabulary word that i have for you is this one vociferous so again this is an adjective vociferous is it talking about the sound of loud music expressing opinions loudly or is it talking about the noise of a traffic jam if something is uh or someone is vociferous then it basically means that they are expressing opinions loudly and you're you're doing it with a lot of energy and emotion you might also commonly use this word as an adverb and you say that somebody was arguing vociferously and that they were doing it loudly and they're really expressing their opinion vociferous or as an adverb vociferously the next one opine this is a verb i'll go ahead and tell you two opine what do you think it means if someone is opining alpine means to express an opinion so somebody might opine and in that case they're sharing their opinion and we could combine it with the word that we just talked about perhaps somebody might opine vociferously and they are expressing their opinion loudly with a lot of energy and emotion uh to opine the next part that we're going to go through is i am going to give you a statement and i'm going to use uh the word and i want you to see i want you to put the word in context all right using the the sentence see if you can put the word in context and tell me uh what the meaning of the word is so let's go ahead and begin with this one he used irrational arguments and obfuscated the primary issue all right i highlighted the word for you obfuscated what does it mean to obfuscate does it mean to highlight the importance to make something less clear or to purposefully lie the correct answer is b to obfuscate means to make something less clear and i'll go ahead and add something else you could say you are trying to make it more difficult to understand so in this case to give you an example i think of perhaps politicians if somebody does not want to tell the truth or they want to talk about some issue and do it in a way that may confuse other people and then you could say they're trying to obfuscate the truth or they're trying to obfuscate some issue or some problem and they want to make it more difficult to understand they want to make it less clear the next one is the student asked me my age it was such an impertinent question what do you think it means if you describe someone or something as impertinent does it mean that it's showing ignorance it's inquisitive or it's lacking respect if you say that someone or something is impertinent it means that it is c it is lacking respect so i often think this adjective may come as a predicate adjective after the verb to be and you'd say somebody is impertinent or they are impertinent um in its lacking respect the next question i have for you is this one's a little more difficult over the years our high school reunions have become a perfunctory does that mean that it is done quickly without care increasingly interesting or necessary to attend if you describe something as perfunctory it means a it is done quickly without care you could also use this in the context of perhaps like a greeting somebody might describe a greeting as perfunctory if you meet somebody on the street and they they say hello but it's really just done quickly it doesn't seem like they want to talk to you and that that is the way and you could say it was it was a perfunctory greeting it was done quickly without much care or interest it's perfunctory the next one is he had had better days that's why he found his roommate's celebratory mood quite irksome does that mean that something is comforting surprising or annoying if you say well i've had better days then that means that well you didn't have a good day so if somebody has a celebratory mood perhaps you would find that ericsson which means that you would find it quite annoying have another part to this vocabulary practice quiz so what i'm going to do for this part is

i'm going to give you a sentence with a blank so there's a blank in there and i want you to tell me which vocabulary word best completes the sentence so in this case you really need to know the meaning of the word and you really need to understand the context of the sentence what's it trying to say so let's begin uh with this one which is there's a monument to pay um to her achievements which of those words those vocabulary words best completes this sentence the correct answer is b homage all right there's a monument to pay homage to her achievements and homage is talking about a deep respect that you show for someone and i think this this is actually a collocation pay homage to pay homage those two words are frequently used together the next one is right here i could say that the company um their income on the tax forms which word best completes this sentence so the correct answer is c fabricated all right in this case the company fabricated their income on the tax forms which is not something that you want to do because to fabricate something means to create something false in order to deceive someone so you could use it with um somebody might fabricate a story that is a common way in which you would use this verb to fabricate the next one is this question right here i can't believe my family had the um to go on vacation without me which word best completes the sentence complacency temerity or the paucity the word that we're looking for is be temerity i can't believe my family had the temerity to go on vacation without me temerity is um it's a noun and it's talking about the willingness to do something that may upset others so in this case you would use it in talking about a situation that you're really surprised that somebody did something because it's likely to upset others and you would say i don't believe they had the temerity to do this thing the willingness to do it because it would upset other people like in this example all right the next one some people believe that technology is a um for solving climate change this is definitely a more advanced word i think all of these are more advanced which word completes that sentence the answer that we're looking for is a panacea so some people believe that technology is a panacea for solving climate change and a panacea is talking about well just something that will solve all problems so those are the the words that i wanted to go over with you in this lesson and again if you want to become a member support our channel uh you can get a youtube membership or become a patron we offer some different and cool rewards there are links down in the description below if you want to check that out so remember these are the words i put together this word list this is your word list in case you want to review and maybe practice some more wait uh a few weeks watch the lesson again and see if you remember the the meaning of these words i hope that you guys i think you guys did very well i do think they are more advanced words but i tried to find words that are also common that you would hear in a tv show movie or if you're watching the news but you could probably also use in conversation depending on the the context and the situation thank you guys so much for joining me and watching this video keep practicing and keep up the good work and i will see you next time so long

Advanced English in Under 2 Minutes Try These Phrases

advanced phrases that native speakers use to be more precise, descriptive, and persuasive when both speaking and writing. To strike a chord with someone, this means to resonate emotionally or intellectually. I hope that this lesson strikes a chord with you and creates this emotional response that that makes you go ahead and hit that like button. And when I started sobbing uncontrollably, apparently that struck a chord with quite a lot of people. The next phrase, a case in point. This means a good example of something that was just mentioned. So think about this phrase as having the same usage as the phrase for example. Now, often you're going to just say, for example, this phrase is commonly used, but it's always good to get a little bit of variety because a slight nuance would be that you're going to use a case in point in more formal situations. I could say many species are struggling to adapt to climate change. A case in point is the polar bear. Boss has to loosen up every now and again. Case in point, me, I'm half loaded right now. Then there's the phrase to go against the grain. This refers to something that you would not usually do because it is different from what is usual or what is normal. And in that case, you're going against the grain. Maybe I tell you the new policy goes against the grain of everything that the company stood for.

Shouldn't mean that we can't have a civil conversation. I just don't understand why you always have to go against the grain. Please hit the like button if this lesson strikes a chord with

LESSON 172 OF 749

Advanced Expressions (C1 + C2) to Build Your Vocabulary

let's learn some Advanced expressions and this lesson is going to be extremely informative to say the least and let's start with that last expression to say the least so you would use this when you want to say that you could have expressed something in a much stronger and more detailed way however you chose not to elaborate and give more information something else I want to say about this expression is that typically you're going to use it at the end of a statement maybe you don't want to talk about something or give more information or perhaps it's just not relevant so if I say you know the flight was a bumpy ride to say the least somebody asked me hey how was your flight and I don't want to give a lot of detail or really have to explain it so I can use this expression to draw attention to bumpy flight without having to give those extra details it was a bumpy flight to say the least or I could use this expression when I don't want to be too critical and I don't want to be too rude and I could say yeah dinner wasn't very good to say the least so once again I'm drawing attention to the fact that the dinner wasn't that good but I don't have to give extra information because if I said the chicken was undercooked and I think I might get food poisoning that that could come off as being a little rude so you could use this expression to really tamper down the level of criticism when pronouncing this there are two unstressed words that I'd like to point out the first one is two so when it's unstressed it's going to sound weaker and it'll sound like ta with that schwa sound the other unstressed word is the article the and this is because it comes before a word that begins with a consonant sound and I think the article is commonly pronounced with that schwa the so all together it's going to sound like to say the least to say the least just listen for it young Master how does it feel to walk on a new web exciting say the least has identified the atheist as Brian Griffin of Spooner Street here's the reaction from City Hall they're shocking to say the least now as we go through the lesson I am going to tell you the meaning of each expression I'll talk a little bit about how it's used and I'll go over the pronunciation so that you can pronounce these different Expressions just like a native speaker and if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes

the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and I trust that you will subscribe to the channel and I'm going to give you the benefit of the doubt which is the next expression that I want to teach you to give someone the benefit of the doubt so this may be used in situations in which there's a lot of uncertainty but you're going to believe someone or give that person a favorable judgment or opinion so if you're really skeptic call you may still say okay I believe you I'll give you the benefit of the doubt to help you better understand how this expression is used in context I have some news headlines for you give Pope Francis the benefit of the doubt I don't know what people are skeptical of but the headline is saying hey just trust him believe him progressives get benefit of the doubt when accusations of bullying fly and the Supreme Court has lost benefit of the doubt so with these last two headlines I'd like to point out that verb that's being used overwhelmingly you're going to use this with the verb give to give someone the benefit of the doubt however you may use it with other verbs as well for pronunciation there are a couple of things that I want to talk about the first is that final TN benefit I am going to pronounce this as a flap T because I'm from the United States and this is very common with the American accent when the t comes between two vowel sounds often I am going to say it as a flap T it's going to sound more like a soft D and then I can link that flap t with the beginning vowel sound in of and linking commonly occurs when one word ends in a consonant sound and the next word begins with a vowel sound so it's going to sound like benefit of to give someone the benefit of the doubt now if you were to tell me that you want to improve your pronunciation and practice speaking well I'll certainly give you the benefit of the doubt and that's why I'd like to tell you about Elsa speak who is the sponsor of today's lesson this is a great app to help you fine-tune your pronunciation and practice your speaking skills but not only that you can practice your conversation skills and that's what I want to show you right now so you download the app and there are many ways to practice your pronunciation but if you want to have a back and forth conversation you can do that using Elsa AI hi welcome to Elsa AI please select one of the following role plays as you can see there are several different scenarios to choose from but you can also create your own scenario which is what we're going to do right now sure what kind of scenario would you like to create I want to have a conversation with a friend at a coffee shop and I want to talk about possibly changing jobs and starting a new career hey there what's been going on with you lately lately I've been thinking about changing jobs and maybe starting a new career that's interesting what sparked this desire for change well I just have a strong desire to do something that allows me to be more creative so I'm thinking about becoming a content creator on YouTube have you done any research on what it takes to become a successful content creator you know I haven't really given it much thought you have any ideas yes there are definitely some things you'll want to consider for example it's always good to have a clear focus on what kind of content you want to create and who your target audience is

wow that sounds like some great advice and I'm really going to think about it but right now I have to get going so I'll talk to you later keep me posted on how things go role play completed we are Computing your feedback as you can see you get a full assessment of your conversation with overall feedback as well as specific feedback when it comes to pronunciation vocabulary and grammar and right now when you click on the link in the description you can sign up to get Early Access of the AI feature and start having a conversation in English you can sign up for free without a paid membership and use Elsa AI for three scenarios a day so check out that link below if you want to improve your pronunciation and practice speaking English let's get back to some more advanced expressions and the next expression that I have for you is per se

this is a Latin term that means of or by itself it's a little more formal so it's not one that you're going to use all the time in just everyday conversation but you can use this to emphasize the importance of other factors money per se does not make people truly happy true happiness comes from the relationships that you build with others so I'm saying money by itself it doesn't make people truly happy and I'm using per se to emphasize the importance of other factors and that is why I follow it with the next sentence because it helps complete the thought this is not a criticism of the government per se it's about holding people accountable once again I'm using per se to emphasize the importance of other factors I was born in the state of Alabama it's not a famous State per se but it does have some charming towns here are a couple of other examples to help make this easier to understand upstairs from here but under you not under you per se but under your apartment no no I mean he's not over but is there anything relevant to the sales staff here no sales topic per se well the new Andy Bernard per se when pronouncing this expression I just want to focus on that second word say even though it's spelled s-e you're going to pronounce it with that long a sound say per se and then we have to top it all off so this is used when you're describing several things that happened but you'll use this expression to introduce the final thing that happened that made the situation either Better or Worse there was no traffic on my way to work this morning and it was a pretty easy day because a couple of meetings got canceled and to top it all off the boss said everyone can go home early so in this case I'm talking about a series of positive things but in my opinion I think most of the time this expression gets used when talking about negative things and describing a series of bad events my alarm didn't go off this morning so I was late for work on my way to work it started raining I didn't have an umbrella so I got soaked and to top it all off I gave a horrible presentation because I had forgotten my notes at home

it was not a good day for pronunciation once again we're going to use that week two which is more like ta and then we can link the next four words together top it all off that final t in it I am also going to pronounce it as a flap T to top it all off to top it all off the next expression at the end of the day I really like this one maybe because I feel like I use it quite often but this means when everything is taken into consideration and then you're going to say the most important thing about a situation so this expression is an adverb phrase that it's very similar to saying ultimately and typically you're going to use it at the beginning of a sentence or Clause so I could say you can give me your opinion but at the end of the day I'm going to make the final decision or perhaps you're in a situation in which there are a lot of different choices and it was a difficult decision to make and perhaps the result was a good one and you could say at the end of the day I made the right decision when you pronounce this expression I want you to keep in mind that the article the is both stressed and unstressed it's stressed when it comes before the vowel sound in end the end and it's unstressed when it comes before the consonant sound in day the day there's also linking that may occur we can link that final consonant sound and end with the beginning vowel sound in of end of so listen for those two things the stressed and unstressed the along with linking and then just Richard and I because at the end of the day people only want to see a picture of the board members members but at the end of the day if we show up for each other is reason enough keep believing and then there's few and far between this means not happening or existing very often so if something is not happening very often you could say something is few and far between here are some news headlines for you so you can see how this expression is used in context storms stay few and far between as summer heat continues no shortage of ideas but affordable housing options remain few and far between food inflation is easing but price breaks are still few and far between for pronunciation the first thing that we're going to do is reduce and to just n which is very common in spoken English and then we're going to link that final consonant sound and few with that beginning vowel sound and it's going to sound like few when

few went far between say it with me few and far between good the next expression be my guest this is something you say when you give someone permission to do or use something it seems pretty simple and straightforward it's like you're saying okay no problem go ahead you think I can have submit be my guest can I use magnetizing glass magnifying Bobby be my guest but to add one thing when it comes to usage another time people would use this expression is when they're upset and they're really angry and it's like they're saying ah okay fine do it and you can really hear the frustration you want to spend the rest of your life with your head up your ass be my guest can I put Randy to bed please you want to sleep here be my guest when pronouncing this expression it's pretty simple and straightforward you're just saying the three words one right after the other be my guest be my guest and then we have to give someone a run for their money this means to not allow someone to win easily so often you're going to use this expression in some sort of competitive situation like a sport or a game I also want you to keep in mind the grammar because we have an object pronoun as well as an adjective pronoun you are going to give me a run for my money they're going to give us a run for our money but people are not really going to pronounce it like that I was really trying to emphasize those pronouns so let's talk about pronunciation right now and there are a few different things I want to tell you about and some of it really depends on that object pronoun no matter what I think people are going to reduce the word for to fur and I want you to listen for that but if the object pronoun is me we have give me we can reduce that to gimme give me a run for my money but it looks like you're going to give me a run for my money now if someone is him her or them in that case a lesion may occur which is when certain sounds or syllables get removed so if we remove that first consonant sound of each word we can then link the phrases together give him give them give her Giver give them give them once again just listen for it you're giving her a run for her money I'm at least going to give him a run for his money what do you say we give him a run for their money huh so hopefully you can hear those three things that weak fur along with illusion and linking then there's the expression sooner rather than later and this is really an extension of the binomial pair sooner or later which means something is going to happen but you're not exactly sure when so with this expression it can mean fairly soon it's going to rain probably sooner rather than later fairly soon but it could also mean without too much delay I want you to turn in the report I need it sooner rather than later so I need it without much delay you're gonna run out I guess it's sooner rather than later painful detox is inevitable no although I look I see you after right there it will work and we need this to work sooner rather than later for pronunciation there is some co-articulation which refers to overlapping sounds and in this case I think it's pretty straightforward that final R sound and sooner is going to overlap with the beginning R sound and rather and it just allows us to make a very smooth transition from one word to the next sooner rather than later sooner rather than later and then we have on the fence this is another expression that I like probably because I use it quite often and it means not being able to decide something and usually it's between two choices but not always so think about it if you are on a fence you may fall on this side or you may fall on the other you're not really sure so this also implies a difficult and tough decision and it's often used with the verb to be to be on the fence I don't know which job applicant to choose I'm really on the fence sometimes I ask you to write to me in the comments maybe you do maybe you don't perhaps you're on the fence and in that case I would encourage you to write to me because yeah I love hearing from you for pronunciation just know that linking may occur it really depends on the verb to be I'm on the fence she's on the fence you're on the fence so in that case you may be able to link that final consonant sound with the beginning vowel sound in on now for a little review I know when it comes to language learning vocabulary per se is only one piece of the puzzle but it's a very important piece especially as you become more proficient and I really hope that you learn some new Expressions but I don't expect you to remember all of them because at the end of the day as long as you learn one or two new things and can practice them that's going to help you take a step in the right direction and believe me your mistakes will become few and far between if you would like to watch another video Lesson be my guest and if you're on the fence just click on one of the lessons that you see around me right now that's all for today I hope to see you again sooner rather than later if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you

next time so long

LESSON 173 OF 749

Advanced Expressions (C2) to Build Your Vocabulary

hey everyone i have a great lesson for you today because we are going to talk about some common expressions and i think these are a little more advanced expressions that you can use in a variety of situations now i'm going to tell you how these expressions are used as well as when they are used and try to explain the situation because when uh when you think of these expressions i don't want you to look at the individual words i want you to think about it as a whole i think that if you're able to try and learn these expressions as one chunk as as a single piece of information then it'll be a little easier to comprehend to understand and you'll be able to use it correctly when you find yourself in a situation where these expressions are relevant so i am going to tell you the expression i'll give you the meaning i will tell you and explain some of the situations in which i think you may use these expressions or you may hear somebody else use them and then i may throw in a few video clips here and there to help reinforce that information so that you have a better understanding the first expression is having said that so this is a transitional phrase which means that you are using it to transition from one idea to the next and in this case you are transitioning basically to an opposing view you are going to say something contradictory to what was just said and this this phrase i think is often found at the beginning of a sentence and i think it's becoming more and more common in spoken english now let me give you an example so you know what i mean when i say that you are trying to disagree or you're basically contrasting information that was just said maybe i am talking to you and i i'm saying these you know this this great stuff about you and then i want to say the opposite so i'd say oh you you know you are amazing you're very smart you're very hard-working and then i'd say having said that and then i would say the opposite of everything i just said often i i think it's used in a context in which you are maybe you have to give somebody bad news but before you give them the bad news you want to say some good things about them so let me give you an example hopefully make this a little easier to understand let's say that you are applying for a job and you know unfortunately you don't get the job and i am going to tell you this but before i tell you i might try to say some things that are that are nice about you that are great uh because i don't want to just be mean and say you know you didn't get the job get out of here so i might say something like okay you you know you are obviously very passionate about what you do you're you're hard-working you seem like you're a responsible person having said that i contacted your previous employers and they said you were stealing from the company so you're not going to get the job i hope that example makes it a little easier to follow having said all of that stuff before let me tell you what the opposite is and it can go both ways it's not just about delivering bad news it could be used in a positive sense so for example maybe you say a lot of uh of bad and negative things to begin with and then you say having said that and then you say the positive things i can't be your hero anymore okay sure having said all that i still would like to get together on tuesdays for bowling and alternating sundays for general horseplay recognize that google is not a conventional workplace having said that we have rules i'm over it completely having said that it's so hard to move on the next expression and this is one of my favorites is wishful thinking and if somebody says wishful thinking then it means that some other person is imagining a future event that is rather unlikely but they they just wish that that is the way things were and you could say look you know that's wishful thinking and often i think it's used as that statement right there and you hear somebody talking about some situation that is unlikely but that's what they want to happen and then you could say look you know that's wishful thinking i you know that's just wishful thinking it's not going to happen for example if somebody were to say okay i want to learn um portuguese and i am going to start studying portuguese and i am going to be fluent in portuguese by the end of the week give me seven days and i will achieve fluency and then you would look at me and say okay that's wishful thinking it is an unlikely event it is an unlikely future it's it's probably not going to happen but that's wishful thinking you were you were just hopeful you were optimistic that something will happen anyway can't raise a kid here where would you even put her how do you know it's a she wishful thinking i guess i just hope he found some place where he could find a little piece a place set in the cedars and oak trees but that's probably wishful thinking then we have to take something for granted and this me i think this is a very common expression and what it means is that you don't fully appreciate something because you just you come to assume that it will always be there and it will always be available you could also use it when talking about a person to take someone for granted and it means the same thing that you don't fully appreciate this person because you just assume that they will always be there for you let me give you an example uh imagine you have a car and you drive it every day you go to work you go shopping you go to the grocery store and you use it quite often and then the car breaks down and now you have to change your routine and you have to take a bus or you have to walk it takes a lot more time it then becomes a reminder how much easier things were with the car that you could do things much faster and you might think to yourself wow i was starting to take it for granted i i completely forgot that it's a it's a lot more challenging to have to take a bus to all of these places and you didn't realize it and until it was gone until it was no longer available to take something for granted or to take someone for granted sure but philosophy is about questioning things that you take for granted stop complaining new york is the greatest city in the world no it's rude obnoxious and dirty you take this place for granted most of us here were born in america we take this country for granted not immigrants like apu then we have another expression which i i guess you could say it is also one of my favorite expressions because i use it all the time and that is keep that in mind you're telling somebody you know hey keep that in mind and what it means is that that this person should be aware of something or or maybe yeah they should acknowledge that that something exists so you may find this expression at the end of a person's comment they they tell you what they want you to be aware of and then just as a reminder say look keep that in mind or maybe they use it at the beginning of a statement and say something like look i want you to keep this in mind and then proceed to tell you what they want you to be aware of listen for it with me i i think i think i say that quite often because i'm teaching you these words and phrases and sometimes they can be used in different ways and i would i want you to be aware of that and i would just tell you look i i want you to keep that in mind so just now that i've told you that try to listen for it i think it's a great expression especially when you are giving instructions because as a teacher i'm constantly talking to learners and trying to explain the difference between things and really help them understand a little bit better so i would often try to remind them to be aware of something and say keep that in mind so when you are giving instructions i think that is a common way in which this expression is used the volturi don't give second chances keep that in mind the world ain't what it seems is it gunny no sir you keep that in mind the next expression is be that as it may this is another expression that is often used at the beginning of a sentence and it's a little more formal as well and and what it means is that you use this expression when you want to say that you believe some information that you have been given that you think it is true but it does not change your opinion about some topic or some situation so let me give you an example and i'm i'm trying to think of something that would be a more formal setting maybe a courtroom with a judge and the judge is deciding that that somebody is guilty and they're just they're trying to determine should they give a a very strict punishment or should they give a very light punishment and the person is trying to say well hey here are some facts here's some here's some information to show you that i'm i'm a good person even though i did something wrong and when the judge is talking to this individual the judge may say that information and they may say look yeah you have been uh very helpful in your community you have shown that you can be an honest and trustworthy individual you've been a good friend to to others be that as it may you have still broken the law and you must be punished for that so once again you are basically reaffirming that it doesn't matter what information or facts that you get it's not going to change your opinion about this topic or this situation and remember it is a bit more formal and somebody is trying to say look i am not going to change my opinion even though i believe all of this other information be that as it may i'm not going to change my opinion all i can tell you is that i'm a different person now oh great i don't care be that as it may i know i don't deserve your mercy or your forgiveness well i see it i'm old be that as it may rickon's not yours to sell anymore here i am not out of control that is it me i must request that for the time being you allow the city to handle its own emergency then we have the expression around the clock so in this case it's talking about something that is continuous that it is lasting especially lasting 24 hours that it is around the clock all day every day and this expression i think it's often used before words like open like you know we're open around the clock or uh words like available you know i'm available around the clock you can call me anytime my phone is always on any time of the day around the clock efforts continue around the clock i'm working around the clock you've been working around the clock you can call me nikki it will be a pleasure to serve you i am available to you around the clock just let me know next is the expression to toss around the idea or you could say to toss around some ideas and this it's almost it's a form of brainstorming that you were just thinking about new ideas or new possibilities usually with with another person or often with a group of people as well if there is a group of individuals and you have to think of something you have to come up with some new ideas you might tell the group you know let's let's toss around some ideas let's get some ideas out there and then we'll make a decision this expression i think is used a little more informally when you are talking maybe with your colleagues or friends in order to make a great decision we need to come up with many different ideas so let's toss around some ideas do you wanna you wanna go over it and toss some ideas around no that's okay that means i'm gonna go to my book editor melinda and toss around some book ideas and go home soak in the tub drink a glass of wine the next expression and i i think this one is a bit more challenging and sometimes it may even be used incorrectly is in and of itself and what this means is that you are considering something alone that is apart from everything else so you're referring to something that is being considered alone now i will say that some people they may think this expression is a little outdated it's a little old-fashioned i think that this is definitely a more of an advanced expression you may not hear it as often but when you do just realize that it's referring to something that is being considered alone let me give you an example to help you better understand how it's used so i might say that a sentence like this the rainy weather in and of itself was not the cause of the traffic jam so there could be many causes for this traffic jam the rainy weather it could be one of them it's not the only one it could be part of this so what i said in that sentence i said the rainy weather in and of itself when it's considered alone which means that is the only thing that you are thinking of is the rainy weather was not the cause of the traffic jam something else you should know about this expression is that it would often be found in the middle of the sentence that it's going to be separated by two different commas so you're going to say something in and of itself and then finish the sentence that is reverse sexism which is in and of itself a sexist thing to do summoning the brother in court then jesus i really hope that that's a sad commentary in and of itself my cousin violated his parole which in and of itself isn't good news but we're gonna get his van until he gets out i did not say stuart i said stalwart which in and of itself would be weird enough next is the expression lo and behold and when somebody uses lo and behold they are are telling someone something surprising that happened this expression often follows the word and i i think also that it's quite common that you would use this when you're telling a story you're telling somebody a story and talking about some events that happen and then you want to reveal something surprising all of a sudden lo and behold for example if somebody said wow and i i looked in the drawer and lo and behold i found my wallet

so if we if you just hear that sentence i looked in the drawer and lo and behold i found my wallet what other information is that telling you if you just hear that sentence what it tells me you're saying and lo and behold i found my wallet it was a surprise which tells us that this person they were looking for their wallet maybe they were looking all over the place they could not find their wallet and they were surprised when they found it in the drawer when you use these expressions sometimes they help give a little more information as to the situation and what's happening i looked in the drawer and lo and behold i found my wallet is there any way that i could have any less respect for you two geniuses i would have said no no that's not possible but lo and behold you went and pulled it off congratulations no one would have predicted the results of the election that year no one

not long after the election lo and behold a miracle some believed it was the work of god himself next is the expression in hindsight so this expression means that a person has gained understanding about a situation or event after it has already happened or perhaps after it has developed and you would often find this expression at the beginning of a sentence somebody might say well you know in hindsight and then talk about what should have happened maybe how they would have changed the past because now they have a better understanding of what was going on for example you say well in hindsight i should have told the truth i never should have lied about it in hindsight i should have told the truth or in hindsight i should have left hours before there was no reason for me to stay at the party and and stay out really late and not get any sleep in hindsight i i should have left charles and i blame ourselves in hindsight we weren't ready in hindsight i probably could not have picked a worse way to be honest with mary elizabeth they'll never know in hindsight one of us should have brought a camera you seem pretty hell-bent on several ties yeah in hindsight that might have been a bit dramatic well it's a little late to take it back so again i i think it really helps to just learn these expressions as one chunk and learn their meaning so that it gives you a better understanding as to how and when it's used now having said that if you are somebody who likes ah i need to really know each and every individual word then i think that's okay but really try to view these expressions as a single chunk with a single meaning because what i really don't want i don't want you to take these expressions for granted because you will hear them from time to time and now that you understand their meaning i hope that you can go out and use them and i i know it can be difficult i know it can be challenging but i think you guys you can do it you're just gonna study around the clock and the more you study them the more you practice them you're just gonna start speaking and lo and behold you're just gonna start using these expressions naturally and easily and that's going to help you improve your overall fluency and i i thought i'd just try and give you a little bit of review while at the same time giving you an inspirational message all right just you know i always want to encourage you to learn practice and continue building your vocabulary keep that in mind all right that is it i hope you enjoyed learning some of these advanced expressions and i will see you next time

Advanced Expressions You NEED TO KNOW | Speak Like a Pro

I want to help you speak like a pro with some advanced expressions that I think you just need to know. That's my opinion, but I think these are fun, useful phrases that you can use in daily conversation and in order to be specific, precise, and just have some more fun with the language. So, if this uh is your first time joining me, my name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. This lesson is all about helping you build and grow and develop your vocabulary. And if that is something that you're interested in doing, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. The if you are also if you would also like to get these lesson notes that are next to me, click on the link down below in the description. Join my email community if you're already a part of it. Check your inbox. I have sent them to you. So this is a quiz lesson. It is after all interactive English. I want you to participate.

Write your answer in the chat, in the comments. I just love it when I see people participating, learning new things. It's just more active learning. So, I am giving you I've taken the expression out. I'm giving you a sentence and the meaning down below, and I just want you to tell me, well, what what expression is this referring to? I was exhausted halfway through the run, but I got my m near the end. So, the meaning of this expression is to experience a sudden surge of new energy or strength. Emphasis on that new energy or strength after being exhausted, tired. This is actually a phrase that I don't know. I think it's incredibly useful because I actually do use this uh from time to time. if I'm in that situation. You're really tired. You're really exhausted, but maybe there's something else you need to do. You can't go to sleep just yet, and you're hoping to get your what. And generally, we're going to use it with the verb get. You're going to get your or in this case, you're halfway, you're exhausted halfway through the run, but I got my M. So, what phrase? I'll tell you right now. It's two words. Two words that are missing. You experience this sudden sudden surge of energy or strength. And in that case, no, no, no. I don't. And maybe the the chat's not catching up. I'm surprised. I feel like this is one that maybe I thought maybe people would definitely be familiar with it. Um maybe it's a little behind, but in this case, we're talking about your second win. to get your second wind. And if you are I mentioned you're in a situation where you're really tired and you cannot go to sleep just yet. You're like, you know, hopefully I'll get my second win. Or maybe you're really tired, but then you're going to go out after work. You're going to go out with friends and have a good time and like look, I'm I'm starting to get my second win. Let's go. Let's do it.

I have this sudden burst of energy. whenever you get your second win. It does not always have to be about a physical activity. It could be you're tired from work, you're tired from travel. I think that's another specific time when you could use this. You've been traveling all day, but then you're still going to go out whenever you get to your final destination. You're like, you get your second win. I think you're excited when you travel, especially if you're on vacation and you arrive, even if it's late, you might get your second wind and you want to go out and do something and explore. So, excellent. I'll try to give some shout outs as we go through this. And uh hopefully hopefully even if you're tired right now, you're just going to get your second wind and and figure out uh some of these questions, these phrases. This I thought was just a fun little visual of this raccoon right here when you're tired. But then you get your second win.

And in this case, I feel like this this little guy is up to no good. Uh when they're that sudden burst of energy, what do you think? My team is m after taking on three projects. Now, there may be more than one expression. I I the other thing I like about some of these activities is that it's just getting the vocabulary juices flowing. you're thinking about okay what what phrases what expressions might work in this context. The meaning is when you are just having too many tasks responsibilities or demands to manage them all effectively. So if you have too many things going on, you can't manage them all effectively. You just it's just too demanding and stressful. You could say that you are what? This one's a little trickier. It's one that again I think you will certainly come across it movies, TV shows. Uh and and I think it's worth learning, which is why I said these are advanced phrases. You need to know my team is m after taking on three projects. So in this situation when you have too many tasks or responsibilities there are there are a couple of different expressions that work and I will talk about both of them. The one that I was thinking of just in this context is to be stretched thin. So, if you tell someone you're stretched thin, it's basically saying you are really stressed out because you have a lot going on and you don't know if you can keep going at this pace and you might tell somebody, "Look, right now I'm stretched thin." Perhaps you ask me for help and I say, "Look, I'd love to help you, but right now I have a lot going on and I'm just stretched thin and I cannot help you with whatever it is." So, this is uh you overwhelmed like this is just really adding emphasis to saying you're overwhelmed. It's a synonym. So, instead of saying I've overwhelmed, you can use this informal phrase instead. The team is stretched thin after taking on three new projects. and they got too much going on, they can't handle it. And you could say you're you're stretched thin. Now, the other phrase, which really has a very similar meaning, there is a slight nuance, would be to say that you are spread thin. And because again, I'm trying to embrace this new this AI and see how we can use it. And I I this is an AI overview. if I put in stretch thin versus spread thin. So really both are talking about being overwhelmed. I think that is a great synonym for either one of those phrases. But it does say it says stretch thin is really um you know talking about that that you are at the maximum capacity. You can't do anything else when you are stretch thin. When you use spread thin, I think the emphasis is more on the the number of things happening that you've done this and this that and it's like you are spreading yourself thin. So both of them mean overwhelmed, but maybe the emphasis is on one or the other. If you're stretched thin, you're just at the maximum capacity. If you're spread thin, it may imply a bit more that you've taken on too much. In our sentence, you could use either one. Either one of those phrases would work. And if either one of these is new for you, let me know. Hit that like button. Hit some hearts that you this is new information, new vocabulary.

To be stretched thin or to be to to spread yourself thin. Here is another question that I think you could use more than uh one expression. His question m what? and I needed a moment to respond. What expression could you use in this context? I there is one of two at least that I'm thinking of. Sometimes as you all put this this uh your responses in the chat I realize like oh there are actually more. But the meaning of this expression is uh to surprise someone by doing or saying something they are not expecting or they're not prepared for. So, what expression could you use in this context? You're not prepared for something. You're not expecting it and you could use this expression. His question me and I needed a moment to think about it.

So, I like uh Yes. Uh Marissa, that's a good guess. I I would say uh you said instead of got me. So, one of the expressions was you could take someone by surprise. So, instead of gat, I would say you could say his question took me by surprise. That works. It means the same thing. This is not the one that I was thinking of. Uh, the one that I was thinking of, uh, yes, Teao, uh, Joanna, it caught some to catch someone off guard. It means the same as to, uh, take someone by surprise. You're surprising someone by saying or doing something. you're not prepared for it, you're not expecting it. So that's why those were the two that I was thinking of that would work in this context. His question caught me off guard and I needed a moment to respond.

So you could say his question took me by surprise and in that case I feel like the emphasis is more on the surprise like oh wow I was not expecting it and you need a moment to respond. If you say his question caught me off guard, then I feel like maybe you're leaning more towards the preparation aspect of it and you needed a moment to respond. So either one of those works, but again, this is when you have these slight nuances with some of these phrases which do allow you to be very specific. If you want to really emphasize that you were not prepared, oh, you that really caught me off guard. Uh or you're emphasizing you were surprised. That really took me by surprise. To give you some more context, here are some news headlines.

This is something I like to share with you from time to time to help you better understand the meaning. It says, "Don't let retirement plan uh don't let retirement plan deadlines catch you offguard." Or, "Four driving conditions that catch even experienced drivers offguard. They're not prepared for it." Beware um beware morning. Beware morning tax scams designed to catch you off guard. Uh, finally or then there's T-Mobile may catch you off guard uh with its next request. I think companies do this. Oh, and definitely airlines. Flying United, the new check-in deadline could catch you offguard. I think that's a great association with this phrase when airlines they change rules, they change their prices. And yeah, it certainly catches me off guard and I am not prepared for it. I was not I am not expecting it.

This is a great phrase when it's going to come at the beginning of a statement and you would say what what is part of the phrase. I think you handled the situation well. So you want to say the statement look I think you handled the situation well. But I'm adding this phrase at the beginning when you're you're saying it like you're giving uh you know giving someone a piece of advice or information that you're not certain if it's helpful or useful. So if you have something you want to share or say and you don't know well I don't know if this is going to help this person. I don't know if it's meaningful. I don't know if it's relevant. You can use this phrase before stating the advice or the information. This is a phrase that I think you've heard. You might not be able to pick it out right now, but once I tell you and show you the answer, I think you be okay. Yes, I've heard this before. You may not actively use it, but now hopefully after this, you you can kind of grasp the meaning a little bit better. But it is a little it is pretty precise in that context. You don't know if it's helpful. You don't know if it's useful. And you're going to state this phrase before sharing the advice or information. Any any guesses? Can anybody tell me? Write your answers in the chat in the comments. Um not close, not say what you will. Um, this is a little I I think this is more specific to the meaning that I I'm sharing with you right now. So, I I'll go ahead and show you tell you the answer. And again, it's maybe one that you're just not thinking about, even though I'm I'm confident. I'm going to go ahead and say that you've heard this before. Um, not come what may. The phrase, the expression is for what it's worth. for what it's worth and then you say whatever information or advice. But as soon as you say for what it's worth, you're then implying that look, I don't know if this is helpful. I don't know if it's relevant. I don't know if it's useful, but I'm going to go ahead and say this or share this information with you anyway. Um, if I were to say like, yeah, I think you should build your vocabulary, but I don't know if that is useful for you. I say, "Look, for what it's worth, I think, yeah, you should uh continue to build your vocabulary, watch more of my video lessons, and just keep developing and improving your overall English fluency." So, keep in mind, you're going to use this at the beginning of a statement when you're talking to another person. You say, "Look, for what it's worth," and then you share whatever advice or information that you would like to tell someone. Hopefully, again, let me know if you have heard this expression before. Hit that like button, hit the hearts, hit any of those down below that that tells me that I'm not delusional and that this actually is a common expression that maybe you've come across in a movie, TV show, and somebody has said before, look, for what it's worth, whenever they're getting ready to share something with you. The next one, it took a few days to get back into the M after vacation. I'm giving you part of the expression already. Get back into the what? That is the full expression. You're you go on vacation and then you come back. You're returning to your activity or your routine. In this case, your job most likely. And it may take some time. It may take a few days to get back into the what? What is it? Uh groove. That works. Yeah. Yeah. I you could use groove. You got to get back into the groove. That that is okay. To get back into the grind. Um I I wouldn't say get back into the grind. I would say you you would use grind in that um you would say back to the grind instead of back into. And basically in that case you're you're also implying that like yeah it's going to be difficult it's frustrating you know back to the grind.

Uh that that that's similar in this context the phrase that the expression that I'm talking about you're getting back into and maybe this is new I hope so back into the swing of things. So whenever you are you haven't done something in some time or you return to doing it most likely work or something that you do regularly after being away and you might say now I'm getting back into the swing of things. Maybe you haven't worked for some time. You were on vacation or maybe you haven't been exercising for a while.

Now you're trying to get back into the swing of things. So this is uh another I think great phrase to know especially in this context you're returning to a routine or activity. Uh all right excellent. I think you guys are again bringing throwing out some uh uh good guesses. One thing I want to point out when it comes to this phrase when you say get back into the swing of things you're returning to an activity. You could also use this when talking about a new activity but in that case you're just going to take back out of it. you're going to get into the swing of things and you're starting a new activity. Now, more com mo most of the time, people are going to use this to talk about an activity you've done before and you're returning to it and you're getting back into the swing of things.

to engram viewer and we could look up I put in get back into the swing of things versus get into the swing of things. You can see it's more commonly used when somebody's talking about returning to an activity and you're trying to get back into the swing of things. Uh the next one, let's keep moving right along. That kind of policy change is above. This one's a little more difficult. It's uh again the meaning I don't know if that that might help when you're talking about something uh that a person does not have enough knowledge or authority to do. Emphasis on authority. If somebody is asking you a question or they're asking you to make a change or they're asking you to do something and you're like look I don't have the authority. It's above.

above is part of this expression. We're talking about a change in this case policy. Look, I can't I have no authority to do that. That kind of policy change is above my I gave you the next word that you would use in this uh sentence. Uh not not above your payroll, not above and beyond. Uh yeah, I said excellent. I saw some answers in there. Um, yes, Joanna, Cindy, excellent. Uh, great to see so many members. Love it. Manuel, uh, Maria, above one's pay grade. So, this is a great phrase whenever you want to say that you don't have the power authority to do something. Look, that's above my pay grade and you cannot make this change.

And I think that's pretty Yeah, that that's pretty key. You purchase something that's unnecessary and then you regret it. You can say that you have or you're experiencing what those are some verbs that you might often use this expression with when talking about this unnecessary purchase or it was just too expensive and you regret it. And if you regret something, then I think you can kind of piece things together that there is some remorse whenever you regret something. And in this case, we're talking about buyer's remorse. To have buyer's remorse is a common collocation, but you could also experience buyer's remorse. Well done, uh Joanna, Julia, just give some shout outs. So if you are experiencing buyer's remorse or you're telling someone then then they know okay you regret or you're having some regret about purchasing this thing that you may not need or it was just too expensive and now you have a little buyer's remorse.

My blood pressure goes when I'm stuck in traffic. I think uh I think you've heard of this one too, but there's a specific reason why I wanted to include this mostly because I have heard people use the wrong word then it's part of it uh that that is part of the expression. You're talking about something that to rise to a very high level and you want to emphasize just how high th this has gone. My blood pressure goes when I'm stuck in traffic. I hate when I'm stuck in traffic. I think this happens to my blood pressure. This happens to my stress level. And I could say I know it goes ballistic.

Yeah. I mean, it would work in this situation, but I don't want to emphasize like going crazy. I'm talking about just the level like where it's going. Uh you could say off the charts, that would also work in this context. something goes off the charts, it's at a really high level. There's another There's another one. Keep them coming. Keep them coming. We'll get to it at some point. My blood pressure goes what? Maybe this is more American. Uh I don't know. So, you could say something. Yeah, skyhigh. That would also work. But the the phrase that I was thinking, it goes through the roof. If something goes through the roof, then you're talking about that it's just goes to a very high level. uh my blood pressure goes through the roof.

There are some other common collocations with this expression. Your stress level goes through the roof. Your anxiety goes through the roof. Prices may go through the roof. Interest rates uh I think have been going through the roof. Sales if you're in talking about business may go through the roof. Demand or even the stock price goes through the roof. So there are a lot of different ways that you can express this idea. Uh skyrockets, goes skyhigh, is off the charts, goes through the roof. But I mentioned before, I've heard people say goes through the ceiling. You're going to say something goes through the roof. How about this? Please let me know if I'm m you're doing something that is not allowed or not acceptable. This one I think is a little more challenging to guess even though I think you're familiar with it. And I think this is a statement that somebody would say like, "Oh, am I am I doing something that's not allowed? Is this acceptable? Just let me know if I'm my What do you think in this context? I don't want to do something that's not allowed or unacceptable. So, I hope you tell me if I'm I don't know. I don't know why I think that if I if I do this, maybe it's going to help you come up with the answer. I said, I think this is one that you've heard of before, but maybe it's a little more difficult to come up with in this context to overstep one's boundaries. Let me know if I'm overstepping my boundaries. That is a statement that you would use with this expression. If you're you want to know if you're doing something that is not appropriate, it's not acceptable, it's not allowed, look, am I overstepping my boundaries? And I think it's often used in that that continuous tense overstepping one's boundaries.

So it's a great great great expression to know in case uh you're unfamiliar with it. I would not use like I wouldn't say crossing with boundaries or anything. I would always use overstepping. she was what what do you think to understand the reasoning feelings or motivations behind a person's opinions or actions once she explained the situation I could what another expression that I think you've heard of it is quite common but because I'm taking so much out it may be a little more challenging but when you understand the reasoning feelings or motivations behind someone's uh actions or like what they think, then you could say, "Look, I see where you're coming from." Which is again a great great expression to know, especially as far as communicating with someone else, and you want to say, "Look, I understand what you're trying to say. I understand why you did that. I see where you're coming from." Uh, once she explained the situation, I could see where she was coming from. I think you've probably have heard this before.

You may even actively use it, which is great, but I know that I didn't give you a lot of context there as far as trying to guess it. What do you think? Some people talk just because they love themselves something. This uh refers to a person excessively fond of talking, dominating conversations, self-focus, trivial monologues with regard to listeners. Maybe you feel like I do this. Uh, and yeah, I don't I don't know. I hope I don't come off this way because it is it has a negative connotation. Uh, and part of it love themselves. Uh, it it is more negative. You're saying somebody is a little more self-absorbed. They're thinking about themselves. Like it says, you're dominating the conversation. And it is more negative.

All right. And this is true. I know I think a lot of you have you have certain fluency goals and you need to keep working at it, building vocabulary, improving pronunciation, getting speaking practice, listening, reading, writing, and you want to remain persistent, determined. It's a difficult situation. So, I would say look, just hang in there. I know achieving English fluency is difficult and challenging, but hang in there. You're giving that encouragement to someone else. Hang in there. This is a again I thought I I feel like anytime you do a Google search with hang in there and go to images, you find all these cats just hanging on like a rope.

So hang in there. Don't forget that you are awesome. And that is true. I don't forget that you're awesome. Here are the the expressions from the lesson. I hope that some of it's new. Uh, I hope all I also hope that some of it's a reminder in its review because I think it's always good to get you get practice. So, check out the link if you want to access the lesson notes. let's see how well you know your grammar so i'm gonna give you a question i'll give you a moment to think of the answer and then i will tell you the answer and explain why it is correct so let's begin with our first question right here if somebody were to say whatever you do don't leave me alone talking to wes he's so um okay how would you complete that sentence are you going to use a bored or b boring so i hope that you chose b boring that is the correct answer he's so boring so this can be a little confusing the difference between edie and ing adjectives in short you're going to use ed adjectives to talk about the way you feel you're going to use ing adjectives to describe a situation a thing or just the a person's characteristic in this case we're talking about a characteristic of mine that i'm boring and this is just an example of course i hope that you do not think that i am boring i would rather you say that maybe i am amusing or interesting or charming i would take any of those ing adjectives and if you do believe that then please go ahead subscribe turn on notifications that way i can become your new english teacher my name is wes as you already know the channel interactive english that's what it's all about just trying to help you reach your fluency goals here's your next challenging question if i had taken my medicine this morning um right now are you going to use a i would have felt sick or b i wouldn't feel sick so i said it's challenging and difficult because we're talking about a mixed conditional which means the answer is b i wouldn't feel sick if i had taken my medicine this morning i wouldn't feel sick right now in this case we're mixing the second and third conditional so we have an imaginary condition because we're imagining a different past which is the third conditional if i had taken my medicine this morning so i did not take it and that leads us in to a hypothetical result in the present i wouldn't feel sick right now another way to think about it is with these two statements right here i didn't take my medicine this morning therefore i feel sick right now i'm saying the same thing with that mixed conditional if i had taken my medicine this morning i wouldn't feel sick right now now when it comes to learning advanced grammar or grammar at any level it's not just something that you should write you also need to speak using the correct grammar and a great language school to help you improve your grammar vocabulary pronunciation is lingoda which is the sponsor of today's lesson so lingoda is an online language school where you can study english business english spanish german or french and and i really think lingoda can help you for several reasons first these are small group classes which means you will have plenty of opportunities to speak you can ask a lot of questions classes are also available

24 7 which means you you pretty much get to customize your learning schedule they have qualified teachers using a proven curriculum you get to learn at your own pace which i think is the ideal way to learn you basically get to design your course because the courses are suited to your level and needs and you can choose which topics you would like to cover you also get to study from the comfort of your own home and you can do all of this at affordable prices and i know all this because i've also studied with lingoda you can see me right there taking a class in spanish and it was a great experience and i was able to improve my pronunciation which is something that i wanted to do so if you would like to know if lingoda can help you like it helped me well then that's easy because when you sign up each plan includes a seven day free trial but most importantly right now lingoda has an exclusive offer just for you you can get thirty percent off all monthly subscriptions and marathon courses when you use the voucher code wes oct30 wes like my name oct like october and then the number 30. so click on the link in the description if you would like to sign up and start improving your english don't forget to use that voucher code wes oct30 and then just put yourself in a position so that you can achieve your fluency goals let's get back to our advanced grammar quiz and here is your next question i don't know um what are you going to say where i should go or where should i go this is something i noticed that many learners commonly confuse so that what we're talking about that blank is really a noun clause which means the answer is a i don't know where i should go so a noun clause it's a dependent clause that has a subject and a verb and just know that it quite often noun clauses are going to begin with words like that or how or those wh words like who what when why or where and then we have this question right here the movie um at 8 pm or you can say the movie um at 8 o'clock how are you going to complete that sentence are you going to use a will start b starts or c is starting so for this one i i guarantee that you got the correct answer and that is because all of them are correct it's a little bit of a trick question you could use will start to talk about things that that will happen in the future you could use starts the present simple to refer to scheduled events in the future and you could also use is starting the present continuous when talking about future arrangements even though all are correct it really just depends on the context when deciding which one you're going to use so let me try to give you some context and tell you how my mind works as to how i would choose which one of these so i think overwhelmingly i am going to use the present simple and just say starts if somebody were to ask me hey what time's the movie i would say the movie starts at eight o'clock i would probably use is starting if i kind of want to emphasize and highlight the time in that case maybe i'm trying to say well okay i want you to be there all right don't be late just remember the movie is starting at eight o'clock so when you use the present continuous you're really referring to that point in time so i'm really trying to make that clear the movie's starting at eight o'clock and then to be honest i would probably use will start less frequently i might use it if i'm thinking about maybe other things that are also going to happen in the future if i were thinking to myself well um i'll have to eat dinner before the movie and then the movie will start at 8 o'clock and after the movie um i'll have to go home because i have to work tomorrow so hopefully that gives you a little more context as to when you might use these different answers here is your next question i recommend that everyone watching this video um that like button all right are you going to say hit that like button or hits that like button so once again this can be a bit tricky the answer is a hit we're talking about the subjunctive mood and we use this to talk about desires wishes or suggestions now grammatically speaking in that noun clause that's right we're talking about another noun clause that everyone watching this video hit that like button in that noun clause you're going to use the base verb when we're talking about the subjunctive mood and this can be a little tricky if the subject is perhaps in the third person like he she or it or if we're talking about an indefinite pronoun like everyone now in spoken english people may not always follow this rule so if i'm going to use the subjunctive mood i could say something like i wish i were faster i wish i were taller i wish i were living in a big beautiful home along the coast overlooking the ocean so in spoken english you may hear somebody say i wish i was taller i wish i were taller i wish i was taller it can be confusing but you will hear both in spoken english next we have this question i um english for several months and i plan to continue improving my language skills are you going to use a have studied or b have been studying so we're talking about the difference between the present perfect and the present perfect continuous all right i hope that you chose b have been studying i've been studying english for several months and i plan to continue improving my language skills so b i think it's the correct answer you could use a but i think b is the better answer and let me explain so the present perfect and the present perfect continuous it can be confusing because they are sometimes interchangeable especially if we're talking about an unfinished action which in this case we are but you're going to use the present perfect continuous more specifically when you're talking about an action that started in the past it's continued to the present and then will likely continue into the future and it's the second part of this sentence and i plan to continue improving my language skills that is why i say b have been studying is the better answer here's the next question um making progress we could not finish before the deadline are you going to use a in spite of or b although okay so i hope that you chose a in spite of in spite of making progress we could not finish before the deadline so both in spite of and although they're referring to contrasting ideas the the only real difference is the way that you use them and i'm talking about the structure of the sentence after in spite of we're going to use a noun a gerund which is that ing form or a pronoun

after although we're going to use a subject and a verb so in our sentence you have making that is a gerund so you're going to use in spite of in spite of making progress now i could use although and say the same thing and use a subject and a verb and i would say although we made progress we could not finish before the deadline so just remember that in spite of making progress is a phrase whereas although we made progress is a clause they're really the same it just depends on how you want to structure the sentence here's your next question talking about prepositions last night we left new york city it was a long flight but we're really excited to see the big apple are you going to complete this sentence with 2 from or 4 which preposition completes this sentence last night we left new york city so the answer is c

4. last night we left for new york city now i know prepositions can be tricky and the best thing you can do is just practice them like we're doing right now so let me explain this the second sentence that is important it was a long flight but we're excited to see the big apple that tells us that the destination is new york city therefore we're not going to use from and normally if we're talking about a place you would go to a place but our verb is leave you're not going to use to when the verb is leave you're going to use for if you're talking about going to a destination you leave for some place also does this if i were to ask this question i would just say who did you invite to the party so just keep that in mind that this is another one of those rules in spoken english that people will tend to break who versus whom here is another question i bought a gift for my little girl it's this um this little stuffed puppy right here i hope she enjoys um gift are you going to use a the or no article which one i hope that you chose be the i hope she enjoys the gift that is the correct answer so really what we're talking about is the rule of first mention and what this rule says is that the first time you mention a singular noun you're going to use the indefinite article a or an and the second time that you mention that same noun you're going to use the definite article the because it is now known so this is a very useful and important rule to follow if you are writing a story or telling a story because you want to make sure you get those articles correct i hope that you enjoyed the gift of this grammar lesson and if you did then you can give me a gift and that is the gift of writing to me in the comments because i just love hearing from you thank you so much for watching and i will see you next time so long

Advanced Grammar Quiz That Will BLOW YOUR MIND

I have some advanced grammar for you that is going to blow your mind. And what this really is all about is just trying to finetune your English fluency because some of this grammar, it's a little tricky. It's a little confusing, but that's what I want to do. That's what I'm here for. And if you are someone that would like to access these lesson notes right here, just click on the link down below. Join my community. Or if you're already a part of it, then check your inbox. I have sent them to you. So, this is a quiz lesson. This is how I make them more interactive. And what I'd like you to do is just, you know, choose the sentence that is grammatically correct. Now, I told you that some of this is a little tricky.

So, let's go through these and what do you think? Uh, right now it's just multiple choice. A, she suggested me to take the train. B, she suggested that I take the train. or C. She suggest see I can't even speak today. She suggested that I took the train. It's a little bit of a tongue twister. Uh if I wanted to try to say it very quickly. So just looking at these three sentences, which do you think is correct? In this case, there is only there is only one answer. There's only one correct answer. And just looking uh in the chat, you guys yes rocked it. B is the correct answer.

She suggested that I take the train. Now, that is optional. I could just say she suggested I take the train. A lot of times I'll hear people say a and they'll wanted to say suggested someone to uh do something. So, this keep in mind when we're talking about suggest and recommend, when you're giving advice to someone, you're going to follow it with that clause plus the subject plus the base verb. Here are some other examples just to, you know, give give you a little more context. I suggest that you wake up early or we recommend you dress appropriately. She suggested I get more exercise and I recommend that you hit the like button. Of course, that is something that I always recommend. Uh, so if you got this correct, you can let me know by hitting that like button. Now to give you a little more information when talking about giving advice because that's not the only pattern that you can use uh is the suggest or recommend plus that plus the subject plus the base verb. There are other patterns that you can use. For example, you could use suggest or recommend plus a gerand which is the verb like the verb form with an ing. He recommended arriving on time. You could also use suggest or recommend followed by a noun. She suggested the restaurant nearby. So there are different ways that that you can go about this. Uh just something that I I want you to to keep in mind. So the next one and you can let me know uh what you think. Here is your question. What do you think? Write your answers in the comments in the chat. I just want to hear from you. So, it's high time you m your homework.

Now, there is an expression in there that I really want to highlight and we're going to talk about it even though there's more than one way to say this and I'll I'll give you a little more information in just a moment. Are we going to complete this sentence with a do b did or c have done? It's high time you m your homework. Now of course I don't many of you you might not be students so you don't have homework. Maybe this can kind of be like your your your homework and we're doing it together because I want you to participate in these lessons. Write your answers in the comments in the chat. I also didn't introduce myself. I'm sorry if this is your first time here. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. And as I've already mentioned, this is about fine-tuning your grammar skills. So, the phrase that I wanted to highlight is it's high time. And when we use that expression, we're going to use it with the past. It's high time you did your homework. So, the correct answer is be did. It's high time you did your homework. To give you an explanation, this is a phrase used to refer to something that should have been done in the past. You're basically saying, "We should have done this already." And you just want to emphasize that, okay, we need to do this now. We need to make this change now. It's high time you did your homework. Really, this is a way of adding emphasis. If you want to say it's high time, more commonly used, and I've put this down there, more commonly used would be saying it's about time you did your homework. Or I could even just say it's time you did your homework. So using either of those phrases is more common. You could use it's high time if you just want to add emphasis. So here are more the I like dropping these subtle hints. It's high time you subscribe to the channel. And I'm just trying to add that emphasis more commonly used. It's about time you subscribe to the channel. Again, I'm still using that past or it's time that you subscribe to the channel. All right. So again, keep in mind one is about adding emphasis and the others I think are you're going to hear and probably use more often. So I wanted to talk about all three of those phrases. And yes, I would love it if you subscribe to the channel. That would be wonderful. I thought this was funny. I don't know why. I just came across it. It's high time. It's high time for pie time. Like you want to have some pie and okay, you want to emphasize that. Look, I should have had pie already. So, we need to do this now. It's high time for pie time.

What do you think? Which sentence is correct? By the time you arrive, I will finish the report. That's a B. By the time you will arrive, I will have finished the report. B. And then C. By the time you arrive, I will have finished the report. There is only one sentence that is grammatically correct. This is I think you see it. It's probably a little easier to follow and understand, but still this is this is advanced grammar. This is advanced. Uh that's how I feel. Lai, it is high time for coffee, even though I'm drinking water right now. But I I do need a little pickme up. So the answer if you had put C then that is correct. By the time you arrive I will have finished my homework. So two things this sentence consists of a dependent clause using by the time and in this case you're um you know using the present simple the main verb in our main clause will have finished. We're talking about the future perfect.

All right? It's not often that you're going to use the future perfect, which is why I said this is more advanced grammar, but we're gonna when when you hear that expression or when you use that by the time that automatically indicates the perfect tense. So really, you're talking about either the past perfect or the future perfect. By the time you arrive, we're talking about that happens in the future. So what happens right before that? Then we're using the future perfect. I will have done this thing. By the time you arrive, I will have finished the report. If I wanted to switch this around, give you an example. In the past, um, by the time you arrived, I had already finished the report. It had already been done. I just added already in there. But I just wanted to show you that in this case, if we change it to the past, then we're going to use the past perfect. By the time you arrived, I had already finished the report. So, two points that are either in the future and you use the future perfect or two points that are both in the past and you're using the past perfect. And this is with that phrase by the time. And I I I do gosh I think it is a phrase that is often you a time expression that you do hear. So really just keep in mind the grammar when using that by the time with either the future perfect or the past perfect. I hope all of that like makes sense. It's easy to grasp. What do you think? I prefer tea m coffee. Pretty simple sentence. Pretty straightforward. But what word would you use or words would you say a to b over c instead instead of? So this is a little trickier because colloquially you may hear people use I mean who knows you may hear people say either but in general there is one answer that I would encourage you to use because I'm going to keep saying it. This is all about fine-tuning your grammar skills and making sure that you are speaking or writing accurately and avoiding simple mistakes. So, excellent. Well done.

Let's give some shout out Lai. Uh Teresa, nice. Um uh Angela, nice. So, the correct answer is A. Now, let me let me explain. When we're talking about prefer, prefer X to Y. This is the correct idiomatic form. However, and I don't know if I don't know if that gives you much confidence when I use those however's because you may hear people use more than one preposition. I would encourage you to use two, but one of them was over. I prefer tea over coffee. You may hear somebody say that uh from time to time colloquial and more casual informal speech. But if you want to think about the correct idiomatic form, tea to coffee, um chicken to beef. All right, I prefer Coke to Pepsi. All right, that's true. So to to highlight what I'm saying as far as using either two or over, a resource that I have talked about regularly is Engram Viewer. If you are ever in a situation in which you're like, "Okay, I have these two phrases.

Which one's more commonly used?" And you can put that into engram viewer. I just put in that prefer uh tea to coffee or prefer uh tea over coffee and then prefer tea uh instead of coffee. As you can see the instead of it doesn't even show up on the graph, but you you hear prefer tea to coffee. This is the one that that you're going to come across most. And you actually do you can see prefer tea over coffee. It does appear on the chart. So, just something to keep in mind. But once again, when talking about this forum, I would encourage you to say, "Prefer X to Y." All right. Um, let's look at the next one. Here we go. Uh, Jiao, new subscriber from Brazil. Good to see you. Nice. Thanks for uh being a part of our of our member community. I love it. This is I I don't think it's tricky, but there is something that I really want to hammer home when it comes to this question. I really want to just make sure drive the point, make sure that you understand this. So, which which sentence is correct? I think you all are going to know this. He stopped to smoke because he was coughing or he stopped smoking because he was coughing. There is something important that I want to say about the sentences specifically when talking about the verb stop because just look at well done. Excellent you guys. I see all these are BB B. Perfect.

Uh so the correct answer is yes. He stopped smoking because he was coughing. Now that dependent clause because he was coughing that gives us the information we need so that we know all right B is the correct answer because this this person stopped they do not smoke anymore. So when you use stop smoking it means you quit. If I were to use stop to smoke, it's basically it means that I'm stopping. I'm pausing to do this activity, which if we're talking about like coughing, that sounds really weird and awkward like somebody's coughing. I better stop and smoke a cigarette. I'm sure there are people out there that may do that. I don't know. But in this case, the correct sentence, he stopped smoking because he was coughing. Now, one thing that you may find not not weird but interesting when it comes to English grammar, we have the verb stop. Now, most verbs you're either going to follow it with a gerund or the infinitive.

However, there's that. However, there are some verbs that you can follow with either a gerund or infinitive. The verb stop is one of them. Now within that that group of verbs that you can either follow with a gerund or an infinitive there is another group a smaller group that depending on whether or not you use the gerund or infinitive it changes the meaning sometimes it whether you use like I um I you could follow like with either one. I like playing tennis. I like to play tennis. They mean the same thing. I could follow the verb like with either a gerund or infinitive. If I use stop and then depending on which one I follow it with, it actually changes the meaning.

Like in the example I just gave you, I've taken this. This is from the um British Council and it basic I wanted to share this with you because it highlights the verbs in which the meaning is going to change. You can see up here I'm blocking my face now. Stop. try try to do something versus try doing something and then remember and forget. So, let me just we've talked about stop as far as you stop to do something versus uh and you actually pause to do it versus stop doing it and then you quit it. try if you're going to follow that with the the gerund and I know this is difficult to see but uh again you want to you can access the lesson notes but I'll I'll tell you what the sentence um it says have you tried turning off the on and off off and on the computer so try doing something is really like talking about experimenting doing it like try doing this thing like you would make a suggestion well have you tried doing this or have you tried doing that so you're experimenting whereas Whereas you try to do something, it means that you're doing something that's difficult. And I I tried to learn um um Japanese, but it was just too difficult for me, but I tried to do it. So that's a distinction. Remember and forget. When you remember doing something, think about like your your memory. Uh, oh, I remember um walking in the park this last weekend. That's what we did. It was very lovely. If you remember to do something, then you're basically remember, oh, I this is something I need to do or uh I I did not remember to lock the door and you're thinking about that that instance and you remember to do something. You're recalling information. Forget functions the same way as remember. You forget doing something versus forget to do something.

So, I really wanted to highlight those four verbs. Um, stop, try, remember, forget. Depending on whether you follow it with a gerund or infinitive, it's going to change the meaning. How about this one? This is more advanced grammar, and I'll tell you why. Because it's not the most commonly used form, and that's okay. It's always good to get a little bit of variety. that the event was cancelled. Which phrase are we going to use to complete this sentence? Did we learn? Had we learned or do we learn? And I don't know why I'm just doing this thing. All right, I'm going to stop. Okay. Not until the last moment that the event was cancelled.

So the grammar concept that I wanted to talk or that I want to talk about and share with you is this idea of inversion. So the correct answer I'm not seeing too many uh uh responses. Maybe people are thinking this one through. Don't be shy. Even if you get incorrect, it's no big deal. Uh it's it's perfectly fine. Not until the last moment did we learn that the event the event was cancelled. So let me tell you inversion. We're going to use this after negative adverbials like not until the last moment. Not until the this means that you're going to reverse the normal subject verb order in the sentence. So, I'm not going to say we did learn. I I'm going to switch it around almost like you're forming a question. Did we learn?

And you're really going to use inversion when you want to add emphasis. You're trying to be persuasive. And therefore, you may come across it or you may hear people use it more often. They're giving a speech or a presentation and they really want to emphasize something. It is a little more formal and you just use this for an effect. Not until the last moment did we learn that the event was cancelled. So something to keep in mind. What do you think? Choose the grammatically correct sentence. This is another one that I think is well I don't want to say whether it's easy or difficult but the this can certainly be confusing. So which sentence is correct? He is used to work late at night. He used to working late at night. He is used to working late at night. I want you to tell me which of those sentence sentences is correct. And there is only one. There is only one answer to choose. So I hope I wasn't seeing I wasn't seeing much and then all of these answers boom boom came out at once. So I I think as you're looking at this you can probably see that okay uh in this case C is the correct answer. Excellent Katarina Julia uh uh good to see you uh Raphaela Lai nice all so many people here today.

no longer do. I used to go dancing on the weekends. I did it in the past, but I don't I don't do it any longer. I used to do this thing and I'm using used to plus the base verb. So, just keep in mind that it can be used to be two different parts of speech. It can be an adjective or it can be a modal verb. And depending on which one you use, the meaning is different. So in our sentence right here, I'm using it as an adjective. He is used to working late at night. To give you a little more context, I I have I like to share these funny little memes with you from time to time. So we're talking about used to plus the noun or Jared. You're accustomed to or familiar with something when everything is going wrong in your life, but you're used to it.

So, I'm using used to it. I'm following it with a noun, the pronoun it. guess yeah, the the the bar is on fire and from the family guy and he still just said, "Hey, you know, I'm I'm used to it." All right. Everything's going wrong, but I'm used to it. So, we're using it as an adjective. If I want to give you an example, another example, using it as a modal verb. So, we're talking about a past action here. It's no longer true. I used to be a people person, but people ruined that for me. I I thought this was funny when I read it. Uh saying, "Oh, yeah. I used to be a people person. I love people." And then you start talking and engaging with him like, "Okay, yeah, yeah, maybe I don't like people as much as I thought." Uh and people ruin that for me. But once again, I'm using it as um a verb. I used to be following it with the base verb be. What do you think? Here's the next one. Hope you guys thought those were funny or entertaining. It's always good to, you know, throw a laugh in there every now and then. The man along with his sons m planning the event. Just giving you there's two choices. I want you to use the verb to be, but how are you going to conjugate it? Are you going to use are or is the man along with his sons planning the event? I'm trying to actually read this in a way that makes it a little easier and perhaps gives it away is making that longer pause when it comes to those commas. So, we're talking about uh you know a group of people. Now, when you think about a group of people, you might think, oh, like they are and that's but that's not the case because really the main subject of the sentence is the man. That is going to be our subject verb agreement. The man along with his sons is planning the event. It's going to maybe it sounds a little awkward because right after sons then we're using that verb to be is. Uh but really what happens I've already said is that the man this is the main subject and the verb must agree with it. The phrase along with his sons this is a nonrestrictive clause. It's really just providing additional information and therefore it can be omitted and that's why I was making that longer pause. I really could just say look the man is planning the event. All right and that tells you that this man is planning the event. If I want to give you a little extra information, I can use that clause.

Well, the man along with his sons is planning the event. So, just keep that in mind. Uh, and hopefully if as you're able to see it, I know when you see things in writing, it makes it a little easier because you saw those commas in there, that should tell you that we're talking about a non-restrictive clause and you could throw that information out. This is the first time I sushi. What? What? What are you going to complete this sentence with? Have eaten, had eaten, or am eating. The There is a phrase that I really wanted to highlight with this. This is the first time I m sushi. Let me know. Write your answers in the comments in the chat. I just want you to participate so that you can fine-tune your grammar skills. That's what it's all about right now. So, this is the first time I you could really when you use the Well, that's the phrase that I want to talk about. I'll just go ahead and give it away. Uh the first time and when you're saying something, well, this is the first time I and then you fill in the blank. There are so many different things that you could say. In this case, you're going to complete the sentence with a have eaten. This is the first time I have eaten sushi. So really, the present perfect tense is used with this phrase, the first time when you're describing some new experience or something that just happened. Now, you're not always going to use the first time in in that context, but whenever you're starting out the sentence like, "Oh, this is the first time I have done something." That is more of a fixed phrase and it's something that people will say from time to time. You're emphasizing the the novelty of this experience and really the relationship to the present. This is the first time this is this is the first time I have taught a lesson in this room and that's true. I'm at an Airbnb right now. So, it's probably uh maybe just one or two more times and then that that'll be it.

But I could say that this is the first time I've taught a lesson in this room. And uh just to give you another example again, dropping more of these subtle hints. If this is the first time you have seen one of my lessons, let me know by hitting the like button or any of those heart buttons in there. I know there are people in the chat. This may be your first time. Let me know. I see some of those hearts coming up. That's perfect. This is this is the first time you have participated in one of these lessons. Again, I'm using the present perfect. All right. Glad I like to see a lot of new people joining and practicing their English skills. Excellent. Love it. Love it. Love it. Love it. What do you think? She insisted that he mresent at the meeting. She insisted that he mresent at the meeting. Are you going to followed by the subjunctive mood but only when it expresses like a demand or some strong recommendation. I insist like I don't know why again I'm just using like uh I insist that he go to the doctor and I'm using the subjunctive mood. However, let me throw that however. Uh, I know some people will be putting uh B and C in there. Colloquially, you will hear people use is or or was. You may hear like, "Oh, she insisted that he was present at the meeting." So, you will hear that from time to time. This is one of those uh instances in English where you have the subjunctive mood and say, "Okay, this is grammatically correct." But a lot of times people don't use it. It's like if saying if I were you. That's another time the subjunctive mood. But you will hear people say like look if I was you.

And you'll hear either one. So this is why it can be a little trickier. But when you see that verb insist and you're talking about a demand or a recommendation, you'd really use that subjunctive. She insisted that he be present at the meeting. He acts as if he m the boss. It kind of just All right, never mind. How would you complete this sentence with is, was, or were. He acts as if he m the boss. If I knew it or wrong, it's okay. It's okay. Uh, these are these are questions that yeah, people make just simple simple uh mistakes. But with that last one, it is tricky because you'll you'll hear um a variety. So, he acts as if he I I kind of just mentioned this when I talk. Oh, if I were you. So, the correct answer is C. He acts as if he were the boss. We're talking about a describing an unreal situation. So, once again, like I just said, if I were you, it's the same thing. But you will again hear people say, "Oh, if I was you." Um, but I would in this case I would encourage you to say, "If I were you." Uh, always when talking about this this situation or he acts as if he were the boss. Uh, because the verb uh following as if, all right, it's often going to be that past subjunctive usually were for all the subjects. So when it gets to that when when talking about the subjunctive, there are rules that you can follow. I would encourage you to follow them. If I were you, he acts as if he were the boss. She insisted that he be present at the meeting. But you may hear people break these rules from time to time. So hopefully that one was maybe a little easier. And what do you This is another

I guess this is another I don't want to never mind. I don't just let's just look at it. Choose the correct sentence. Which one is correct? Neither of the answers are correct. Neither of the answers were correct or neither of the answers is correct. How would you well which one of these sentences would you choose as being the correct the correct answer? Let me know. Write your answers in the comments in the chat. Just want to kind of gauge where everyone's at. This is one of those questions because I've done these grammar lessons before and you probably have noticed even with some of the the previous ones that I do throw in things that are a fair bit of review when talking about the subjunctive mood or conditional sentences. Inversion is something we meant before and using uh this is something else. Neither. So the correct answer I I'm going to say is C.

Neither of the answers is correct. However, there's that however. All right. So, let me just read this and then I'll get to the however. Neither is a singular pronoun. So, because it is a singular pronoun, then you're just going to use a singular verb. Neither of the answers is correct. Now, however, the however, and this is actually something that I've I've shown in a previous lesson. This is from the Britannica dictionary and it's talking about the usage of neither. So basically what it's saying if you I'll read it in case you're having trouble uh if it's too small. According to the rules of grammar, the pronoun neither is singular. It requires a singular verb.

Neither is correct. And then they even use they're using my however. All right. However, in informal writing or speech, a plural verb is common when neither is followed by of like in our sentence that I just gave you. So, they gave you something like neither of the answers is or are correct. You could use either one or neither of them know or knows my friend. So, technically speaking, again, I I do want you to consider neither. This is a singular pronoun. But, uh, if I wanted to go back and look at those, you um could use the singular is or are would would work. Um, so something to keep in mind when talking about neither or neither of something. So, this is a bit tricky. Uh, like many of these grammar questions, I tried to put in include some resources here to make it a little easier to understand. And all I could say is I just hope that your mind is blown right right now. But really, what I really hope is that you learn something new, that you knew probably many or most of these, that's great. But as long as you learn just one new thing, I consider that to be a great success for the lesson today. So if you did enjoy the lesson and you learned something new, you can let me know uh let me know by hitting that like button. I really appreciate all of you being here today. I love seeing so many familiar faces, so many members uh joining uh new members joining and old members. Rafaela, Lai, uh, Teresa, uh, great to see everyone and, uh, thank you guys so much. I hope, uh, you have a wonderful rest of the day and I will see you very soon for another lesson in the near future. Just give some quick shoutouts. Thank you uh, Tao, Julia, Ahmed, Angela. Uh, great to see everybody. Have a good one and I will

Advanced Grammar in 60 Minutes (Improve Your English Fluency)

The next hour is all about grammar. And I am going to teach you a variety of things that are really more upper intermediate to advanced grammar. And learning this is incredibly helpful because it's going to allow you to speak and write more accurately. In addition, and I think this is the most important thing, you'll be able to avoid making simple mistakes. So when it comes to the English language, verbs are perhaps well, some of the most important words because they're very descriptive and they really shape the way that we communicate. So it is very important that you understand all of the different verb tenses and I want to teach you all of them right now. I want to teach you all 12 English verb tenses and then I'm going to give you a quiz to see how much you've learned and how much you remember. So let's first talk about well, how do we get to 12? So in English there are three main tenses that refers to time. We have the past, the present, and the future. And then there are also four aspects and that refers to the state of action. And those are simple, continuous, perfect, and perfect continuous. $3 * 4$ is 12, so we have 12 verb tenses. Now, I'm going to tell you a little bit about each verb tense, I'll give you an example sentence, and then we'll take that quiz. So let's begin with the present simple. So the present simple can be used in a few different ways. Generally, it's used to describe actions that are habitual. And when we talk about these habits, quite often we'll use an adverb of frequency like always, usually, sometimes, rarely, never. I could say I always ask you to hit the like button and subscribe to the channel. That is that's a habit. That's something I always ask you to do. And I really hope you do like and subscribe to the channel because that way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes and that's what Interactive English is all about. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. We use the present simple to talk about facts. Fire is hot. That's a fact. Fire is hot. And we use the present simple to talk about scheduled time in the future. Now, this one can be a little trickier because we're talking about the present simple, but now we're talking about something in the future. And this is actually quite common when we refer to a certain time and something that is scheduled. So I could say the movie starts at 8:00. It starts in the future, but I'm using the present simple. The movie starts at 8:00. Now let's talk about the past simple, which is used to describe a finished action in the past. And often there are some keywords that really indicate the past simple like yesterday or last week or last year or a long time ago. If I were to ask you what did you do yesterday? You hear yesterday and you should automatically start thinking past simple. I could say a long time ago I taught in South Korea. That's true. That that's long time ago, it's finished. I taught in South Korea. Annyeonghaseyo to anyone out there who's watching from Korea. The next one, it's a very important verb tense. We we just talked about the past simple, so I want to stay in the past and talk to you about the present perfect. And this one it can be challenging because not all languages have a present perfect tense. But when we use the present perfect, we're going to use the verb have plus the past participle. So with unfinished actions, you may find words like for when talking about a duration of time or since when talking about a point in time.

2017. If talking about finished actions, people commonly use this when when talking about experiences. Uh I could say we have been to Berlin. It it's it's in the past, it's finished, but we we also don't know when. So whenever you're talking about those experiences, it's very common to use the present perfect. Or we could use it to talk about something that was completed in the recent past. And in that case, uh I could say we recently traveled to Italy. You can see us right there. I I like this verb tense. It gives me an opportunity to share some some family photos with you. Now let's move on to the future and talk about the future simple, which is used to describe an action that that happens in the future and expresses fact or certainty. And when talking about the future simple, you're going to use either will or be going to. Previously, I did a lesson talking about all the differences between will and going to and I'll I'll leave that up here for you in case you're interested. But uh I could say I

I think it'll rain tomorrow. So that's that's an example with will and going to. All right. The United States is going to win the next World Cup. Okay, I have a tough time saying it with a straight face, but I just I got to be supportive, so yes, United States is going to win the next World Cup. Just just wait. The present continuous. So we are going to use the present simple of the verb to be, is, am, are, plus the verb and ing. And we use this verb tense when talking about actions that are happening right now and they're not yet finished. So if I were to ask you, what are you doing? You could say that you are watching this lesson.

We use the present continuous to talk about temporary situations or habits. So if somebody were to say, well, this month I'm working from home. That's a temporary situation. We also use this verb tense when talking about annoyances. So if somebody were to say, you're always asking me for help. And in this case, you may hear people use words like always or constantly when expressing that annoyance. And just like the present simple, we can use this tense to talk about the future, but not not a time in arrangements, something that that you have planned. Uh I could say I'm leaving on a jet airplane, don't know when I'll be back again. And bonus points if you can tell me who sang that song. Let me know down in the comments. And then there's the past continuous and we're going to use the past simple of the verb to be, was or were, plus the verb and ing. So we use the past continuous to refer to continuous actions that happened at a specific time in the past or actions that were happening when some other event occurred. And we use the past continuous with story backgrounds. I could say the sun was shining, the birds were singing, it was a beautiful day. So with story backgrounds, you will often hear the past continuous. Or overlapping actions. They happen at the same time. She was working while he was cooking dinner. Both of them happening at the same time, we use the past continuous. We can also use this if we're talking about a change of mind. We were planning a road trip, but the car broke down, all right? Something we were planning, but then yeah, we we changed our mind. Now let's go back to the future and pardon the movie puns, but I want to talk to you about the future continuous. So we're going to use will be plus the verb and ing. And we use the future continuous to refer to a continuous action that's happening at a given time in the future or actions that will be happening when some event occurs. So for given time, I could say a week from now, I will be sitting on a beach.

It's not true. I wish it were true. And for an overlapping action, then I could say while you are shoveling snow in your driveway, I will be sitting on a beach. And and notice that you have that future arrangement with the present continuous. While you are shoveling snow in your driveway, I will be sitting on a beach. And you often hear statements like this when talking about the future. While you are doing something, I will be doing something else. And then we have the present perfect continuous and we'll use have been plus the verb and ing. And we can use this with unfinished actions to refer to an action that started in the past and continued to the present. And once again, you may use this with words like for and since. I could say I've been waiting for the bus for 30 minutes, all right? It started in the past, it's continued to the present. And just to add one more thing about this verb tense, it's likely going to continue into the future. That that's another key part of the present perfect continuous.

We can also use this tense to talk about a past action that just finished. So say that I walk outside and and it's wet everywhere, I could use this verb tense and say, well, it's been raining. It's not raining now, it finished in the recent past, so I could use the present perfect continuous. It's been raining. And then there's the past perfect in which we'll use had plus the past participle. And this refers to two actions in the past and really just shows that one happened before the other. Now the past perfect is often used with a dependent clause that's going to begin with a subordinating conjunction like when or before or by the time, but just keep in mind that the past perfect is going to be used in the independent clause. So, I could say, "When I arrived at the office, the meeting had already begun."

It's not a good situation. And then there's the past perfect continuous. And now we're getting into more advanced verb tenses. So, we're going to use had been plus the verb and ing. And we use the past perfect continuous to refer to an action that started in the past and continued to another point in the past. And we're going to use the past perfect continuous in that independent clause. And I could say, "I had been working at the school for a year when I met my future wife." All right, I had been working there for a year, it continued up until that point when I met my future wife. That is a true story. You can see see us right there. And I like to tease her because she just started working there and observed one of my classes.

And I joke around and say that she saw my class and was like, "Wow, this guy can teach. That's so hot." I should I should probably edit this out. But, yeah, whatever. Let's continue. Let's continue with the future perfect. So, we're going to use will have plus the past participle. We use the future perfect to talk about two actions that happen in the future. And it really just shows that one action happens before the other. So, I could say, "By the end of next year, you will have achieved your fluency goals because you will have watched all of my video lessons." So, just go ahead, subscribe, turn on notifications so that you'll learn about all of my video lessons in the future. And last but not least, we have the future perfect continuous.

We're going to use will have been plus the verb and ing. And we use this verb tense to talk about an action that happens in the future and continues to some other point in the future. And I could say, "By 2067, I will have been teaching on YouTube for 50 years." And oof. Okay, that's that's a long time. So, now you know these verb tenses, you know how they're used, you've seen some example sentences. So, let's put your knowledge to the test. I am going to give you some sentences without the verb tense. And I want you to think, how would you best complete this sentence? I'll give you a moment to think about it, and then I'll tell you the answer. So, let's begin with our first one right here. Wes mhm broccoli.

Okay. I'm giving you the verb. How would you best complete that sentence? Wes mhm broccoli. I hope that you used the present simple to complete it and say, "Wes doesn't like broccoli." It's true. Broccoli and I, we have uh a bit of a contentious relationship. The next one, it's a question. What mhm around 8:00 last night? Okay, I'm giving you the subject and the verb. It's a question. What mhm around 8:00 last night? Couple things going on. You see last night, you should think past. There's a specific time, which is continuous. So, I hope you used the past continuous. What were you doing around 8:00 last night? At 8:00 last night, I think I was taking a shower. All right, again, past continuous. Then we have this next one. I mhm to India, but I hope to go in the future.

I mhm to India, but I hope to go in the future. Okay, so in this case we're talking about an experience. So, you would use the present perfect. I have not been to India, but I hope to go in the future. And that is true, I really do. I haven't been there, but I hope to go in the future. Then we have she mhm to Brazil a long time ago. She mhm to Brazil a long time ago. The keyword in this sentence, a long time ago. You see that, you should think past simple. She traveled to Brazil a long time ago. I'm sure you got that one right. So, here is the next one. By the time I got to the stadium, the match mhm.

By the time I got to the stadium, the match mhm. So, I talked about that phrase by the time already. That that is a key indicator of the past perfect. By the time I got to the stadium, the match had already finished. Had already finished, past perfect. And then I have one more question for you. How long mhm in line? Think about the context in which someone would ask you this question. How long mhm in line? So, we're talking about something that started in the past, it's continued to the present, and will likely continue into the future. And you would use the present perfect continuous. How long have you been waiting in line?

I'm sure that you rocked that quiz. And if you did, you can let me know and write, "I am a grammar all-star" down in the comments. So, now I want to switch gears and talk about changing sentences. And the change that I'm referring to is active to passive. This is incredibly useful. I want to teach you the differences between active and passive voice, as well as when and how to use these sentences. So, without further ado, let's fine-tune your grammar skills and do a deep dive into the active and passive voice. It's all about active and passive voice. I want to tell you, well, what is the difference between active and passive? How do you change sentences from active voice to passive voice? And when should you use the passive voice?

Because I think that can confuse learners from time to time. The reason why I'm doing this is because often in the comments I get questions and people are like, "Well, hey, how do you change this sentence to the passive voice?" It made me realize that, "Okay, this is valuable information for you to know about when and how to use active and passive voice. So, when you're thinking about, okay, like let's start with the sentences that we can change from active to passive. So, the first thing that I want to do is focus on the verb. And the verb tense does not matter. What really matters is what follows the verb. Does an object follow the verb? Because if it does, then we can change it to the passive voice. Let me give you some more information about that. So, verbs can either be transitive or intransitive. If a verb is transitive, it means that it has an object in order to help complete the meaning of the sentence. For example, the verb buy. We will follow that with an object because it tells us, well, what the person is buying. I buy some food. Subject, verb, object. So, if a verb has an object, then it is a transitive verb. If a verb is intransitive, then, well, that just means that there is no object. The verb will likely be followed by a prepositional phrase or maybe even an adverb. Think about the verb laugh. All right, you you know what the meaning of that is. And I could say the sentence, "She laughs at the joke." Subject, verb, prepositional phrase. Or I could say, "They laughed immediately." Subject, verb, adverb. Now, there are some verbs that can be either transitive or intransitive. Let's look at the verb eat. I could say, "We will eat the sandwiches." Talking about the future, I have my subject, verb, and the sandwiches, that is my object. Now, I can use that same verb and follow it with a prepositional phrase and say, "Well, we will eat in the park." In that case, I have subject, verb, prepositional phrase, it is intransitive. Now, the reason why I'm telling you all this because you may be thinking, "What what the heck does this have to do with active and passive voice?" If a verb is intransitive, you cannot change it to the passive voice. So, all of the sentences that I just talked about that were intransitive, "She laughs at the joke." "They laughed immediately." "We will eat in the park." Those sentences cannot be changed to the passive voice. In order to change a sentence from active to passive, or or even just to use the passive, you need to have an object. So, now you know the types of sentences that you can change to the passive voice. They must be transitive verbs.

For example, I could say, uh well, "Wes teaches English." It's direct, it's easy to understand, and the focus is on well, Wes, who is doing the action. The subject is doing the action. So, the vast majority of the time, just know, all right, you are going to use the active voice. There are certain instances in which it's common to use the passive voice. And I want to talk to you about four different times in which you may want to use the passive voice and why. And as we go through this, uh I'm going to give you some examples, and we're going to change the sentences from active to passive. So, let's begin with the first one, which is when you want to emphasize the action over the actor. This is a great example of when you would want to use the passive voice. So, let's take the sentence I wrote that email. This is an active sentence. Subject, verb, object. Now, if we want to change this to the passive voice, we're going to take the object and move it to the front of the sentence. Then you are going to add the verb to be plus the past participle plus the phrase by and the subject. So, let's look at this change a bit closer. We have our active sentence, I wrote that email. That email, that's the object. I'm going to move it to the front of the sentence. Then I'm going to follow it with the verb to be. Now, one thing you need to keep in mind is the verb tense, because in the active sentence, wrote is in the simple past.

So, that means I need to use the verb to be in the simple past. That email was, then the past participle. The main verb in the active sentence is write. The past participle is written. Write, wrote, written. That email was written by me. All right, that is the subject. The subject is moved to the end. Notice changes from a subject pronoun to an object pronoun. So, in our active sentence, we're going to use the subject pronoun I, I, you, he, she, it, we, they. If we're changing it to the passive, then it's going to become an object pronoun, me. Me, you, him, her, us, them, those are object pronouns. One other thing that I think is important it is subject-verb agreement, because in this case, I'm saying that email was written. If in my active sentence, I were to say, well, I wrote those emails, and the object is plural, that's going to change the subject-verb agreement. Then I would say, those emails were written. So, that that's something you need to pay close attention to when changing from active to passive. Is the object singular, or is the object plural? So, this this is kind of a difficult example to start out with, because there are many changes that are occurring. You have a simple sentence like I wrote that email, and you're going to change it to the passive, that email was written by me. And again, I told you in this sense, you might use the passive if you want to emphasize the action over the actor.

Another time that you may want to use the passive voice is when you want to avoid identifying the actor. You want to avoid identifying that subject. So, let's take let's take an active sentence we made mistakes. We have our subject, verb, and our object. Our object is mistakes. Let's now change it to the passive, and this time, we're going to avoid we're going to avoid identifying the actor. So, I would take mistakes, I'm going to move it to the front of the sentence. Mistakes were, because again, we're talking about the past tense, and then the past participle, made. Mistakes were made, finished. I don't want to identify who made the mistakes. And the reason why is because well, we made the mistakes. So, this in this example, I I think of government and politician, because they don't want to admit when they made a mistake. So, instead of going up there and saying, well, look, sorry everyone, we made mistakes, they would get up there and they would use the passive voice and say, well, mistakes were made. And in that case, they are not identifying themselves, because people would would hate them for it, and this is a way for them to avoid responsibility. So, in this example, I I tend to think of politicians. I know I'm rather cynical. Instead of saying, you know, oh, we made mistakes, they might say, mistakes were made, and they avoid identifying the actor. Another time in which you may want to use the passive voice is when the actor is unknown. We don't know who the subject is that is performing that action. For example, let's take the sentence someone stole my bike. Subject, verb, object. Now, let's change it to the passive. We're going to take the object, move it to the front. My bike.

Follow it with the verb to be, was, because it was the past tense. My bike was, plus the past participle, stolen. So, we have my bike was stolen by, well, we don't know who the person is. In the active voice, I just said someone, I use the indefinite pronoun. But if we're changing this to the passive you don't need to say by someone. It's not necessary. We don't know who it is. You just say, oh, my bike was stolen. So, this is a great example as to when you would use the passive when you don't know who the actor is. My bike was stolen, my wallet was stolen. Those are examples of when I think it's pretty common that you may hear someone use the passive, or maybe you want to use the passive voice as well. Another time in which you may want to use the passive is when you want to you want to have a firm tone. You're you're giving a command, you want to be firm, but you also want to be polite as well.

someone using the passive, or you can use it, too. So, let's start with just a general command, which is no talking. So, if we want to change this to the passive, it can be a little tricky. So, let's expand that sentence out to we do not allow talking. Now, we have something to work with and can change it to the passive voice. So, we're going to take talking, we're going to move it to the front. We're going to follow it with the verb to be in the present tense. Talking is not, because we're talking about something in the negative. Talking is not allowed. That is the past participle. And that's basically how you would say it. You don't need to identify the actor, you're giving a command, it's understood. So, you would just say, talking is not allowed. And I said it's a little more polite, because if somebody's going to tell you, hey, no talking I think that can be come off as a little rude. Instead, I think it's a little more polite to just say, hey, you know, talking is not allowed. So, these are four great examples as to when you may want to try and use the passive voice, or you may likely hear somebody else using the passive voice. So, let's practice a little bit.

I want to go back through each and every one of these instances. I'll give you a moment to think about it, and then I will tell you the answer. And I'm going to try and give you sentences that I think are relevant, that I think people would actually say in the passive voice. So, let's begin with that first instance in which you may want to emphasize the action over the actor. And the sentence that I'm going to give you is this one right here. My ancestors farmed this land. Change it to the passive voice. I'll make it a little easier for you, all right, I'm giving you part of the answer right here. What would you say? How would you change this to the passive?

I hope that you said in the passive voice, this land was farmed by my ancestors. And this is something, yeah, you may want to emphasize that, especially if maybe something is going to happen to the land. We can't destroy this land. This land was farmed by my ancestors. It's very important to me. The next sentence that I want you to change, and I want you to avoid identifying the actor is this one. They will put their dog to sleep. It is a sad sentence. It's a fact of life. If you don't know what it means to put an animal to sleep is basically to kill the animal, mostly because of old age, or they're sick, and they have a poor quality of life. So, you could say in the active voice, they will put their dog to sleep.

How would you change it to the passive? Here is part of it. How would you complete that sentence? I hope that all of you said, their dog will be put to sleep. We're talking about something that will happen in the future, will be put. In this case, you're not identifying the actor, you're not saying by them. If you're talking to somebody else about this family situation, and you know it's difficult for them, you're just going to tell somebody what would happen without identifying the actor, and say, their dog will be put to sleep. The next one is when the actor is unknown, and this time, I have a question for you. I want you to change this question from the active to the passive. And that question is, "Has anyone fed the cat?" This is a question in the active voice.

How would you change it to the passive? And I'm not going to give you any hints this time. So, what do you think? "Has anyone fed the cat?" Again, the actor is unknown. We have that indefinite pronoun anyone. So, if we change this to the passive, I think a very common question someone might ask is, "Has the cat been fed?" We're still using the present perfect in the question, and the grammar is going to remain the same. Has the cat Remember that object is going to move to the front, and it will go after that helping verb. Has the cat the verb to be been plus the past participle fed. "Has the cat been fed?" We don't need to say "by anyone" because well, it's not really relevant. We don't know, so it's very common just to ask, "Hey, has the cat been fed?" And then I have a command for you that I want you to change, and that is, "No smoking."

Now, we did this before. I gave you that example, "No talking." I want you to change "No smoking" to the passive, but I don't want you to use the word not. And because of that, I really want you to think about what verb should you use. What verb is commonly used, and this is actually I think a sign that you may see quite often out in public. Let's stretch this out. I'll make it a little easier for you. The verb you could use is prohibit. We prohibit smoking. And then if I give you that, I think it's much easier to change and make a passive sentence, and you would say, "Smoking is prohibited." "Smoking is prohibited" passive voice. It is a firm tone, but it's also I think a little more polite than just saying, "Hey, no smoking." Just tell somebody, "Smoking is prohibited." So, I hope you have a perfect understanding of active voice, passive voice, how do you change these sentences, as well as when to use the passive voice. I think that is very important because, like I said, most of the time you are going to use the active voice. What I want you to do right now is let's do some more practice. I want you to write an active sentence in the comments, and then I want you to go to someone else's comment, reply to their comment, and change it to the passive. So, what I want is just to have this long list of comments in the active, and then you can respond to those comments and change the sentence from active to passive. Right now, I want to have a look at some tricky grammar and teach you the ins and outs of causative verbs, which are commonly used in everyday conversation and writing. And that is why it is super important to understand the causative structure when it comes to the verbs have, get, make, let, and help. And

let's begin with a question. I have a question for you, and just tell me which one you think is correct. I help my friends make dinner, or I help my friends to make dinner. So, this can be a bit tricky for a couple of reasons. The first has to do with the verb help, which I will come back to in just a little bit. The second reason, which is really the main reason, is because when you learn verbs, and I'm sure you've noticed that when you have the verb followed by an object, it's often then followed by the infinitive, which is to plus the base verb. So, co- consider the following sentences. I taught her to swim.

They asked me to stay. We told him to help. In each of these sentences, we have the verb followed by an object followed by the infinitive. Something else I could tell you is that I always ask you to subscribe to the channel if you would like to improve your English skills, and that way I can become your English teacher. My name is West. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. So, in this lesson, we're going to talk about causative verbs, which are different than the ones I just showed you. And it's important to understand how to form sentences with these verbs and use the causative structure so that you don't make simple mistakes because these verbs are very common, and they're very useful. So, in today's lesson, I am going to talk to you about the verbs have, get, make, let, and help. So, what exactly are causative verbs? Well, these are verbs that we use to indicate that someone or something causes something to happen. So, I I'm going to use the word cause a lot, so it's also important to understand what this word means, and that is just the reason why something is happening. Let me give you an example, and then we'll go into more detail. I could tell you, "My wife made me take out the garbage." Okay, giving you a real-life example. So, basically, my wife is causing me to do something, which is take out the garbage. She is the reason why this is happening. So, the subject is causing the action. Now, even though she is not doing the action of taking out the garbage, she is in control of the situation. So, the subject may not do the action, but controls the situation causing something to happen. And notice that I'm not going to follow the object with to. I'm not going to say "to take." Now, I'm trying to help you understand just the basic idea because the way that someone or something controls a situation and causes something to happen is either by paying, asking, convincing, forcing, or permitting someone to do something. Right now, I want to switch gears and talk to you about the causative structure, but I will come back to these ideas throughout the lesson. So, let's begin with have. Normally, people think of the verb have meaning possession, like uh "I have a phone." But in this case, the meaning is different. It means causing something to happen either by paying, asking, or convincing someone, but mostly it's by paying. And there are two different structures depending on whether the object is a person or thing. So, you have someone plus the base verb. You have someone do something.

Or you have something plus the past participle. You have something done. Let me walk you through a situation. If I give you the sentence, "My brother painted my house." We know what happened, but we don't know what caused this to happen. Now, if I said, "I had my brother paint my house." I had someone do something. Now, we know that I caused this to happen. I didn't do the action. I didn't paint my house. My brother did. And and we can infer that I either asked him or convinced him or or maybe even paid him some money. Now, if I said, "I had my house painted." I had something done, and I'm using that past participle. Again, I am the one who caused the house to get painted, but we don't know who did the action. And in this case, the structure is similar to the passive. And that's because the focus is not really on well, who's doing the action because we don't know. The most important thing is the result that the house got painted. And in this case, we can infer that I paid someone to do this. Here are some more examples, but when you think about these sentences, keep in mind that the subject is causing something to happen, but not doing the action. So, with have someone plus the base verb, I could say, "I'll have my friend give us a ride." Or the teacher had the students learn causative verbs. And with have something plus the past participle, I could tell you, "They had their home remodeled." Or we had the event catered. Let's now have a look at the verb get, which, once again, has two different structures depending on whether the object is a person or thing. So, you get someone plus two plus the base verb. You get someone to do something.

Or you get something plus the past participle. You get something done. To be honest, it has the same meaning as have in that someone or something is causing something to happen either by asking, convincing, or paying. Like mostly paying. So, as causative verbs, have and get may be used interchangeably. The the only real difference is that have it is a bit more formal than get. Once again, though, I have some sentences, and we'll just walk through a situation. "A mechanic fixed her car." I'm just stating a fact, and I'm not talking about who caused this to happen. But if I say, "She got a mechanic to fix her car." She got someone to do something. So, now we know that she caused this to happen, and we can infer that she paid this person to do this. So, you could use this form if someone asked, "Did she find someone to fix her car?" I'm asking if she caused the fixing to happen. And then you could respond, "Yeah, she got a mechanic to fix her car." And then if I said, "She got her car fixed." she got something done.

Again, we're using the past participle, and this is similar to the passive. We don't know who did the action because that's not important. The focus is on the result that the car is fixed, and yes, we can infer that she paid someone to do this. So, maybe somebody is asking, "Can she give us a ride? I thought her car was in the shop." In this case, all that matters is the result that the car is now working. So, you could say, "Yeah, she can give us a ride. two plus the base verb. I could say, "When my daughter gets older, I'll get her to do her homework." Okay, that's that's probably not true, but an example with get. Or I could say, "We got our neighbors to give us a hand." And then a couple of examples with get something plus the past participle.

Um he's going to get his hair cut this week. Or she got her nails painted yesterday. Then the next three, make, let, and help are a little easier because they share the same structure. You have the verb plus the object plus the base verb. And And really the object is going to be someone or something. Now, when someone or something makes something happen, generally it's by force or or just causing this thing to happen. I could say, "My boss made me work late." All right, that's force. Or the wind made my bike fall over. Once again, force. Or the movie made me cry. It just caused this to happen. When someone or something lets something happen, it's because of permission. My boss let me leave work early.

She let me borrow her car. The pass lets us enter all of the museums. And then we have the verb help, which I told you at the beginning of the lesson is a little tricky because with the verb help, you're not necessarily causing something to happen. You're really assisting someone. But still, it's considered a causative verb because we use the same structure. I could say, "My wife always helps me do the dishes." Or the article will help me understand the situation. Or my experience helped me get the promotion. Now, with help, I should tell you, it is possible to follow the object with two plus the base verb. So, we can use to help with all of these sentences, and the meaning stays the same. But because we're adding an additional word, which is two, most of the time people won't use it because it's just more efficient to say or write fewer words.

But you don't have to take my word for it. You can check out Ngram Viewer and compare these phrases on a graph so that you can visually see which of the phrases is more commonly used. And as you can see, using help plus the object plus the base verb is more frequently used. But let's go back to my original question. I help my friends make dinner, or I help my friends to make dinner. Both of them are correct, but it's more common for someone to just say, "I help my friends make dinner." Now, let's test your knowledge with a mini quiz. I will give you a moment to think of the answer, and then I will tell you the correct answer. Are you ready? Here's your first question. I mhm my toilet.

What do you think? So, the correct answer is C. I had a plumber fix my toilet. I had someone do something. Here's the next one. She mhm her jacket. The answer is she let her friend borrow her jacket. She let someone do something. Here's another question. The bad weather mhm our plans. What do you think? The answer is the bad weather made us alter our plans. It forced us to do this. And then there's we mhm the contract. The correct answer is we got a lawyer to look over the contract. We got someone to do something. Let me know how you did down in the comments because I love hearing from you. Now, when most people think of grammar, they think of rules.

So, right now I want to share with you 25 very important rules with the most common word in English. Now, these are rules that you you don't really need to memorize, but just be familiar with them. Know that they exist. This is about fine-tuning your English skills and avoiding simple mistakes. I said that at the beginning. So, let's have a look at some grammar rules with the article the. I want to teach you 25 rules that you can follow so that you know when to use the article the. If you are a person that loves learning grammar rules because you think that rules make it a little easier for you to follow, then this lesson is for you. So, the first rule that I have for you is you're going to use the when you are talking about things that you have already mentioned.

This is sometimes called the rule of first mention because the first time you mention something, you will use the indefinite article A or An, but the next time, the second time that you mention it, you will use the definite article the. Let me give you an example so you know what I'm talking about. Here is a man with a bucket. He has water in the bucket. So, the first time I mentioned the noun bucket, I used that indefinite article, but the second time I mentioned it, it's already been mentioned, I'm going to use the. Then I could go on and say, "There is a plant next to the man. He is watering the plant." All right, but now when you are talking, selling some story, you're not going to emphasize the just like I did. I just wanted to make sure it was easy for you to understand. So, the second time that I mentioned all of those things, I used the. We also use the when there is only one of something, and we we kind of just assume that there is only one. So, maybe I go to a restaurant and I ask somebody, "Where's the toilet?" I I just assume that there is only one toilet in that restaurant, so I would use the. Or maybe I could say, "We went for a walk in the park." Or even we drove to the mall downtown.

In that case, downtown, we just assume that there is only one mall. We drove to the mall downtown. We use the when we want to refer to specific count nouns, those nouns that we can count, 1 2 3 4 5. So, for example, maybe you come over and visit me, and I tell you, you know, "Make yourself comfortable. Have a seat on the couch." I say, "Have a seat on the couch." It's specific. You know that I'm really just talking about one because yes, I only there is only one couch in my home even though it is a count noun, the couch. say, "Please, can you hit the like button?" It's specific. There's just one like button. So, yeah, please go ahead, hit that like button. Please hit the like button. We also use the to refer to specific non-count nouns, those non-countable nouns. For example, I I could ask somebody, "Please pass me the salt." Salt is a non-count noun. Or maybe I This is something when when we travel, I always just just to be safe, I always ask people, you know, "Is Is the water safe to drink? Is the tap water safe to drink?" Water is a non-count noun, but I will use the. Is the water safe to drink? We use the to refer to objects that are unique, the sun, the moon, the sky. We also use the to refer to people that are unique as well, the boss, the president, the pope. Yes, there's only one pope. And then we use the before superlatives. She is the smartest person in the class. Wes is the best English teacher in the world. All right, or maybe you you could be thinking, "You know what? This guy is the worst." Whether or not you think I'm the best or the worst, all I care about is that you remember we use the before superlatives, the fastest, the the most comfortable, the spiciest, the most beautiful. The before superlatives. We use the before ordinal numbers. Now, this is not always going to be the case, but if you're talking about a very common sentence that somebody might use with ordinal numbers, and they say, "This is the time something happened." This is the first time that something happened. For example, if I were again to ask you, "Please hit the like button." Then I could say, "You know, this is the second time that I've asked you to do that." So, yes, please, just go ahead and do it. All right, that's This is the second time I've asked that. We use the with clauses introduced by only. This is the only day I have available. Or maybe I could say, "You are the only person that I trust." We also use the when we talk about decades, the 1960s. Or perhaps somebody might just say the '70s. That's when I was born. or the 80s. Got to love those one-hit wonders. If you want to refer to groups of people like the those collective nouns, you are going to use the for example of the French, the British, the elderly, the police, the rich, the poor. Those are all collective nouns and you will use that definite article the.

We also use the if we want to talk about rivers, the Amazon, the Nile. We use the if we want to talk about mountain ranges as well, the Rockies, the Andes, the Alps. Oceans, that's another rule. If you're talking about oceans, you need to use the. So, I could ask you, what is your favorite ocean? Is it the Atlantic Ocean or the Pacific Ocean? We use the if we're talking about deserts, the Sahara Desert. I've never been to the Sahara Desert. I've driven through the Mojave Desert, but I've never been to the Sahara. But either way, we got to use the before those deserts. We use the when talking about certain points on the globe, the North Pole, the South Pole, the Equator. We also use this definite article if we're talking about the names of islands, especially as a group, the Bahamas. And especially if you can follow the name with the word islands, then you know, okay, use the. The Hawaiian Islands, the Galapagos Islands.

We use the when talking about countries with plural names like the the Philippines or the Netherlands. I think it may just be those two, all right? But just just remember countries with plural names use the. We're also going to use the when talking about countries with a name that really it it says the type of state it is like kingdom or republic. So, for example, I could say the United States. I I am from the US or the United Kingdom or even the Republic of China. We use the when talking about the names of newspapers, the New York Times or the Washington Post. Now, there there will be some exceptions to this rule and I think it's just because maybe the newspaper wants to be creative and have a catchy name, but in general, you're going to use the before the names of newspapers. You will also use the before the names of buildings or structures like the Empire State Building or the Great Wall of China or the pyramids. You need to use the when talking about monuments like the Statue of Liberty or the Statue of David or even the Taj Mahal. You will use the when talking about museums as well such as the Louvre or the Metropolitan Museum of Art. That is that's probably the last museum that I visited. You will use the when talking about the names of hotels like the Marriott or the Hilton. There again, there will be some exceptions to this rule and you are going to use the when talking about the names of families. You're in this in this case you're talking about not not individual people, but the family as a group. So, like the movie Harry Potter, you you might hear people say the Potters when talking about the family or a very famous family, they have their own TV show, the Kardashians. So, those are 25 rules that you can follow so that you know when to use the definite article the. Now, you do not need to memorize all of these rules.

Learning grammar in part is about avoiding mistakes. You want to learn the structure and the rules that should be followed. However, mistakes are inevitable. They're going to happen and it is okay to make mistakes. to help you avoid making these mistakes, especially the simple ones. But in order to do that, it is important to understand well, what are some common mistakes? And right now I want to take a look at three grammar mistakes that even advanced learners make. I'm going to talk to you about some different grammar that English learners commonly confuse and simple mistakes are made. So, I'm going to teach you the grammar. Practice, practice and practice some more. So, the first grammar mistake that you might be making is this right here.

I want you to tell me which sentence do you think is correct? The doctor recommends that she go to bed early or the doctor recommends that she goes to bed early. Which one do you think is correct? Because there is only one answer. I hope you chose this sentence right here. The doctor recommends she go to bed early. Now, you may look at this and think, wait a second, what's going on? Subject verb, she goes. But this is an example of the subjunctive mood that expresses a suggestion. Another way to think about it, which I think might be a little easier, is that there is a hidden modal verb in there and we could rework this sentence and I could tell you this.

The doctor thinks that she should go to bed early. So, you see that modal verb should and we follow that with the base verb go. Now, there are some verbs out there that that basically contain the same meaning should. For example, recommend. When you recommend something, you're basically telling someone what you think they should do. So, you don't need to use should. It's almost like it's hidden within the meaning of the verb recommend. So, you would say the doctor recommends that she go to bed early. We use the base verb go. Now, mistakes are commonly made when that noun clause is in the present simple and the subject is he, she, or it because naturally learners want to conjugate that verb using that subject he, she, or it and they would conjugate it incorrectly. When we're talking about the subjunctive mood, you're going to use the base verb.

Keep in mind, the subjunctive mood covers a range from wishes to commands to suggestions to conditions. And there are some verbs that tend to attract the subjunctive mood and those are the following. So, these are verbs in which you may end up using the subjunctive mood. So, let's practice this right now. I am going to give you a sentence and I want you to transform that sentence so that it has the same meaning, but you are going to use one of these verbs with the subjunctive mood. I'll tell you the sentence and then give you a few seconds before I give you the answer. Are you ready? So, the first sentence that I have for you is this. must leave at once. I want you to change this sentence and use the verb demand. She thinks that he must leave at once. Remember how I told you that that hidden modal. That modal is in the meaning of the verb. So, if we're going to transform this and change this sentence around, you would say she demands that he leave at once. He leave. The next sentence I have for you is I believe the game should get rescheduled. I believe the game should get rescheduled. I want you to transform this sentence and use the verb insist. Okay? So, if we're going to take that verb insist and change this sentence around, you would say I insist the game get rescheduled. I insist the game get rescheduled, subjunctive mood. I hope that was easy for you and that now it makes a little more sense. The next grammar mistake that that learners often make is just subject verb agreement when they are saying negative statements in the present simple and they're using the contraction with do and not. So, let's unpack this. What I'm talking about is when when people are speaking. That that's key because when people are having a conversation, they they just want to say things quickly, they want to say things naturally and when this happens, subject verb agreement can become a little confusing. So, when you want to say a negative statement, if the verb is not to be, then you're going to use the helping verb do. And you would need to conjugate that helping verb based on the subject. we don't, they don't. Simple enough.

Now, the problem that I think a lot of learners have is that when they're talking, when they're having a conversation, people make a mistake with that doesn't. I I hear this quite often when the subject is he, she, it, they want to say the negative and they say he don't, she don't. If I hear somebody make this mistake, I understand what they're saying, but it's just a matter of fluency. I I know that they're just we're we're having a conversation, perhaps it's moving a little fast. People just want to speak quickly, they want to speak naturally and they may conjugate this incorrectly. So, when we're talking about subject verb, I I think overwhelmingly this is where people have issues when they're stating that negative in the present simple. And the best way to correct this is just to get more exposure to the language, more reading, more listening, more practice.

And the more you do those three things, then it just going to come to you naturally. You're not going to have to stop and think about it. You would just be conjugating these correctly. He doesn't, she doesn't, it doesn't. So, now let's do a quick practice. It's always good to practice this. I am going to tell you a sentence, a positive sentence, and I just want you to change it and make it negative. So, I'll give you a moment to say the sentence and I want you to say the sentence out loud because we're talking about spoken English. Are you ready? Change that, make it negative, and you would say, he doesn't eat pizza every day. The next one is, people want to email with us.

reason why I think this can be confusing for many learners is because the only difference between the two adjectives are just those letters at the end. Bored, boring, interested, interesting, excited, exciting. So besides those letters, there is another key difference between these adjectives, and that is their meaning and usage. For example, ED adjectives describe a person's feeling, and it is a temporary feeling. ING adjectives describe a situation, a thing, or a person's characteristics. And it's that last part, a person's characteristics, that's where I think many learners confuse these adjectives, and they would say something like, I am boring. And they use the ING, and they're actually describing their characteristics. I am boring, when they really want to talk about the way they feel, and they should say, I am bored.

Now, this is important because I am bored and I am boring have very different meanings. If you're bored, it's just how you feel about some situation. You don't like it, it's a temporary feeling, you're bored. If you say, I am boring, well then that's describing your character. You're saying that you are a boring person, and if that's the case, then not many people are probably going to want to hang out with you and spend time with you, because they would they may also think you're boring. So keep that in mind when we're talking about ED adjectives, and you're talking about your feeling, and ING adjectives when you're talking about someone's characteristics. Okay, so so let's practice this. I'm going to give you a situation, and then ask you a couple of different questions.

adjective that I give you. I'm just going to give you one adjective, and you're going to to answer the question with either an ED adjective or ING. Let's do one as an example, so you know what I'm talking about. The situation that I'll give you is, I like to play soccer. All right, very simple. Now, here is the adjective that I want you to use, and I'll ask you a couple of questions, and just give me an answer using either ED or ING. So I would ask you, how do you feel? And you'd say, I'm excited to play soccer. And then I could ask you, what do you think about soccer?

I think soccer is exciting. Now you know what I want you to do, here is the next situation, and and I will give you a moment to answer each question. All right, the next situation is, she couldn't solve the problem. All right. Now my question would be, how's the problem? The problem is frustrating. How's she feeling? She feels frustrated. I hope you were able to answer those correctly with the ED and ING adjective. Here's the next situation, all right? English grammar drives me crazy. My question is, how do you feel about English grammar? English grammar is confusing. How do you feel? I feel confused. Now I know that some of this grammar may be confusing, but I hope that after watching this lesson, you are less confused. And if you are less confused and and not frustrated anymore, but actually excited because you learned something new, then I recommend that everyone hit that like button. And I'm just trying to get in a quick little review of everything we learned today. I know that we've covered a lot this past hour, and I hope that I've cleared up some confusion with these different grammar concepts. If you enjoyed this lesson and learned something new, you can let me know by hitting that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching, and I will see you next time. So long.

LESSON 178 OF 749

Advanced Idioms (C1-C2) to Build Your Vocabulary

you really need to be on the ball if you're going to follow this lesson because I am going to teach you different C1 and C2 idioms to help you build your vocabulary and improve your skills when having a casual conversation so let's begin with an idiom that I've already mentioned which is on the ball and to be on the ball is a C1 idiom and it means to be quick to understand and react to things so it's like you're you're just really ready and alert and often this idiom is going to follow the verb to be and you could use it in the affirmative and say look you really need to be on the ball for the important meeting tomorrow or you may hear people use it in the negative and say something like well he didn't sleep much last night so today he's just not on the ball I always try to be on the ball when I come up with these lessons I try to react and always give you the best information provide some Nuance so throughout the lesson I'm going to tell you the meaning of each idiom I'll talk a little bit about how it's used and we'll go over the pronunciation so that you can say them easily and naturally and with that in mind let's talk about the pronunciation right now when pronouncing this idiom Lincoln may occur and this is when you link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word and really we're talking about linking that consonant sound of the verb to be with the vowel sound in on so I could say she's on the ball I'm on the ball you're on the ball and it's like you can hear that consonant sound getting moved over to that preposition and if I were to say it a little faster she's on the ball I'm on the ball you're on the ball and if you really want to be on the ball then I would suggest you subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals so in this lesson we're looking at both C1 and C2 idioms these are Cambridge's highest levels of proficiency and we're going to start with C1 idioms and then move into some more challenging C2 idioms and look I'm confident that if you learn these idioms you're going to be able to pass any type of exam IELTS TOEFL it doesn't matter I really think you'll be able to pass any of these exams with flying colors and that is the next idiom that I want to teach you with flying colors this means to do something such as pass an exam successfully and often you're going to use this with the verb pass to pass with flying colors it's a common collocation both passed with flying colors and will be named finalists in our astronaut search to pass with flying colors yes you can also put the object in there right after the verb to pass something with flying colors well you passed the vetting process with flying colors well you pass the breathalyzer with flying colors now if someone were to test your pronunciation in speaking fluency I'm sure that you would like to pass with flying colors and there is a great app to help you do just that and I'm talking about Elsa Speak who is the sponsor of today's lesson this is a great app that will help you fine-tune your pronunciation so that the next time you're having a conversation you're really going to be on the ball and if you're unfamiliar with it let me show you how it works you just download the app create an account and there's so much that you can do let's say that you're preparing for the IELTS well then you can check out these study sets and we will go over here to well how about idioms for IELTS speaking and you can listen to the idiom it can't hold a candle to the other hotel and then practice saying it it can't hold a candle to the other hotel but I think one of the coolest features is to be able to practice words phrases and sentences that you want to learn so I could put in the sentence I'm going to pass with flying colors and then you can listen to it I'm going to pass with flying colors and again practice saying I'm going to pass with flying colors now let me show you what it looks like if I make a mistake and I mispronounce the idiom I'm going to pass with fleeing colors as you can see you get instant feedback which then allows you to try and make adjustments and right now when you click on the link below and download the Elsa Speak app you can get seven days of the pro membership free or you can use my discount to get 85 percent off a lifetime membership or 40 percent off a one year membership so check out the links and discounts in the description if you'd like to learn your mistakes and improve your pronunciation and before you know it you'll sound just like a native speaker let's get back to our idiom lesson and the next one that I have for you is to turn a blind eye this means to ignore something that you know is wrong and unfortunately I think we can all relate to this idiom you see something that you know is wrong but you don't say anything you don't do anything you turn a blind eye you may follow this idiom with the preposition too to turn a blind eye to something the teacher turned a blind eye to cheating during the quiz or maybe I know that Emmy stole the cookie but I decided to turn a blind eye to the situation and I just ignored it for pronunciation more linking may occur with the first two words and the last two words turn Blind Eye turn a blind eye just listen for it for years the government turned a blind eye to the recruitment of immigrants by the Meatpacking industry obviously I'm not going to turn a blind eye no matter how absurd I'd find all of this then we have the easy way out I really like this idiom who does not like the easy way out so this really refers to what is easiest in a difficult situation and often you may use this idiom with the verb take to take the easy way out have you ever taken the easy way out when it comes to these vocabulary lessons I try not to take the easy way out and just teach simple basic vocabulary I try to tackle some Advanced words and phrases and give you nuance and context and to give you some context as to how this idiom is used I have some news headlines for you LeBron James taking the easy way out on offense events are Regulators about to take the easy way out and declare CBD a drug African currencies are crashing and there's no easy way out for pronunciation we can connect those final two words way out and really what's going on here is intrusion and this is when you insert a slight consonant sound between two vowel sounds in order to connect them so way even though it's spelled w-a-y it's actually a vowel sound way it's a front vowel sound which means we would insert a slight yes sound in order to link it with the vowel sound in out way out the easy way out and we'll talk more about intrusion with our next idiom which is how on Earth what on Earth why on Earth this is a great idiom for conveying some emotion it's used when you're extremely surprised confused or angry about something on Earth did this happen why on Earth are you changing jobs what on Earth is that okay and notice the way that I'm saying it really capturing that emotion when pronouncing this idiom there are really two things that may occur but it really just depends on the question word that you're using who what where when why how but the two things are linking or intrusion let's start with linking because this is something that may or may not occur I told you that this idiom it can convey emotion and when that happens people may emphasize the individual words and possibly even speak slower in which case you're not really going to link the words together what on Earth are you doing how on Earth did you get that but if somebody is speaking casually and naturally they may say it a little faster and in that case we can link some of these words so what on Earth or where on Earth the other thing I'd like to point out is that what on Earth that final T in what because I'm from the United States I am going to pronounce it as a flap T it's going to sound like a soft D and this is because it comes between two vowel sounds what on Earth and we can link that flap t with the vowel sound and on what on Earth where on Earth just listen for it on Earth is going on here where on Earth did you get these where on Earth did they go be thinking what about when on Earth can we also link this phrase together yes you can but I want you to know that it is not commonly used you can see that right here using engram viewer this is a great resource to compare different words and phrases and see how frequently they are used and as you can see when on Earth is not commonly used if we're talking about the question words why or how well then intrusion is going to occur I told you it's when we insert a slight consonant sound between the two vowels so why on Earth that's a front vowel so we can insert a slight ya between the two vowels y on Earth and how this is a diphthong but it's a back vowel so we can insert a slight sound how one Earth why on Earth how on Earth it's very slight but just listen for it why on Earth would we have sex why on Earth would you turn around and give the contract to the Chinese how on Earth possible and then there's in light of or really in light of something and this means because of or as a result of and typically it's something that you learn about or become aware of and therefore A change is going to be made so I could say in light of recent events we canceled the match and this is a good collocation with this idiom in light of recent events you may be thinking in light of learning new vocabulary I'm going to hit that like button and I would really appreciate it and I know that you're not going to turn a blind eye to hitting that like button for pronunciation there are just two things that I want to point out linking and a flap T so the final T in light because it comes between two vowel sounds with the American accent I am going to pronounce it as a flap T and then I can link that soft D with the vowel sound found in in light of in light of say it with me in light of good in light of finishing the C1 idioms that I wanted to teach you let's move on to those C2 idioms which may not be as common but they're great to learn because they're really going to help you express your thoughts opinions and feelings like this next idiom which is at the end of your rope it means having no strength or patience left and it's a great way to emphasize that and of course you can replace that possessive pronoun with others my rope his rope her rope but I could say I'm at the end of my rope why on Earth have you not already hit the like button okay it's just the only example that I can think of but I promise I'm not going to mention it again for pronunciation just keep in mind that the article the we're actually going to use the stronger form the because it comes before a word that begins with a vowel sound typically the article comes before words that begin with a consonant and we say that weaker the but I'm sure you already knew that because you're on the ball we can also link the final consonant sound in end with the beginning vowel sound in of and uh at the end of your rope at the end of your rope I hate to do this but uh kind of at the end of my rope I need to borrow some money I was at the end of my Row the financial pressure was crazy you're not giving me a lot of Direction here I'm at the end of my row to The Bitter End this is a great idiom it means until something is finished and it's not always interchangeable with that meaning if I'm eating something I could say yeah I'm gonna eat my food until it is finished I wouldn't say I'm gonna eat my food until The Bitter End that just sounds really awkward so you're really going to use this idiom when talking about an outcome that may not always be the one that you want but you're going to keep going we may not meet the deadline but we're going to work to The Bitter End you're just gonna keep fighting and fight is a verb that's often used with this idiom it's a common collocation to fight to The Bitter End let me show you Southampton boss vows to fight to The Bitter End Youngsville police chief will fight until The Bitter End in proposed investigation nurses warn of more strike dates in January as they fight to The Bitter End for pronunciation there are a couple of weak words that I'd like to point out so the week two is going to sound like ta and the weak article the and then we can link the final consonant sound in bitter with the beginning vowel sound and end Bitter End so it's going to sound like to The Bitter End say it with me to The Bitter End to fight to The Bitter End excellent the next idiom is to get off on the right or wrong foot and this just means to make a successful or unsuccessful start in something now it's more common to use it in the negative and say that something got off on the wrong foot the team did not get along so the project got off on the wrong foot it's also commonly used when talking about relationships to people meet each other doesn't go well it's unsuccessful it got off on the wrong foot why are you being so nice to me all of a sudden I'm sorry we got off on the wrong foot we got up on the wrong foot here and I believe it's because we're just too damn similar you do absolutely let's pronounce this idiom and once again linking may occur you can see just how common this is in spoken English so we can link the phrase get off on just keep in mind that the final T and get once again I'm from the US so I will pronounce it as a flat T get off on get off on get off on the right foot get off on the wrong foot and then there's over the top this means too extreme and not suitable or exaggerated so something that's too extreme she was supposed to buy me a small present but her gift was way over the top and that is a great word to emphasize this idiom way over the top for something that may be exaggerated I could say it was supposed to be a friendly competition but his performance was a bit over the top that's another good word you can use with this idiom a bit over the top for pronunciation there's not really much to say about this idiom you're just going to say these three words one right after the other over the top it was our fault our acting was way over the top what are you talking about we were totally believable this is like secret agent stuff I think a safe room is a bit over the top but I thought with the two little ones you can never be too cautious what do you think of my new theater get over the top the next idiom at the crack of dawn this just means very early in the morning usually the time when the sun first appears so it's a great way to emphasize that you're up really early I could say this morning I got up at the crack of dawn or we'll have to get up at the crack of dawn for our flight I hate it when that happens or my grandfather has been up since the crack of dawn I tried to present this idiom with some different verb tenses when pronouncing it there are a couple of things going on there are some overlapping sounds and this is basically when your tongue is in the same position so at your tongue is going to come up and block the air with that stop T but then you're just going to release right into that voiced th in the at the at the and then we can link the final consonant sound and crack with the vowel sound in of crack of at the crack of dawn have you ever gotten up at the crack of dawn let me know down in the comments and then there's change of heart this is when you change your opinion or the way you feel about something basically like a reversal in your attitude and there are three things that I want to point out when it comes to this idiom number one overwhelmingly you will use this with the verb have to have a change of heart number two I want to stress that this idiom really involves feelings so you're not always going to use it anytime you just change your mind so if I told you look this morning I was going to make pancakes but then I had a change of heart and I decided to cook some eggs instead you're not really going to use this idiom in that context I don't have deep feelings when it comes to eggs or pancakes but if I were to say something like she was going to sell her grandmother's necklace but she had a sudden change of heart in this case she has stronger feelings when it comes to this necklace it's more meaningful and that's also a good collocation with this idiom a sudden change of heart number three notice that because you're talking about a change in your opinion or the way you feel most of the time people are going to use this in the past tense so you would say that someone had a change of heart or they had a sudden change of heart for pronunciation once again more linking we can link that first phrase had a as well as that second phrase change of had a change of heart and you could say it easily and naturally just like that someone had a change of heart now for a little review idioms are a useful part of casual conversation and I hope that learning these idioms will help your next conversation get off on the right foot and I know they can be difficult to learn and I don't want you to take the easy way out and avoid them I want you to work hard to learn them I want you to fight until The Bitter End and even if you're at the end of your rope and you're thinking to yourself how on Earth am I going to learn all these different idioms just take it one day at a time and try to learn and practice a little bit each and every day that way the next time you have a conversation you're really going to be on the ball when it comes to using these idioms now in light of the time and I'm not even wearing a watch but I just need to to start wrapping things up because tomorrow I have to get up at the crack of dawn so if you enjoyed the lesson I would appreciate it if you hit the okay I told you that I wouldn't mention it again so let's I'll just end it right now thank you so much for watching I will see you next time so long

Advanced Irregular Verbs You Need to Know

Watch the original lesson on YouTube

Today, I want to teach you some advanced irregular verbs that you need to know. That's coming up. Hey everyone, my name is Wes. This is Interactive English, which is all about helping you practice and improve your English skills. And today I have an advanced grammar lesson for you because I want to teach you 15 irregular verbs that I think will help you improve your overall English fluency.

Now these irregular verbs in particular are not as common as verbs like go or have, but they are very useful, especially in specific situations, which is why they are a bit more advanced. So I'm going to give you the verb in three different forms, the present, the past and the past participle. I will also tell you the meaning of the verb and then give you an example sentence so that you can see how it's used in context. The first verb that I have for you is arise, arose, arisen. That is the present, the past and the past participle. And this just means to become a parent, to notice something. So to give you an example, I could use it in the past and say new problems arose last week, which delayed the project.

If you were working on something and problems arose, then that may delay the work that you're doing. Problems arose. Then we have the verb bear, bore, born. Notice that with the past participle you may find it with the E or without the E. And this verb has, it has a few different meanings. It can mean to turn slightly in one direction. It can also mean to accept something that is unpleasant or to give birth or produce. So let me give you a few example sentences. I could say, uh, if I'm giving directions, you need to bear to the left or you need to bear to the right. This is a common way in which this verb is used in the present tense.

Or perhaps I could say he was the leader and bore the responsibility of his team. It was his team. So he bore the responsibility and had to accept maybe something unpleasant. And finally I could use it in the present. Perfect. And say the Apple trees have born plenty of fruit this season. They have produced plenty of fruit have born. So if you're thinking to yourself, well how can I not only learn these irregular verbs but remember them as well? Well the best way to do that is just to practice, practice and practice some more. And a great way to get quality practice is to participate in the Lingoda language sprint. And Lingoda was kind enough to sponsor today's lesson.

If you don't know about Lingoda, it is an online language school where you can take classes in English, German, Spanish, and French. And I have even studied at Lingoda. I have taken some Spanish classes there I am right there and I can tell you it was a great classroom experience. So let me tell you about Lingoda. language sprint because this is how you can make 2020 your year to become in English. You'll also have the opportunity to get a 100% refund of your money. So Lingoda has decided to extend the deadline from the last sprint. So this is your last call, your last opportunity to start out 2020 with a bunch of great English lessons and truly improve your skills. There are two options that you can choose from.

If you are motivated and serious about improving your English, then you can take the super sprint in which you will take one class each day for 90 days. And if you successfully complete the super sprint, you will be eligible for a 100% refund. Now if you would like a little more flexibility because of your schedule, then you can take the sprint in which you would take 15 classes a month. And if you successfully complete the sprint, then you'd be eligible for a 50% refund.

Now you must sign up by January 27th because both the super sprint and sprint will begin on January 29th for more information on costs, schedules, how to receive that refund, just click on the link in the description. But before you do that, Lingoda is offering you a 10 euro discount off your first month. If you use the voucher code LASTCALL10. So if you are determined to improve your English, then check out the lingo to sprint, click on the link in the description, use the voucher code LASTCALL10 and make 2020 your year to become fluent in English.

The next verb I have for you is behold, beheld, beheld. So the past and the past participle are the same. And this verb just means to see or observe something. And often I think you may hear it being used in the context of like showing somebody something that you want them to see. And you'd say, behold, um, behold my water bottle. Now you'd want to show somebody something a little more exciting than a water bottle, but you get the idea as to how somebody might use this verb, Behold...and then they would show somebody something that is important or maybe even a little surprising.

Notice how many times I say these verbs, I do that for a reason. So you will hear it again and again and again because this works, this will help you remember. Then we have deal, dealt, dealt, and this verb has a couple of different meanings. It can mean to distribute cards or that you have some kind of business in commercial trading and you are buying and selling things. I think most often you would use it in the context of a card game and playing cards and somebody would deal the cards. So I can give you an example sentence in which you could actually use all three forms of this verb.

I could say she deals with the cards in the present tense or in the past she dealt the cards. Or if I want to use the past participle, I could give you a sentence in the present perfect. She has dealt the cards. Then we have forsake for sook, forsaken and this verb means to abandon or to give up. For example, I think of usually some kind of promise or commitment was abandoned. People take vows so somebody could say he has forsaken his vows, he has abandoned his commitment, his promises. He has forsaken his vows.

Now the next two verbs cause a lot of confusion and I hope to clear up some of that confusion right now. So let's just start with lie, lay, lain. And this verb means to assume a resting position or to be kept in a specific state that that's where you are. So let, let me give you an example. I will use it in the past and I'd say, well, I didn't feel well. I lay in bed all day that this happened in the past. I assumed that resting position in my bed and I lay in bed. Don't confuse this with the other meaning of the verb, which is to say something that's not true.

That is actually a regular verb and ends in ED. But still this irregular verb lie lay lane is confused with a another irregular verb, which is lay, laid, laid. And this verb means to put something down or to prepare something. Lay, laid, laid. So let me give you an example and we'll, we'll start with putting something down again, I can use one sentence and use all three forms. For example, I could say we lay the baby on the bed in the present tense or in the past we laid the baby on the bed or using the past participle. We have laid the baby on the bed. We have put the baby down.

Then to give you an example with its other meaning to prepare something, I think, ah, you may hear somebody say, we've already laid the groundwork for this project, laid the groundwork they have prepared for the start of this project to lay the groundwork. So please don't confuse these verbs. Lie, which is to assume a resting position, lie in bed or lay, which is to put something down. I'm gonna lay, I'm gonna lay my head down on the pillow. Then we have mean, meant, meant. And this I think is actually a very common verb, but the meaning can be a little challenging. And what this bird means is due to intend to refer to something often.

I think it's used when we'll talking about questions. Well what does this mean? I might ask students will, what does this word mean? Or if I want to use it in the past and say, well that is not what I was referring to. You may hear somebody say, well no, no, that's not what I meant. That's not what I meant. I didn't want to refer to this thing. That's not what I meant. Then we have the verb overtake, overtook, overtaken, and this verb means to come from behind and move in front of. Often I think you would hear this verb used in the context of driving because cars pass each other all the time and you might want to overtake a car that is in front of you. I can give you an example and say, well, we overtook the bus because it was driving so slow.

So we came from behind and went in front of the bus. We overtook the bus. Then we have the verb rise, rose, risen. This verb has a couple of different meanings. The first one is to move from a lower position to a higher position and the next meaning is just to get up. So let's start with the first meaning and I'll give you an example and I could give you a simple sentence and use all three forms. I could say, well the sun rises or in the past, the sun rose or using the past participle, the sun has risen. And if I want to say get up, I often think of the expression rise and shine. And somebody would say this, just telling somebody else to get up. It's time to start your day. Rise and shine.

Next is the verb swear, swore, sworn. And this verb means that you are making a promise to do something. Swear, swore, sworn. And let me give you another example in which you could use all three forms in this one sentence. I could say he swears to tell the truth or in the past he swore to tell the truth or he has sworn to tell the truth. Often I think it's used in, in that context of you're, you're making a promise in which you are going to tell the truth. I think it's also used as a question and somebody would just ask, you know, do you swear? Do you promise? Or they might say, do you swear on something that is important?

Which in that case it's kind of an expression, which means, well, you really have to be serious about this promise to swear on something. Then we have shake, shook, shaken, and this verb means to move something up and down from side to side or even to tremble. And I could use it and give you an example and just say, you know, when we met, we shook hands, I often think of this verb being used, talking about introductions and people shaking hands. Or to give you an example about trembling, I think, well in that case I think somebody is very cold. And not only that, but I think it would often be used in the continuous tense. So I could say, well, you know, last night was very cold and I was shaking, I was shaking as I lay in bed.

Next is weep, wept, wept. And this verb means just well to cry or to shed tears. And often I think it would be used in a context that is a little more serious, a little more severe in which you would say that you wept. You were crying a lot. For example, uh, I could say that after the breakup, he wept for days. He was so sad, he wept for days. Then we have withdraw, withdrew, withdrawn. And this verb means to remove something or to take something back. So when I think of this verb, I think it's often used in the context of money and you could say, well, she has withdrawn all her money from the bank account.

She has removed it from her account. Or maybe you want to apply for a job and then you decide that you don't want it. And I can give you an example and use all three forms and say, I withdraw my name from consideration or I withdrew my name from consideration, or I have withdrawn my name from consideration. So there you have it. Those are 15 advanced irregular verbs that I think you need to know because these verbs are more specific. They allow us to give more information when we find ourselves in certain situations. I hope that you can now go out and use these verbs and practice them and I hope you learn some new ones as well. And if you did, please hit that like button down below.

Thanks so much for watching and I'll see you next time.

LESSON 180 OF 749

Advanced Listening & Speaking Activity | Practice English on Your Own

How are your listening skills? Do you feel like you could use some practice? Because if you do, I have a really really really really really awesome, really fun listening practice. It's coming up. What we're going to do is I have prepared two texts for you today, and I am going to read these texts out loud. They're not long texts. They're short, but they have a lot of detail. So I'm going to read them twice, and you have to listen for all the details. So this is an exercise where you have to really listen and pay attention. And then say it back. And when you do, I'm going to give you some clues that will help you to remember.

Now, keep in mind that the point of this exercise is to improve your listening, but also your speaking. So you really really really have to speak in full sentences. This will really help your fluency. Are you with me? Are you ready? Are you brave enough? Ok, so I brought Wes for moral support. He's going to do the exercise with with you guys. I'm a little nervous. Are you sure? Can you handle this? I'm a little nervous put my listening skills on display like this. Yeah Are you guys excited to see how he does? To see how much I forget? I'm going to read the text twice and then you're going to have to repeat what I say.

But I will give you some clues to help you. Okay? Good, good. Why are your eyes closed? Hmm? I'm concentrating. Ok, that was the first time. So do you think you'll remember some of these details? I'm going to read it again. Okay, so you guys also have to remember. This is very important. You have to pay attention to the details. I'll say it again So I feel like Wes is trying to cheat, so I'm just I'm just going to cover this. Okay, stop. Got it? I kind of tuned out for a little bit (LOL) Did you guys get it? Oh my god, how did you tune out? Should I read it again?

It's okay it's okay, no no no we're gonna go for it. Did you fall asleep or something? It wasn't a very exciting story, but... What? It's super exciting! It's OK, it's good for listening practice Okay, so now I'm going to give you some clues Okay, so you have to repeat this story with as many details as you can and you have to speak in full sentences And use the clues I'm giving you right here on the screen

Now what I need you to do is pause the video. Okay? Pause it and say the story with the clues you see. And then you can play it, and then you'll hear Wes say it. So don't cheat. Say it first, and then we'll listen to Wes say it. Please Okay, are you guys ready? Hopefully you should have used those clues and should remember at least 50% of the story, I hope, and

Let's see how Wes does. Are you ready Wes? You think you remember? I will find out. Okay, so I'm going to show him the same clues I'm showing you guys. I'm not showing him the story. Okay, let's see how much he remembers Let's laugh at him. Okay, so there's a guy named Steve who... He is 35 years old. He lives in California He works at a paper company in a small office with 12 other people He goes to lunch and Listens to jazz, or bachata, merengue or something I don't think that was in the lesson. He goes home later after work to see his wife, Maria and they like to cook Spanish food together, and then they go walk their dog, Snowball Yeah, that's pretty good!... except for the bachata & merengue.

I am pretty sure they listen to what jazz and something. Classical music. Yeah, so some things that you missed I think Is that he was a manager at a paper company. He likes jazz and classical music. and bachata. There's no bachata in here. Just jazz and classical music. So definitely not bachata or merengue, but you got it. Bachata is much better than classical music. So hopefully you guys were able to repeat these, I think was did pretty well.

Let's do another! Let's do another. I'm ready for another! Are you ready for another? Ok, so same as last time. I'm going to read a text two times, and you have to be able to repeat with as many details as possible. Pause the video, repeat, and then we'll make Wes do it and see how he does. Are you sleeping? No, no, I'm very focused right now. Where do you get these stories? I wrote it. I'm trying to picture everything as it's going on. Obviously I wrote about the cats. It's obviously my work. Okay, one more time. Why are you laughing? Stop laughing at my story! Okay, so I don't know why Wes is laughing, But if you if you guys were listening right now what I need you to do is to pause the video, look at my clues and try to say as many details as you remember, but please don't forget to speak in full sentences.

She is nine years old. She lives in Boston and goes to a bilingual school. Her favorite subject is art because she likes to draw pictures, and she draws a picture of these two cats, Socks and Whiskers. Socks and Mustache. So socks is a black cat with white paws, Mustache is brown and black with funny whiskers Millie Because this is a little out of order... The subjects that she likes to study history as well History and science, but she doesn't like math and in the future she wants to be a marine biologist. No, that's not what you remember. She wants to be a bachata singer? Again with the bachata! No! A vet!

You did really well. I think you got all of them right except you didn't mention what kind of school it was. It was it was a bilingual school. Yeah, but you didn't mention the languages English and French. You did really well. How did you guys do? Where'd you come up with Millie? Why Millie? There was a cartoon...sounds like an older name. I like the name Milly. Also there was a teleovela I used to watch. And her name was Mili, from Milagros. Okay, so this was our listening activity. I hope you enjoyed it. I hope you did well like Wes did here. He did really well, right? We're proud of him. We're proud of Wes. Well, it is in English so...

So if you guys actually did the speaking activity I want you to write the word speaking in the comments. Let us know if you were talking. Yeah, we need to know. I hope so. If you enjoyed this lesson, please give us a thumbs up! That's it for today, that's all I got. We'll see you next time! Bye!

LESSON 181 OF 749

Advanced Listening & Speaking Practice | Transportation

Welcome to today's lesson, which is all about describing nouns. Today we're going to describe some transportation nouns. This activity will help improve your listening and speaking skills. These nouns are more or less at an advanced level. However, we'd encourage all learners to participate. And who knows: perhaps you'll learn some new vocabulary words! For this activity, Ioana will describe six nouns to you. Each of these nouns is about transportation. You will have ten seconds to guess the answer. Remember, this activity is to improve your listening and speaking skills. I know you're listening, but you need to speak. Before we start, let's see an example. Ioana will describe a word to me, and I will guess the answer. Here's the word: Are you ready for this? It's a tough one.

I was born ready. Ok... here we go! This is a type of boat, like a rowing boat. It's long and narrow. You see these on very calm waters, mostly canals. People will sit in this boat, and traditionally someone will stand behind them and paddle. Venice has a lot of them. I'm pretty sure it's a kayak. There are no kayaks in Venice! It's a gondola, obviously! Oh, well they're kind of the same thing... No they're not. This is a gondola, and this is a kayak. Very different. I was about to say gondola, but the time ran out. You believe me, don't you? You were not ready. Now that you know how the activity works, let's begin.

Ioana will choose a noun and describe it to you, and you will need to guess that noun. Remember to say your answers out loud. After we finish all six words, I'll go over the answers with you. Ready? Let's get the clock up there: This is a boat for very very very rich people, It's a really big boat, it has bedrooms, it has a kitchen, many rooms for different functions, it's very luxurious. Do you know what this is? This is something people use in the snow. You go really fast, they're a lot of fun, they're a lot of fun, they're entertaining, usually only one person would ride it, but you could put two people on there.

This is like a motorcycle that you use on the snow... kind of This is a car for children. It's motorized. Kids drive it around the neighborhood, have contests, race each other. Some of them can go very fast. You can find these at amusement parks. This is like a small boat you find on the water, usually in rivers, it's inflatable, there's no motor so people have to paddle. Usually small groups of people can fit in this Can you guess what it is? This is a means of public transportation in many cities. It runs on tracks, but it's not a train. Sometimes there are cables running above it. It just runs within a city. What do you think this is?

This is something people use on the water, on the ocean or at lakes. People ride it for fun. They go very fast, it kind of skips over the water. It holds just one or two people. It's a little like a motorcycle on water. Hopefully you were able to give an answer to all of those and you got them right and not wrong like I did. Feel free to do the activity again if you'd like to try it one more time before I tell you the answers. You can just pause the video and go back to the start of the activity. But before I reveal the answers to you, I'll replay some of the key words that Ioana used to describe the nouns.

It's a really big boat. It has bedrooms, it has a kitchen. It's very luxurious. A big luxurious boat is a yacht. This is something people use in the snow. You go really fast. This is like a motorcycle that you use on the snow. Snowmobile is the answer that we were looking for. This is a car for children. It's motorized, kids drive it around the neighborhood. The answer is a go-kart. This is like a small boat. You find it on the water, usually in rivers. It's inflatable, there's no motor so people have to paddle. Raft is the answer we were looking for. This is a means of public transportation in many cities. It runs on tracks. Sometimes there are cables running above it.

This type of transportation is a tram. This is something people use on the water, on the ocean, or at lakes. People ride it for fun, they go very fast, it kind of skips over the water. The answer is a jetski. That was easy, right? But now we're gonna switch roles and it's your turn. I'll show you two nouns, and you will describe them to Ioana and she will guess the nouns that you are describing. Make sure you speak up, use complete sentences, be creative, and most importantly, have fun! Ready? Here's your first word: I know that! That's a hot air balloon! Ready for the second word? Here it is! Oh, that's a sled!

Great job today! We hope you enjoyed this activity and if you did, give us a like down below. We also hope it wasn't too difficult, but you can let us know which ones you had trouble with in the comments below. And finally, remember that sharing is caring. If you like the activity, please share it with your friends, your classmates, anyone you know who is trying to learn English. We'll see you next time!

LESSON 182 OF 749

Advanced Phrasal Verbs Natives Use That Textbooks DON'T Teach

I am going to challenge you with some super advanced phrasal verbs to help you supercharge your vocabulary. So, this is this is a way to explore new words. Think about the situation in which you're going to use these phrasal verbs because they are very specific. They're not ones that you're going to just casually use every single day when you walk out the door, but they are going to help you, especially if you want to develop your overall speaking fluency. And if that is something that you're interested in doing, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way, I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. So, let's just go ahead and jump into it with the first one right here.

Uh, so I'm giving you the first letter of the main verb followed by the particle. So just try to think about the phrasal verb that best completes this sentence. The government announced that it would gradually mout the use of cold powered plants. The government announced that it would gradually out the use of coal powered plants. So you see that the main verb it starts with the letter P. Which phrasal verb am I referring to? M out. I want you to write your answers in the chat in the comments. I just want to hear from you. I love it when people participate. After all, this is interactive English. The government announced that it would gradually out the use of coal powered plants. So this is something that I think many countries around the world are starting to do. They are gradually going to use coal powered plants or try to less and less and in that case they are going to phase out the use of cold power plants. You guys nailed that. Uh great job. It the meaning of to phase out is to gradually stop using or producing something. A lot of times you may end up using it with that adverb gradually to gradually phase something out. So it's not like you're stopping completely. You're just going to do less and less over time until yeah, you're just not doing it anymore. So I want to give you some more examples. And in this case, I have some news headlines. It's another way of trying to, you know, put it into context, give you a better understanding as to how this phrasal verb is used. So, here are just some recent news headlines using this phrasal verbs. Uh, swastikas on some Finland Air Force flags to be phased out. So, over time, it's just going to go away. The next one, Florida will phase out certificates of completion for students with disabilities. So, they have these certificates and then they're going to phase them out. And then finally, Disney announces plans to phase out standalone Hulu app. So, in all of these instances, they're going to gradually reduce the use of this until it's just no longer there. And often I think you will may hear this more in a business context because they have something's going on, some activity, and you just want to phase it out over time. I do want to mention if you are interested in getting and accessing these lesson notes that you see right next to me here, click on the link in the description. Join my email community and you can have access to these notes so that you can remember these phrasal verbs if you are already a part of the community. Check your inbox. I have sent them to you already. The next one. Oh no.

Okay, let's pretend. Let's pretend that you didn't see that. So I expect many correct answers. After a few hours, the effects of the drug were starting to m off. I I I I anticipate there are going to be many correct answers. Uh but think about this situation. Even if you saw uh the the the previous slide, think about the context uh as to what's being said in the sentence. After a few hours, the effects of the drug were starting to what? And in this case, obviously over time, it's going to weaken. So, what phrasal verb has that same meaning? If something weakens, it's starting to m off. Of course, the main verb starts with uh a w. And I'm seeing many correct answers.

Great job, uh, Laman. Well, Taya, Julia, perfect. Some give some shout outs to wear off. So, I know this already slipped in there, but if you say that something wears off, the effectiveness diminishes over time. So, it's just not as intense. And this is a perfect example. thinking you take some type of uh drug, medication, painkiller, over time it's going to wear off and it's just not going to have the same intensity and something wears off. So, this is a common context when talking about medications that you could use this phrasal verb. Uh, and there are some others as well. I want to uh I couldn't help myself. This is a this is just a a funny little meme using this phrasal verb. Botox injections begin to wear off. And you can see that uh little dog right there. Uh it's it's certainly wearing off uh in that case. And you can see all those wrinkles right there. But I again it's good to have a little fun and uh enjoy these English lessons.

you have heard before. If you watch movies or TV shows in English regularly, I'm certain that you've probably heard this at one point or another. And you're going to in this case the I don't know not not suss out it's a it's a good guess. Uh, in this case, spell out. To spell something out is to explain something in a very clear way. The prosecutor had to spell out the charges against the suspect in court.

Now, think about the the the meaning to spell something out. The literal meaning would be to well give you the spelling. If you don't know a word and you say, "Well, wait. I'm trying to write this word. I don't know it." and I say, "Oh, I can I can spell it out for you." And in that case, I'm giving you the individual letters and explaining it to you in a clear way. Now, more informally, you can use this with this meaning right here. You're explaining something or trying to explain something in a clear way. There are different contexts in which you could use it and I wanted to share that with you right here. The first one that comes to my mind, if you are frustrated with someone because they don't understand something, you might say, "Oh, do I have to spell it out for you?" So maybe I'm trying to share something with you and I'm giving you a hint, like I don't want to say it out loud and I just want you to know what I'm talking about. I'm like, "Hey, you know, leave what's going on." And maybe you're just like, "Wait, I don't I don't understand. Okay, do I have to spell it out for you? Do I have to explain it clearly? This is a question. This is the one I'm thinking of. If you watch a lot of movies, TV shows, you you may hear somebody use that statement. Or they might say, "Look, let me spell it out for you. Let me explain it to you clearly in a professional context such as the one uh well, not the one that was more legal, but professional like the contract spells out the responsibility of both parties and it explains it clearly." Or the teacher spelled out the grading criteria at the beginning of the semester and again, they explain it clearly.

they spell it out. And then finally, in a legal context, like the example, the law spells out the penalties for tax invasion or the agreement spells out the terms of payment. So there are different situations that that you can use this phrasal verb in. All the meaning is the same with all of them. You are just explaining something in detail in a clear way to spell something out. How about this one? What do you think? her students. This is I don't know if you can see it. It's a three-word phrasal verb. M down to. So that is the three-word phrasal verb. And I tried to highlight it in like that little yellow color right there. She was a gifted teacher who never Okay, this is saying that they she never did this thing which is not a good thing down to her students. What phrasal verb, what three-word phrasal verb would accurately fit this situation? So, we're saying that the the teacher is gifted. All right, this is a good thing. But then they would never do this other thing which is not good. It's bad to down to someone. So, the correct answer because the the first verb starts with a t. I feel like I'm getting some different responses. So, I I don't think this one's new, but I feel like once I I tell you the answer, probably you're going to um remember hearing about this uh at one point or another. To talk down to someone. So, if you're talking down to someone, you're just speaking to them in a bit of a condescending way that like it's just not very nice. It's pretty rude and you're talking down to someone. Often you may hear people use this in a context where the like a a hierarchy where someone is the authority and they are talking down to someone who is maybe a subordinate. So think about the example. The teacher is the leader of the classroom and they talk down to the students. If they talk down to the students, then that's that's not good. They would be speaking in a condescending way. Or maybe you might say you don't like your boss because he or she talks down to you and they speak to you in a condescending way. So a lot of times when you come across this phrasal verb, it's like a person in authority may talk down to a subordinate. Now, that's not always the case. It is negative as well. Just trying to add a little bit of uh nuance to that.

So, here is the next question that I have for you. After months of negotiations, the two companies finally managed to m out an agreement to m something out. So there were a lot of negotiations and then eventually you get to this point where there is an agreement. So you could use this phrasal verb to basically I I could say emphasize the fact that you reached an agreement. Of course, I could take out the phrasal verb and just use the verb reach.

Finally, the company the finally uh the two companies managed to reach an agreement. That's perfect. That's fine. And that's also commonly used. But if I want to emphasize the fact that there was a lot of work and effort that went into this and trying to figure out and um work out an agreement, what what word could we use? It begins with an H. Uh see some different uh responses in there. Um do it nailed it. Hammer out. To hammer out it just means to work out details through discussion. You're going to hammer something out. A lot of times it is used when talking about some type of agreement that you you need to work with some other person on a project or if it's a contract or some other negotiation and you're going to hammer out the details and you're going to talk about it, discuss it and then figure things out. So, after months of negotiations, the two companies finally managed to hammer out an agreement. So, if that was new for you, if any of these are new, let me know.

Well, the LA Well, I'm going to switch it up a little bit. I now realize Well, let me read this real quickly. She is going to m out of the competition because of her injury. There are a lot of particles. A lot of these prepositions are without hammer out. Uh I've already gone through uh several to phase out. So in this case, this is another one to out starts with a B and think about the situation, what what's going on and kind of hopefully maybe lead you to the correct response as to well what the meaning is. So there's a competition of course this person she's injured. She's not going to be able to participate. So in that case she's going to out. It's like you are in in this specific example withdrawing withdrawing from well this competition in this case. So she is going to m out of the competition. Uh and I see some different answers uh which tells me maybe again this is going to be a new phrasal verb for you which is perfect. So it's not bailout. Uh that's not what we're looking for. Um, you could say you could say back out as far as not compete. I'm going to I'm going to back out. I'm not going to do it. But that's not the one I'm looking for. I I'd say this is one is a little more I I think common in this context. It is a little more advanced. Uh, so back out is not the one that I'm looking for even though that's a that's a good good guess. So when talking about a competition or some activity event that you are supposed to participate in, you are supposed to be a part of it and then for some reason you you can't do it, you are going to bow out of the competition or bow out of well whatever whatever it may be that you're whatever activity or role you're going to withdraw from or retire from and you are going to bow out. She's going to bow out of the competition because of her injury. Now, some of you, you said back out, that that would work. To be honest, that would work in this context as well. But this is the phrasal verb that I wanted you to be familiar with. It is more advanced. If you are supposed to do something, you say, "Look, I'm not going to be able to do it anymore. I'm going to have to bow out." All right? Can't do it. I got to bow out. So, uh, yeah, hopefully it was new.

There was some some good guesses. Bail out. No, not that. Not that one. Um, bow out. Excellent. What do you think? I I'm I'm switching it up now. I still want you to try to write the full phrasal verb in there. And now I'm I'm not giving you the main verb or the particle, but I'm giving you the meaning down below. So, this some of these may be a little easier, others may be uh a bit more challenging. All right. Public displays of affection are often in conservative cultures. So, what do you think? It means to disapprove of something or consider it bad or wrong. All right. What do you think? Um, all right. Well, Cinderella, thank you so much for the super chat.

Uh, I love it. Love that you're learning new things. I hope that the rest of you are. Uh, always great to see uh so many members in here as well. Pete's Coffee. Uh, I miss Pete's coffee. Uh, back in the Bay Area, Lai, good to see you. Um, so this is a phrasal verb that I I'm going to say that you have definitely heard it before. I don't know if you actively use it and you might think about using it if you're in a conversation, but I'm pretty sure you've probably heard it before or maybe you were reading something and you come you came across this phrasal verb. So public display displays of affection PDA are often inconservative cultures. So it's you're talking about disapproving of something.

Uh I think we got some uh all right correct answers. So if if you disapprove of something or if you say something like ah I don't really approve of this thing then you could say that it is frowned upon. To frown upon something is to disapprove of it. So it's not saying that it is illegal. You're not saying that oh you cannot do it. You're just saying that oh you know it's frowned upon. It'd be like if um so I'll just read the sentence. Public displays of affection are often frowned upon in conservative cultures. Let's say that you and I work together and I'm new and I say look is it okay? Do people care if I show up maybe five or 10 minutes late?

And that you tell me, well, you're not going to get fired, but it's important to be punctual. And if you if people, you know, it's frowned upon for, you know, people to show up late to work, it's frowned upon. So, it's not against the rules or against the laws, but people in general or in the other example I gave you, your boss or other colleagues, they may disapprove of it. And then you could say that this thing something is frowned upon. All right? Hopefully, uh I I don't know. I I told you I thought maybe you probably uh heard of that before. Even if you don't actively use it, if it's new, then that's great. Uh because I think it is something that is useful when you want to be a little more descriptive. Now I I thought this was funny even though uh it's maybe just my my warp sense of humor. Uh you I use sarcasm at work because slapping the out of someone is frowned upon by management. All right. They don't want people to slap other colleagues. So this person says they use sarcasm. It's just a joke. Uh, and but uh, I thought it was a good another good example using using the phrasal verb frowned upon. And I I would say that I think often it's used that somebody asks you something, hey, is this okay? And you say, well, you know, you should know that this is frowned upon that people disapprove of this thing. It is frowned upon. What do you think? He his emotions, which is not good for his mental health. We're talking about uh to repress or conceal feelings over time. This is a little more challenging. I I think it's a little more challenging, but uh I don't want to give it away. He m his emotions. All right. You repress them.

You conceal them. And it really it keeps things in there. And yeah, it's not good for people. But I think a lot of people do that, myself included, instead of I'm not always able to talk to someone or I have that ability. And in that case, I just things. I was about to say the particle, but I don't want to. Uh I I feel like maybe you guys are familiar with this one. Great job. Uh Talal, Kristoff, uh Dawit, Julia talking about bottling something up. To bottle up means to repress or conceal feelings. Think about the meaning because I said these are specific because when you you want to use bottle up, you really are talking about feelings and emotions and those are the things that you're you're trying to repress and you don't want to think about it and it's it can be difficult. I think this is a phrasal verb that we can all relate to. And I I imagine I told you I've done this before. I imagine you have as well. And there was a time when you just wanted to repress some of these feelings and you bottled them up. He bottles up his emotions, which is not good for his mental health. All right. As always, wow, Cinderella, thank you. Thank you so much. Uh hope again hopefully some of these are new. Uh, and remember if you guys you want these lesson notes, check out the link down in the description. Join the community. But again, if you're already a part of it, uh, I've sent them to you. He started as a mechanic but has into engine repair uh, for boats. So the phrasal verb that we're referring to, the meaning is to extend or expand one's activities or interest in a new direction. And that's kind of key, something com, you know, it's completely new. You're trying something new. You're going in a new direction. What is it that you are then doing? So for context, he's started as a mechanic, but now there's a new direction fixing engine uh engines on boats. All right, it's a little it's a little different than maybe working on cars. So this per it's not like completely different, but it is still something new. And you could say this person is doing what? I'll give you I'll go ahead and give you a hint since I haven't seen any correct answers. I mentioned that many of these phrasal verbs, I don't know why, it's just the way it happened that the particle is out. This one also is uh that so you have the main verb followed by out. He started as a mechanic but has m out into engine repair for boats. Any guesses?

All right, so maybe uh maybe we have a a new phrasal verb for most of you, for just about everyone. And I think whenever you want to try new things, like if this is your first time here, I think it's great. I want you to participate. And I think it's always good to branch out and try new things. I feel like you could think about the meaning of this phrasal verb in relation to a tree. You have tree branches. They spread out. They go into different directions. And I I think that may be a good association with this phrasal verb. And you're trying to branch out. Let's look at the next one.

He made a commitment to the team, but he didn't with his responsibilities. So, the meaning is to continue an action or task to its conclusion. I do think this is a little trickier. This is a little more challenging, you you may be familiar with it, but I feel like I'm probably not giving you the best example sentence to really think, oh, okay, this this is the answer. He made a commitment to the team, but he did not with his responsibilities. So, in this case, I'm saying he did not continue, you know, with this commitment or the promise to its conclusion. And therefore you could say he did not with his responsibilities.

So there may be I'm trying to think I see not carry on not I wouldn't say stick with again the answer I think would be a a phrasal verb that would be most accur that would most accurately fit this context. So the answer well done Cinderella talking follow through. To follow through is to continue an action to its conclusion. One thing I want to point out with follow through, you may often follow it with the preposition on or with. In this case, I I don't think it really matters. It's really interchangeable. So in in my first example, I had used with. He didn't follow through with his responsibilities. But down here, if I wanted to use on, I I think it's okay as well. He made a commitment to the team, but he didn't follow through on his responsibilities. So to follow through means to continue something until its conclusion. You may follow it with on or with. Or you you don't have to. It really depends on the situation. But to give you a little more context when you're thinking about, okay, on or with, does it really matter? Is one more commonly used than another? A great resource that I always I think I tend to point out with some of these is using Engram viewer. If you have uh a similar phrase, two different phrases that are similar or completely different and you just want to know which one is more often used, then you could put them in there and it it graphs it out is slightly is used uh you know just slightly more often than to follow through with. But in general, you could use either to follow through on, to follow through with. Just something to to keep in mind.

So, I I apologize. Hopefully, it it won't go out again. So, she can m the names of all 50 states in alphabetical order. the phrasal verb that we're looking for. If you can say, perform, produce something easily, effortlessly, effortlessly to rattle off to rattle off something and you just do it quickly, easily. And it it really is like there's some it's like there's some some information that you're trying to convey or share and you could say that you can rattle off this information or rattle off these names. So if I this is actually when I was younger I could uh I I don't know I I'm not going to do the whole thing. I can't. But you you're familiar with uh melodic learning, using a melody to learn something. It really helps you remember it. And when I was a kid, one of the teachers, they they did this same thing with the names in alphabetical order. It goes something like Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana. All right, that's all. I'm not going to I'm not going to make you suffer through more uh of my singing, but that that would be an example of using the song to rattle off the names of these states. What do you think? Here's another one. He m to his friend and followed her around the party. This is a this is one is a bit more challenging to follow someone and try to maybe talk to them or you're trying to get their attention. Especially when this other person may maybe they just want to be alone or they just don't want to be near or or close to you and you're just trying to follow them around. Hey. Hey.

And it's almost like you were doing something to this person. He m to his friend and followed her around the party. What do you think? Again, I apologize for my singing, but I just wanted to give you an example of rattling off some of those uh US states in alphabetical order. So, I I I tried to give you that maybe I don't know if this was much of a hint when you're following someone around and you're really trying to stay close. So in this context, if you're following someone, you're trying to get their attention, you could say that you are latching on to onto this person. So he latched on to his friend and followed her around the party. You're following someone. You just want the their attention. And this other person, it, you know, they maybe they don't want to be they want to be alone, but you may latch on to this person. This is actually from Longman. I try to vary up some of these sources from time to time, but I wanted to let you know there are different uh context in which you can use this phrasal verb. So, to latch on to somebody or something. Uh you could use it in the context of becoming very interested in something. If you can't see this, I'll I'll read the example sentences to you. The first one like don't just latch on to the latest management fads. So, like don't latch on to some trend and you're just really interested in it. someone um trying to uh keep talking to them, get their attention. This was the one that I shared with you as far as latching on to someone at the party and you're just following them around. And then the third one is more the the literal meaning. I think one that most people think of when you think of the phrasal verb to latch on to something, holding something tightly with your hand or mouth, of course, like the the baby latching onto its mother's breast. And you could use this phrasal verb in those different context. So, these are the 12 phrasal verbs that we went through today. Hopefully, some of them are new. I also hope that you were familiar with several of them already perhaps passively and then over time the more you get exposure to them practice using them like you were today it just helps you make it a part of your active vocabulary so that next time you're in a conversation you could use some of these if you're doing some activity you say okay well we're not going to keep doing it forever we're going to phase it out we're going to gradually phase it out or you want to talk about some medication that's starting to wear off or you're going to hammer out an agreement with someone or maybe you're not going to be able to compete in a competition and you say, "Look, I got to I got to I'm going to have to bow out." So, there are specific situations in which you can use them, which is why I say they are definitely a little more advanced.

super useful phrasal verbs and learned something new, let me know by hitting that like button. Uh, you could also let me know how you did on the quiz in the comments.

LESSON 183 OF 749

Advanced Phrasal Verbs for Everyday Conversation

I want to teach you many different phrasal verbs. Not only that, I want to teach you some super advanced phrasal verbs that you can use in everyday conversation, but these are phrases that are really going to help you be more descriptive. And if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications, then I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals. And in this case, I want to help you build your vocabulary. And I I know I I always make this guarantee, but I promise by the end of the lesson, you will learn something new. I I definitely think one or two or three or more of these phrasal verbs will be new.

And if you would like to access these lesson notes, click on the link down below in the description, join our email community, and then you can download them. If you're already a part of the community, check your inbox. I have sent them to you. Of course, this is a quiz lesson. So, I would love it if you participate. Write your answers in the chat or in the comments. This is after all interactive English. So, let's begin with our first question. And for for this first set of questions, basically, I'm giving you the verb and then the particle is missing. So, it's going to get a little more challenging as we go through this. So in this case, just know that the first few questions, the particle is missing. Surprisingly, the team was able to eek a victory.

I've highlighted part of the phrasal verb. So the verb is to eek. So maybe this verb is new uh for you, which is great. And then we're going to follow that with what particle to eek. Surprisingly, the team was able to eek a victory. This is a again a phrasal verb that's a little more specific, a little more precise, but you will come across it from time to time and certainly it is advanced. Now, the correct answer is to eek out. Excellent. Great job, Lai. Surprisingly, the team was able to eek out a victory. This means to obtain or win something only with difficulty or great effort. So, in this case, you're talking about, well, to win, to ek out a victory. That is a common collocation.

But also to eek out, it makes me think you're able to obtain something when it comes to numbers. So, to give you some more context with this phrasal verb, I I have some news headlines. And let's just go ahead and look at them. Stocks ek out gains amid growing political noise. So, they are able to obtain gains. And again, talking about numbers, you're you're going to ek out gains. Or this next one, how Maduro could ek out another win. This headline is a little old. Venezuela just had their elections. It's being contested. But another example using eek out. Eek out a victory. Eek out a win. And then finally, smartphone market in India eek out mere 1% growth in Q2. Once again, we're talking about a number and there you're trying to ek out gains or eke out growth. Again, very more advanced phrasal verb, but one that you can still you may still come across. Here is the next question. I'd like to mullet before making a final decision. I like this phrasal verb because I do think it is a little more informal, which again relates to just that everyday conversation. I'd like to mul it before making a final decision. One thing I'll point out about this phrasal verb is that just in the example, you can see that there this is separable. We have the verb followed by it and then it's we're going to follow that with the the particle. I feel like this one's a little more common. You guys rocked it. Yes, we're talking about to mul it over. I'd like to mull it over before making a final decision. To think carefully about something for a long time. I think often you might hear this phrasal verb being used like you somebody says they want to think about it and you're like, "Look, take your time. Just mull it over. Don't worry about it. Mull it over. Give it some consideration. Excellent. Great job. Uh, everyone, Raphaela, Lai, um, great to see you, Angela. Perfect. All right. Good to see so many familiar familiar faces, familiar names, I should say. So, I thought I wanted to include this. I thought it's humorous in this case. It's a meme using this phrasal verb, but also it's a play on words. So uh it says I I mustache you I mustache you a question. So instead of must ask mustache I mustache you a question but I will give it I but I will give you time to mul it over. So mullet again at the back of the head you could see this guy has a mullet but we're using it as a play on words to mul it over to think about it. I thought it was humorous so I try to throw some of these uh some of these memes in here from time to time.

How about this one? I feel like this one is, if you've been following US politics, this phrasal verb has been used a lot in the last couple of weeks. There's so much anger in politics, people need to tone the rhetoric. We're going to follow that verb tone with which particle? There's so much anger in politics, which I feel like is in general is true. People need to tone the rhetoric. Again, this is a collocation to tone the rhetoric. You'll hear that these are words that are frequently used with this phrasal verb. And guys, rocking it. Perfect. To tone down. Great job. Um, Raphaela, Joanna, Tilla, I'm going to try to give some shout outs as we go through this, but it means to make something less forceful or offensive, to tone down the rhetoric, the way that people are talking about one another. I wanted to give you some more collocations with this phrasal verb. So, as we just mentioned, uh, to tone down the rhetoric, you could also use it in the context of, well, toning down the expectations or toning down your expectations or to tone down one's language to make it less offensive if somebody is using maybe a lot of profanity and like, hey, you need to tone down your language. You could also tone down your excitement. What do you think? Will you rehearse with me? I'd like to run my lines. I have to be careful when I'm reading these because I don't know. Generally, I just want to end up saying the phrasal verb and then give you the answer. But I want to give you a moment to think about which particle fits this sentence to well complete the phrasal verb. Will you rehearse with me? I'd like to run my lines. I think if you have ever watched something in well related to acting or theater or a play you would hear this phrasal verb let's run our lines or I need to run my lines and the missing particle you're going to run through your lines in this case will you rehearse with me I'd like to run through my lines which means to discuss repeat or read something quickly. It's like getting a a quick practice in before the show begins and you're going to run through your lines. Well done. Excellent. Uh saw some uh great answers answers in there, Sabina. Good to see you. Excellent. Uh Mukesh, perfect to run through. So once again, think about this in the context of acting theater and you're going to run through your lines. Again, another common collocation. I'll point some of these out as we go through the quiz. I'm I'm switching it up now, and this time I'm not giving you any part of the phrasal verb, but I'm giving you the meaning down below. This is going to be a little more challenging. However, I think these next few phrasal verbs are maybe a little more commonly used. So, hopefully you can you can come up with the answer. Think about this situation. Exams are coming up and I really need to what what phrasal verb completes this sentence. It the meaning of this phrasal verb is to get serious about your work. You're focusing diligently on the task at hand. I will say that this is a phrasal verb that I feel like parents would say to their children in high school and they say, "I want you to get serious. I want you to what? Exams are coming up. I really need you to do what?" or in this and I really need to like you're telling yourself I do see an answer in there and the correct response is buckle down. Keep in mind you're going to follow this buckle buckle down in this way. Buckle up would be more referring to sitting into a car and putting your seat belt on. Everybody buckle up. In this case buckle down means you just need to get serious about the work you're doing. Excellent Joanna.

Well played. So think about that as far as uh this context of studying and you need to get serious. A lot of times you're going to use this when talking about school education. You could use this when talking about work. Maybe you have a big project and you're telling a friend like, I really got to buckle down and focus on this project and just get it done. But most of the time I think you may use this or hear this being used in the context of education. What do you think about this next question? After returning from vacation, she opened the windows in order to m the room. The meaning of this phrasal verb is to expose something to fresh air often to improve the scent. What do you think? What is the missing phrasal verb?

I feel like this one probably based on the the situation, the example sentence I'm giving you, hopefully it makes it much easier in order to come up with the verb and the particle. After returning from vacation, she opened the windows in order to m the room. And I I really do think that if you come back from vacation, maybe it it smells a little musky and this might be one of the first things you do. You open the windows in order to what the correct answer is air out. You want to air out the room. You're exposing it to fresh air. You want to improve the scent, the smell, because like I said, if you're gone for a while, it may smell a little musky in there. I I want you to keep in mind that this phrasal verb, it does have multiple meanings. So to air out, like to air out the room, the air out the car, you're exposing it to fresh air. I've given you a couple of example sentences there. I'm trying to air out the car to get rid of the smell or we really need to air out the home or the house. It may also mean to discuss or address an issue openly. So, think about these example sentences. It's important to air out any grievances and you want to address these things or I think we should air out some of our concerns. So, when when it comes to phrasal verbs, many of them have multiple meanings. This is one of them. And I think that's another part of what makes phrasal verbs uh a bit more challenging. So, in this case, to air out has a couple of different meanings, but great job. If you're learning something new, I told you I think you'll learn something new. Or if you've already learned something new, you can let me know.

Hit that like button or hit some of those hearts, those smiley emojis as soon as I see them going and think, "Okay, this is good. Need to maybe do more phrasal verb lessons. have to over the weekend." Now, the meaning of this phrasal verb is to finish reading, eating, or dealing with something with with difficulty. I want to add to this a little more to make it a little easier. So, you would use this phrasal verb in the context of there's a lot of something and you're going to really just do it over a certain period of time and you're not really going to take a break. So in this case, you're you're doing it over the weekend and you're just going to boom, go ahead and do it and finish it. A lot of times it would be yeah involving eating uh reading or just dealing with something that is challenging. It is difficult. There are now that I'm saying there there again I feel like there are um some other phrasal verbs that you could use. So people said, "Oh, I'm going to go through it over the weekend." Yes, that would work. However, I think a key part is like the difficulty or I'm going to run through it over the weekend. I would still say that's acceptable. But if you want to add that aspect of saying this is going to be difficult, it's going to be challenging. It's not really something that I want to do, but I'm just going to, you know, put my head down and go ahead and do it. In that case, as I'm trying to add some more context to this, you could plow through it. I'm going to over the weekend or I'm going to run through it over the weekend. It that works. That I don't want to say that is incorrect because in some of these sentences, there are multiple phrases uh in this case multiple phrasal verbs that you could use. But in this specific context in which I want to imply that something is challenging, it's really difficult and I'm just want to finish it and get it done. I'm just going to plow through it.

I want to plow through it over the weekend. I want to give you a little more context because I think this is a is a trickier one. And I have some more news headlines for you. The first one, we uh we we used to publish Farmers Weekly. Now we help clients plow through data and there's a lot of it. It's challenging and they help their clients plow through, you know, uh, a lot of different a lot of data. How about this one? I thought I could plow through the pandemic without burning out. I was wrong. This is a a good example of it being used in context. You're trying to plow through this time period, which was the pandemic without burning out. And this person was wrong. I feel like many of us perhaps thought we could just plow through the pandemic without burning out.

And well, for me that was not the case. I also was not able to do it. And then finally down below, farmers across the state plow through the pain of an uncertain future. It's challenging. It's difficult. And you just want to get through it to the other side. What do you think? She was able to her 15 minutes of fame. This is a little more challenging. And perhaps this is a phrasal verb that once I show you maybe like okay yes I've heard of it but in this context it will be a little more difficult to guess. She was able to m her 15 minutes of fame.

Now the meaning of this phrasal verb is to take advantage of or exploit a situation. And when I say you're taking advantage of it, typically there's money involved and that is a little bit of a hint. There's uh a financial gain involved and that is that is one of the ways in which you are taking advantage of this situation or you are exploiting this situation. She was able to m her 15 minutes of fame. The next hint that I'll give you is that this is a three-word phrasal verb. So, a three-word phrasal verb which implies that there is some financial gain that has been made. What phrasal verb could you use to complete this sentence? I'll give you just a few seconds to think about it and then I'll tell you the answer because like I said, I think it's one that maybe you've heard of and once I show you the answer, you'll know it. But in this context, it can be a little more challenging to come up with the three-word phrasal verb cash in on. She was able to cash in on her 15 minutes of fame. So, if you're able to cash in on something, that's essentially what it means. You're taking advantage of a situation or exploiting a situation typically to have well some sort of financial gain. And that was a hint in terms of cash money. and you're able to cash in on, in this case, her 15 minutes of fame, which I wanted to point out is an idiom. So, if you're unfamiliar with this idiom, it refers to a brief period of celebrity or notoriety. So if something goes viral on Tik Tok or YouTube and this person is unknown and then suddenly everybody's talking about this person before they lose their per this period of uh when they're become a celebrity, you could refer to it as oh they're getting their 15 minutes of fame. And often if somebody has their 15 minutes of fame, you might want to cash in on it and take advantage of it. So, that's where I thought it was relevant with this uh idiom.

Now, I I'm switching it up again. This is also going to be perhaps a bit challenging. I'm not giving you the phrasal verb, but I'm giving you synonyms. These are words that don't that are not always interchangeable, but they have a similar meaning. You should add some more lights in order to m the place. and we're talking about to to beautify something, to accessorize, what what phrasal verb could you use that has a similar meaning? And yeah, you might use it in this context referring to uh a place like a room in your home. We don't really know the specific place, but you want to add more lights in order to m the place.

Actually, I say that's what I'm gonna go ahead and say. Well done, Sky. Spruce up is one that you could use. That would be correct. And but it's not the one that that's not the one I have, but it does have that's a this that's actually a a another phrasal verb that is a synonym and has a similar meaning. Um, uh, brighten up, I think, would also work. Uh but brighten up would specifically make me think of really colors and again but that would also work in this context. Again not the one that uh I'm thinking of. So even if some of these others are new like to spruce up to brighten up but the one that I was uh going to teach you is to jazz up. If you want to jazz up the place you're making something more attractive and interesting. And again, some of those other phrasal verbs that people mentioned, brighten up, spruce up, they have a similar meaning as well. So, I think those would also work. The next one, again, we're getting we're learning a lot of different phrasal verbs. Well, actually, uh, because I thought maybe this is one that might be new for some of you, I wanted to give you some more example sentences, uh, just so you can see how it's used in context. He jazzed up the food with some seasoning. So, in this case, we talked about a place. You could jazz up, brighten up, spruce up. They're not always interchangeable. I could use jazz up when talking about food, like some seasoning. In this case, you wouldn't use brighten up because that's specifically talking about colors. And I don't even think I would use spruce up in this context. I would go with, yeah, you jazzed up the meal with some seasoning. I could also say Coca-Cola jazzed up its bottles with new designs.

I don't know if this is true. This is not a sponsored video, but just as an example. Or it's entirely up to you if you want to jazz up or tone down your look. I I wanted to use both of those phrasal verbs. You want to jazz up your look and make it more appealing. Or maybe you just want to tone it down a little bit and, you know, not have it be so, you know, exciting or out there. You could jazz up or tone down. Those are really art opposites. What do you think about this next one? I think we need to m some of the details before we make an offer. So, the missing phrasal verb has a similar meaning to discuss or agree on. I think we need to some of the details before we make an offer. What do you think?

I like appreciate that Jawad that I'm I I love it to hear if I am jazzing up your life with these live streams, with these lessons. Love it. So, in this case, we're talking about discussing something, you're trying to agree on it. I think we need to hash out some of the details before we make an offer. There are other phrasal verbs that you could use in context. Uh I see some people like to go through some of the details to go over th that would work as well, but I wanted to uh specifically point out hash out. This is probably a bit more advanced and more specific. When you're hashing out something, you are discussing it and it does really imply that you're trying to come up with some sort of a compromise.

That's agreement is important because the meaning of it is to talk about something uh with someone else in order to reach an agreement about it and you're trying to hash out some of the details. So there is a difference between going over some of the details which is more reviewing them. But if you want to hash out some of the details, it would imply that you're you're going to discuss it in order so in order to have agreement on the specifics before making an offer. What do you think about uh the next one right here? Oh, again I'd like to forgot that I had some of these little funny jokes in here. uh just for your entertainment. This is just uh something I found online. Glad we hashed it out with these uh two McDonald's hash browns right here saying, "Look, they made up.

They they solved their problems. They've come to an agreement and we've hashed things out." So you you might also use it if you're telling someone like, "Look, you need to discuss things and agree upon it. You need to hash things out or you need to hash it out." Again, if this is new, let me know. Hit that like button or some of those hearts. Then I can know like, yes, this is this is good. I say it's everyday conversation because again, I feel like some of these phrasal verbs are ones you might hear in movies, TV shows, more in general conversation. Uh even though you, as I shown you with some of these news headlines, you may come across them um when you're reading an article as well. What do you think about this next one? Government regulators are starting to artificial intelligence. They are directing their attention towards artificial intelligence or they're focusing on artificial intelligence.

Which phrasal verb best completes this? There are actually two that I would say are correct and would work. Both of them are three-word phrasal verbs. And that is a quick little hint that I'll give you before uh telling you the answer. And I already see a correct answer in the chat, which is to zero in on. Excellent. Uh well done, Julia Miranda. Nice. So if you are zeroing in on something, you are directing your attention towards a particular thing. In this case, government regulators. they're starting to zero in on artificial intelligence. We need to deal um with this situation and come up with some legislation. The other one that I was I said that you could use two and you could use zero in on or even hone in on. And I wanted to talk very quickly about these because zero in on is one that has multiple meanings to zero in on something. I believe I got this from uh McMillan dictionary and it has a few multiple meanings but the one the number three there where I put that check mark it says to focus one one's attention on something to hone in on has that same similar meaning to focus or concentrate on something. So in that context you could either use to zero in on or to hone in on. I know it's small and it's hard to see, but if you're talking about zeroing in on like to direct your um line of uh vision, you're you're looking at something or it also says to uh get incrementally closer to something like a physical location, zeroing in on something to keep in mind that even though these phrasal verbs, they have multiple meanings, in certain situations, they may overlap. And in this case, you you could use either one.

To zero in on or to hone in on. What do you think about this one? I was only teasing him when he suddenly m at me. The phrasal verb that's missing is to yell or to attack. They're not direct synonyms, but they are similar. Again, this is a I I feel like in this situation, you're being descriptive. You're describing something that happened suddenly and this person like yelled at you or you could say they at you and use this phrasal verb. Any guesses which verb and particle I could use that would fit this context? I was only teasing him when he suddenly lashed out at me. Well done, Alan, Joanna, Julia. It means to suddenly attack someone or something physically or criticize him, her, or it in an angry way and somebody is lashing out and they're lashing out at you.

I I again, this is another little fun um thing you could look at. I'm going to lash out irrationally at the next person to take something from my desk, use my phone, or ask me what I'm eating, and they're going to lash out irrationally. Here is a review of all the phrasal verbs. And I know I'm giving you a lot. It's difficult, especially if many of them are new. I I know it seems like uh Deborah talking about, you know, how you know, how can we learn these? What's the best way to do that? I I think it takes time, especially with phrasal verbs. I think reading is a great way to do that.

You come across them, and just learning them this way, watching video lessons, participating in these quiz lessons, trying to figure it out. The more exposure that you get to these phrasal verbs and trying to understand the meaning, you you're just going to start to remember them over time and then use them in context. Of course, these are definitely more advanced. They are more specific. But try to to keep them in mind because you will hear them in specific situations like the ones I just mentioned like somebody lashes out at you or in the context of education telling your you know students like if any of you are teachers out there you could use buckle down and say I want you to really get serious. I want you to buckle down and study hard for the exam.

to give you a little quick review. Now, I'm going to try to use some of them in context because I know that I have kind of plowed through these phrasal verbs in the last 30 minutes, but I hope some of these are were new for you and you can use them as a way to jazz up your conversations or jazz up your writing and making it a little more captivating. And I hope that you will watch another video lesson to help you continue building your vocabulary. It's just something that you can mull over. You don't have to to do it, but please mull it over. And probably I should start wrapping things up. I don't want to drag this out too long. I don't want to upset you and then something maybe you lash out at me. I know that's not going to happen. I just wanted to give you one last example with these. But seriously, I do think if you study hard, if you buckle down and keep practicing, you're just going to learn them slowly over time. I know I'm throwing a lot at you, but you can get these lesson notes. Click on that link down below. If you're already a part of our community, I've sent them to you. And I know uh running I always like to do this with these quiz lessons. How did you do? I am going to I'm going to put a quiz in the chat there and and let me know how you did because I I'm kind of curious if this was a little too difficult. How did you do on the quiz? And let's just make it um great, which I would say would be 75% to 100%.

Uh good. Maybe 50% to 75%. And then um I need to buckle down. Let's use it. And let's say 50 50% or less. Actually, if you if you got half of them correct, I think that's still really good that you still you have a high level of proficiency for being able to identify even half of these. Even though in the even though in that little quiz I said you need to buckle down. It's okay. I'm already seeing like most people most people uh saying that they need to buckle down, which is good because when it comes to building your vocabulary, there's always so much to to learn, to improve, to do. Um, but ultimately, if this were a competition, if learning English were I'll give you a sport analogy, I am confident that you, even after all this hard work, you'll be able to eek out a victory. Okay. So, uh, for th for those of you, some of you did great. That is incredibly impressive. Well done. Um, but I'm always glad if I can come away from these lessons knowing that some of this was new and that you learned one, two, or three new things. Thank you guys so much for being here, especially the members, Deborah, Lai, uh, Raphaela, great to see you. um some of the uh people in Speak Up as well. Teao, Raphaela, and those who are always here with me. Manuel, Angela, Talal, um Sabina, good to see you. Um Jacqu Vinn here. Good to see you, too. Long time. Uh I hope that you all uh enjoyed the lesson. Hit that like button. Let me know so I can probably do some more advanced phrasal verb lessons in the future. I will end the poll right now as well as end this lesson. Thank you.

Advanced Phrasal Verbs with UP

Hello and welcome to today's lesson. Uh my name is Wes in case this is your first time here. And the channel Interactive English, it's it's just all about trying to help you improve your English skills. And please, if that is what you would like to do, I would love it if you would subscribe so that I can then become your English teacher. And today I I have a fun lesson. I think this is one that many English learners I I think people find it interesting. They find it challenging. And we're going to be talking about phrasal verbs. So that is what we're going to be we're going to be talking about today, but specifically phrasal verbs with up. So all of these are phrasal verbs in which the particle that follows the verb is up. And I'm sure you've heard some of them before. I tried to find ones that are a little more difficult, a little more challenging, which is why I'm saying that they are advanced phrasal verbs.

But the way we're going to do this, because I love it when when you guys interact uh with these lessons, is I'm going to present it more as a quiz. So, I'm going to give you a question or um like show you an article and and blank out the verb and I want you to write your answers in the chat or if you're watching this later, write your answer uh in the comment. And if this is your first time here, let me know. Write to me in the comments. I love hearing from from new people as well as others who are typically here. And speaking of others who are often here, hello, good to see you. Li, Sleepwalker, Yar, how's it going? Takaya, Vivien, uh, Angela, great to see, uh, Ankor, so many familiar names. And as we go through this, I'll I'll be able to give out a few more shoutouts, um, as you guys are answering these questions. So, let's jump right into it with the first one.

And I, you know, I said it's advanced. I started, this is a little easier, this first one. Um, and I just want you to think which uh which verb goes in that blank. You see that orange square right there? So, this is a I guess kind of a a comic image that I found. LOL, which is an acronym. It stands for laugh out loud. You m me up. So there is a verb uh that goes in there and the picture you can use it to help you. I told you I think just looking at the picture that's that's kind of a big hint which is why this one I think is a little easier but as we go through them they will get uh more and more challenging. So I see a couple uh answers. Um all right. Hello. Oh Vicki Gustav Hansa.

Excellent. Glad you guys can join us. Uh Gustav and and Hans. Um who else we see? Essie is the first time here. Hello. Welcome. So I I see some excellent answers. Yes. Fasil, Encore, Lai, HJ, Eloisa, uh Yashar, Gina. The answer is crack. So in this case, typically I would I think I would have taken I forgot to put that extra one in there and take that off. You crack me up. Lol. Crack me up. The egg is cracked. And the egg is laughing because to crack up means to laugh with great enthusiasm. This is a little bit more informal. I think often people would just say, "Oh, you make me laugh." But informally people could say, "Oh, you crack me up." The next one, which um this this is definitely, I think, a little more challenging, this phrasal verb um or this verb with up. So, this is actually taken from an article I found this uh the founder of Zapos. They they passed away in 2020, a couple of years ago, and this is a a very wealthy person. Um it says they had a fortune of $500 million. But this line right here, I I'll read it for you um in case you're having a hard time seeing it. I know it's small. It says, "So he passed away, had this fortune of 500 million, and it says, "And so his friends and family are now grappling with how to mumm up his empire." So they're trying to m up his empire. They're trying to uh figure out a way to well the meaning down here to divide and share something. In this case, they're they're talking about dividing and sharing um all of that money. So, which which verb goes in there? And this one, like I said, this one is definitely a little more challenging. I don't know if you've heard of it before. If it's a new phrasal verb for you, then I'm happy that you've you've learned something new. I have not seen the correct answer in here, which is why I'm kind of drawing this out. Uh, so I'll go ahead and tell you the it's not to to build up. So you could say I'm going to build up an empire in which case you are getting more. But in this case they're talking about dividing it. They're trying to share something. So the correct answer is divvy. All right. Divvy up. I see that in there. Gina. I saw that last second. Excellent. Good job. So if you're going to to divvy something up, it just means to divide and share. And often I think you might hear people using this when you're asking, well, how are we going to do this? How are we going to divide it up? How are we going to divvy this up? How are we going to divvy it up? So, to divvy up means to divide or share something. If this phrasal verb is new, if you learned something new, please let me know. Hit the hit the like button.

Um, suck it up is another good guess. That would that also fits. That's not the one that I'm looking for. If you're talking about to to be more mature, act like an adult, you would tell somebody. Yes. Shha. Got it. Fil uh Medlife. Perfect. Grow. grow up. So in this case, oh, did I hurt your feelings? Oh, grow up. So again, if you're telling somebody to grow up, often people would think of the meaning that somebody is um maybe they're getting older or a place that they lived and this is where they spent their childhood. Like I grew up in the southeast part of the United States for me. But in this case, we're talking about grow up to behave like an adult.

And it you're using it to criticize someone who you think is being silly or unreasonable. Um you say, "Oh, grow up. Grow up." Um man up. All right. Man up. That would also work in this context. I like that. Uh so the next one that I have, again, these are all phrasal verbs with up. This one's um from recent. It's from the Olympics. So this is from an article headline. And you can see the Olympics, the Winter Olympics are going on in Beijing. And it says that uh Beijing 2022, US m up against Slovakia in ice hockey, which um which verb best completes that. I've given you the meaning down here because I think just trying to put it in context can be a little challenging. We will get to that later on because I'm going to take these take the meaning away. So up means to make a mistake. US up against Slovakia in ice hockey shock. All right. What do you think? To make a mistake. Mess up. See some people saying mess up is that is also making a mistake. You wouldn't not using it in this context. You wouldn't say it. Um, what else do we have? Um, screw up. Screw up. Yes, that also works. Like, uh, you you make a mistake. That's more informal, so it's probably not something that you're going to see in like a newspaper headline. Uh, so hopefully this is another one that's new for you. Excellent. Yes. You knocked it out of the park. Um, that's the one we're looking for. Slip up. So, actually I should have chose it showed it to you in the article. Sorry about that. Um, so to slip up means to make a mistake, simply put. And like I said, you could some people you I see a lot of people saying screw up that that also means the same thing. I think screw up more is you make a a bad mistake. So, it's also more informal. So, it's not one that you might see in like a news headline like screw up. The one thing I would say in this case probably to that makes slip up more appropriate is because you're making a mistake when the expectation is that you should not. So the US hockey team uh just looking reading it on context the US hockey team should have won but they made a mistake. They slipped up. So, that's another little nuance that you could think about, like you're slipping up where the expectation is that you probably should not have made a mistake here. Um, so to slip up means to make a mistake.

Somebody said, "Never heard this one before." Awesome. Excellent. You learned a new one. Perfect. That's what that's what I like to hear. Then, uh, here is the next one. Um, this one I'm just giving you the definition and I want to see I want to see if you can put in that missing verb. Um, somebody asked, "Yes, these are I I mean I labeled them as advanced phrasal verbs. I tried to find ones that I think are a little more challenging and difficult." So to move towards someone or something especially in a confident way and you would m up to this person and yeah I think you to to a person or something and I'm going to show you this in a song to give you a hint. Um, the song goes, uh, he m up to me and he asked me if I wanted to dance. Okay, that's that's the song if you want to listen and put that in context. He m up to me and he asked me if I wanted to dance. Uh, I'll show this to you in a little bit. So, to move towards someone and something, especially in a confident way. That's that's the key word, I think, right there. It's a confident way. And yes, Vivian, uh, you got it.

Excellent. So, the answer is to walk. To walk up to someone or something. Now, I will tell you that the meaning actually instead of move, it's to walk towards someone, especially in a confident way. I took out walk because then it would have just made it too too easy. So, think about it. If you walk up to someone, then you you are you are walking toward them, but you have like a confident way. Like there's something that you want to tell this person. You need to tell this person. You feel confident to say something, and you walk up to them. People might say, "I'm going to walk up to him and and let them know what's on my mind." So, I told you that you would um find this in this song.

This is a it's an old song. All right. Maybe I'm I'm dating myself. Um, so the song is Then He Kissed Me by the Crystals. You can look up and listen to the YouTube video. It's a song maybe you've heard the in a movie or a TV show. The song begins that first line. Well, he walked up to me and he asked me if I wanted to dance. I'm not going to sing the whole song. I don't want you to leave. I know my singing is really bad. But to walk up to someone, you're you're walking toward them in a confident way. Okay, so the next one, again, hopefully maybe that one's new. I think hopefully some of these are new for you. Uh I took this one from uh another meme. So this you can see that the picture right there, that's uh an image from the movie Lord of the Rings. And he's saying one does not simply m up a date without asking my opinion. Mm up a date without asking my opinion. So I've given you again for this one I've given you the meaning right down here. You arrange a meeting between two people with the aim of encouraging some uh romantic relationship between them and you would m up a date. In this this is the context right here. One does not simply m up a date without asking my opinion. What do you guys think? Um, so all right. I think yeah, this is uh one that I think you're probably more familiar with because we're you you have that keyword dating. And when people talk about dating, they may use this phrasal verb. And yes, um, Maxim, Maxim, HJMZ, uh, Marksman, trying to throw some new, uh, shout outs. Harry, uh, yes, Esther, the the answer, Sarah, the answer is set. So, in this case, like one does not simply set up a date without asking my opinion. So, you might hear people use it in the context like to set someone up. In that case, you're setting someone up on a date. So, I told you I think this one is probably one you may be a little more familiar with. You're arranging a meeting between two people with the aim of encouraging a romantic relationship between them to set someone up. Uh, all right. So, let's move on to the next one. All right. We're going to keep running through these. All of these again are phrasal verbs with up, advanced phrasal verbs with up because it seems like just listening, looking at some of the answers that some of these may be new for you, which is good. So once again, this is taken from an article and in this article, I've blocked out the times when they use this verb. So Liam Gallaer on Oasis, he's talking about the old um the music group and he's saying we should never have m up. All right. Which verb best completes that statement. And to give you a little more context, I think if you kept reading right there, it says in an interview Liam Gallagher said he believes Oasis should never have up. He also said he would love to get the band back together. So that's giving you a little more context, making it easier. Down here, they use the same phrasal verb, but you know, I love him.

He adds, we m up nearly 13 years ago. It's ridiculous. We can go on about whose fault it is, but he's his own man. So again, they're talking about this group that was together and now they're not. All right. So again um the ant no I see some people like give up um should never have now again in that case give up we should never have given up which again giving up like you know quitting we're not quitting again think about together and then not together hopefully like met up no breakup breakup is ending it Um, but that's not the one we're looking for. Okay. So, wow. I haven't seen Oh, Maxim got this answer. So, again, I told you that we're not the the key would be like in this situation, the band is not together.

They they are separated. They Well, I'll just tell you the answer. The answer is split. That's what uh we were looking to split up is to end a relationship or marriage and you could say somebody split up. So there are different ways again you could say this um a lot of people put like oh people broke up. In that case I think if somebody breaks up that's more of a relationship like you're dating somebody and then two people break up and they're not together anymore. in this case like you're you're ending a relationship in which they were this is a band so it's not they're not dating so you wouldn't really say uh they they broke up um even though I think some b people will talk about bands and say yeah the band broke up um you could use it in that context but I think it is common if you're talking especially about music like yeah the band they split up uh they split up last year so in this case he's saying like they they split up nearly 13 years ago. We should never have split up is the the up phrasal verb that we're looking for. So again, it's to end a relationship or marriage. And maybe I don't know if that one's new. Again, hit hit that like button. Hit that like button again. Just keep just keep hitting it if it's new. Um to split up. This is one where once again I've given you the just the the definition the meaning and I want you to think of which verb should go there. So it's to talk to someone whom one has not seen for some time in order to find out what they've been doing. All right? You're you you haven't seen this person for a long time. You want to talk to them to find out what they've been doing. and you'd say, "Oh, you know, we really need to m up." Please, let's m up sometime.

Okay, which which verb would complete that sentence. All right, please write your answer in the chat or in the comments. I want you to participate in these lessons. And this one, I feel like uh maybe it's a little easier. Again, you're you guys know this context. You can think about it like, "Yeah, we really need to up." So, great job, Sleepwalker, Angela, Yashar, um, Missetta, we're talking about catch to catch up. So, here is the answer. Yes, to catch up. You're talking to someone who you haven't seen in a long time, and you want to find out how they've been doing. And you might say to that person, "Oh, we really need to catch up." Or, "Let let's catch up. Let's go grab a coffee and we'll catch up. Here is a fun little uh I thought this was funny. So, this is a again this is more of a joke saying let's catch up by asking mutual friends about each other. And I say it's a joke because they're saying like we're not going to talk to each other directly. We're going to ask our other friends what what each other has been up to. So, we don't have to talk to each other.

So, this is kind of just making a joke about this. Okay, the next one. Here we go right here. This was taken actually from a like a Reddit Reddit comment. I really I really don't use Reddit that much, but I this worked for this phrasal verb. And this one I I think this one is more challenging. This is more advanced. Um, it's one that maybe you've heard. I don't know how often you would use it because it is fairly specific. So, the the title of this Reddit thread signs really m up the place. And to give you a little bit more of a hint, think about that last part of that that phrase right there. Mm up the place is a context in which people would often use this phrasal verb and say, "Wow, it really m up the place." What do you think? Signs really m up the place. So I

this one's more challenging because I'm not giving you the meaning to help you out. Uh, the only hint that I'm giving you is thinking about that last play phrase up the place. You're thinking about, well, it makes it better. It makes it more entertaining. And you'd say, wow, this really changes this room for the better. It really m up the place. I told you maybe this one's new. I definitely think this one is more advanced. It's more specific. Um, but one that yeah, you could still try to listen for. So, the answer I haven't seen any correct answers, so I'm just I'm just going to tell you guys what the answer is. The answer is to liven to liven up the place. So, sorry, I I should have just taken it away and shown you how it's there, but signs really liven up the place.

So if you say something liven up the place, it means it becomes more interesting or exciting or to make something become more interesting or exciting. And typically you might hear people use this in that context like somebody they change the room and they put up some pictures or they um they remodel it or they do something to to change it and you'd say, "Wow, this really livens up the place. It makes it more interesting or exciting." So typically you would use it in a complimentary way and you would say something really livens up the place. It makes it more exciting. I don't know. Think about like if I were to ask you guys, think of your room right now. What could you add to your room to make it more interesting? What could you add to make it just just to liven up the place a little? Okay, so again, hopefully this one is new. Hopefully you're you're learning some new phrasal verbs. This is this is why I said they're uh advanced. Then uh here again here's another one which I think is more common so maybe you'll know it. I'm giving you uh I have given you the just the definition and I want you to think of which verb goes in there to fail to take advantage of an opportunity to up. What do you think to um up and I I'm sure that you've heard this phrasal verb before. I think it is pretty common because you would hear people in that situation to fail to take advantage of an opportunity. I would say please don't m up the opportunity to subscribe to the channel so that you'll and and turn on notifications so that you learn about future lessons and I can become your teacher. Please do not m up on this opportunity that you have right now. Um, so the answer is not miss or mess. Um, again, you're talking about an opportunity. Don't m up on this opportunity. You hear people possibly use it in that statement. So you're you failed to take advantage of it. You're basically it's like you've you've turned it down. And I think once I tell you the answer, you'll probably be like, "Oh yeah, I've I've heard that before." So if you fail to take advantage of an opportunity then you are passing up on it to pass up um to fail to take advantage of it. So think about Yes. Excellent. Um Gustav Hans perfect pass up. So think about that context I gave you like saying like you know working in that plug like telling you to subscribe like don't don't pass up on the opportunity to subscribe to the channel and turn on notifications. Don't fail to take advantage of it. And people would use it in that context, like don't pass up on this opportunity, especially if it's like a good one to pass up. Uh, all right. So, I have another one, some more. Oh, this is a here's a good example. This quote from uh Winston Churchill. Famous quote. Never pass up the chance to sit down or go to the bathroom. Okay. Famous quote by Winston Churchill. Food for thought. All right. I think again this is I think just a joke. Um but it's another example of using pass up. This is not I do not think this is an actual quote that that um he used, but I like it nonetheless. Never pass up the chance to sit down or go to the bathroom. That's very true. Uh all right. Um here is another one which I think I think this one's a little easier. I think you um will probably get this one.

I hope so. This is also current events. I was unaware of this that Robert Patterson used to m up as Batman his entire childhood. And I've also blocked it out down there. Uh they're saying the the same thing. So Robert Patter Patterson used to up as Batman his entire entire childhood. The reason why I say this one, uh, it's a little bit of current events because apparently Robert Patson is going to be the new Batman. Um, I feel like in my lifetime there have been many different Batmans. Some have been good, others not so good. I'm not really sure about how I feel about this one. Uh, with Robert Patterson. I guess I'll have to see the movie when it comes out. So, hello Mariano. How are you doing? Excellent.

Uh, yes, Lai. Uh, you got it. Ava, Jane, um, Yashar, Sajid, Sajid. Um, we're we're talking about Esther. Dressing up. Robert Patterson used to dress up uh as Batman his entire childhood. That was what we're going through. So, to dress up, you're saying um to put on special clothes in order to change your appearance. This one, I think, is more common. I imagine you have heard this one before, like you're dressing up as some character or you're dressing up for Halloween or for a party. Um, okay. I think you said that Winston Church never pass up a chance to go to the Lou. That's probably more accurate as to what

Winston Churchill would have said. Yes, you would have said the L instead of the bathroom. Uh, then I have I think there's another one. Okay, so this is another like just a funny example of a mug apparently, but this is a I I think this one is a little more advanced. Um, but it's a good and useful phrasal verb to know. Not in this context, but I'll once you know the meaning. So, it says, "Never take advice from me. You'll m up drunk." Can you guess which verb would go in that uh that statement? Again, this is supposed to be just a funny little joke um that's on a mug. I've seen some like t-shirts, too, that say the same thing. They're just like novelty mugs or novelty t-shirts. But which verb best completes that sentence? Never never take advice from me. You'll up drunk. And wow, everybody's seems to be knocking this one out of the park.

Excellent. Great job. Uh, first one to answer was Sylvio. Nice. Myra, HJ, um, Nosna, William, Allison, Brian, Eloisa, perfect. Uh, so yeah, we're we're talking about Loi, nice job. Um, to end up drunk is the actual um what the actual statement is. So to end up is to reach or come to a place, condition or situation that was not planned or expected. So like you'll end up in some condition or you'll end up in some place. So it's a it's a very I think it's a useful phrasal verb. It's one that's pretty common also. Um another one with up. So in that case again it's saying don't take my never listen to take my advice. you'll you'll end up drunk as though this person's advice is always to I guess drink alcohol.

So, here just to to show you guys a little bit of review, here is the word list of the different phrasal verbs that we talked about. And some of them have multiple meanings. And I tried to make the meaning a little more challenging. Like I said, grow up has different meanings. But in the one that we were talking about, it was like to act more mature. or like somebody saying, "Oh, grow up." So, here are the the the ones that uh talked about. I will put these notes up on for the the patrons and um YouTube members. So, keep an eye out for that. But, I hope that you guys enjoyed this lesson. I hope some of these phrasal verbs were new.

If they are, again, you can let me know by hitting that like button is the best way to do that. And please write to me in the chat or write to me in the comments um once this gets posted. I love hearing from people especially if there was one that was new and like yes I learned something new today. I love hearing that. Sleepwalker, Lai, Tao, Yashar, Angela, Gustav, Hans, um great to see all of you today. Um who else is in there? Mariano, excellent. Louisa Sherrod, thank you guys. I I hope that you enjoy the rest of your

Advanced Phrases (C2) to Build Your Vocabulary

let's learn some Advanced C2 phrases to help you build your vocabulary and C2 this is just Cambridge's highest level qualification and shows that you are a highly proficient speaker of English so I am going to teach you these Advanced phrases I'll tell you the meaning I'll give you some context as to how they're used and I'm going to teach you the pronunciation because if you're going to use these phrases you want to make sure that you're saying them correctly so let's face it building your vocabulary is extremely important and let's face it is the first phrase that I would like to teach you so this phrase is used to say that something is true and cannot be denied or it is said before something that is true but unpleasant and just keep in mind that you're really going to use this phrase at the beginning of a statement so to give you some context

let's look at a few memes let's face it you laugh at anything I say this is true and undeniable thank you or let's face it you're the reason I drink in this case it's true and and unpleasant or let's face it memes are a childish way to communicate and debate ideas this is also true but they do make for some great examples now when it comes to pronouncing this phrase and you want to make sure you're saying these words together instead of pronouncing the words individually one thing to keep in mind is that linking may occur and this often happens when the final sound of one word is a consonant sound and the beginning sound of the next word is a vowel sound so let's face it the final consonant sound in face may get linked with the vowel sound in it and it's going to sound like face it it's almost like we're carrying that consonant sound over to the next syllable face it let's face it you know let's face it if you would like to continue building your vocabulary well then you need to subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and the next C2 phrase that I want to teach you is few and far between it means not happening or existing very often and you would say that something is few and far between so it's often going to follow the verb to be and typically it's going to come at the end of a statement in this town good workers are few and far between this winter snowy days have been few and far between and that's true it's been a rather mild winter or I could say Miracles are few and far between in each of these sentences the phrase follows the verb to be and comes at the end of the statement as for pronunciation the very first thing that I want to point out is that the word and make it reduced to n and this is common in spoken English and keep in mind it's also an unstressed sound n now it begins with a vowel sound and the word before ends in a consonant sound so once again linking may occur few when few went far between and reductions they're quite common and in this case it allows us to just say the phrase quickly few and far between few and far between just listen for it all I'm saying is that the really good guys are few and the wealthy families in the countryside are few and far between friends close friends a few and far between now when it comes to improving your pronunciation good apps are few and far between however I want to talk to you about a great app for fine-tuning your pronunciation skills and that is Elsa speak who is the sponsor of today's lesson this is an app that I actually heard about from many of you so I thought that I would check it out and just see what it's all about so I downloaded the app I started exploring and I was really impressed with all the different things that that you can do practice daily lessons improve pronunciation let's say that you want to study by topic and there are many different topics to choose from so what if we go to Lifestyle and as you can see there are a lot of different lessons to help you practice and improve but I think the coolest part of the app is the ability to practice words and phrases that you want to learn so we can type in the phrase let's face it and then we can listen to the pronunciation let's face it and then practice saying it let's face it now let me show you what happens if a mistake is made and I mispronounce a word let's face it as you can see you get instant feedback which then allows you to try and make adjustments and right now when you click on the link below and download the Elsa speak app you can get seven days of the pro membership for free but you can use my discount to get 85 percent off a lifetime membership or 40 percent off a one year membership so let's face it this is a great way to practice and improve your pronunciation and if that's what you'd like to do check out those links and discounts in the description now let's get back to our C2 phrases and good our next phrase for the best this refers to an action that is done in order to improve a situation or or produce a good result although at the time it's going to seem unpleasant and I think a great example would be ending a relationship and breaking up so let's say that you are planning to break up with me and our relationships coming to an end I hope this this is just an example and of course I'm very sad I would say please please don't break up with me people like you are few and far between and then you would tell me you know let's face it it's for the best okay we need to break up it's going to improve our situation in the future it's for the best Ted's stepdad and I have separated oh my God it's for the best well thank you but uh we think it'd be better if we left not because of last night for the best I think that pronouncing this phrase it's it's not too difficult for the best the only thing that I would tell you to keep in mind is that the article the it is the weak the and you're using the schwa sound that uh sound because it comes before a word that begins with a consonant sound for the best for the best the next phrase is conflict of interest and you may be thinking wait a second I have heard this phrase and that is because it describes a situation that is quite common so this phrase is very useful and we're talking about describing a situation in which someone cannot make a fair decision because they will be affected by the result so let's just say that I am going to judge a contest for children and my daughter is one of the participants do you think that I am a fair judge or would you say that I have a conflict of interest because this is my daughter I would love to see her win so perhaps I'm not capable of making a fair decision in this case and you would say look Wes you clearly have a conflict of interest and I'm sure that you can think of someone that you know who has had a conflict of interest because like I said this is a very common and useful phrase for pronunciation there is some more linking going on we can actually link all three of these words together we can link that final consonant sound in conflict with the beginning vowel sound in of conflict Dove and then we can link that consonant sound with the beginning vowel sound in interest conflict of interest conflict of interest and one thing I want to point out with that preposition of whenever you see this word linking often occurs such as in this phrase conflict of interest then we have the phrase some thing Dawns on someone and this means to understand or realize something for the first time I was about to pay for the groceries when it suddenly dawned on me that I forgot my wallet and I just realized it all of a sudden it Dawns on me and there are some great collocations with this phrase you could say something suddenly Dawns on someone or something finally Dawns on someone and when you're pronouncing this phrase there's more linking you can link the final consonant sound in Dons with the vowel sound in on Dawn's on however I think people may often use this phrase in the past tense in which they're going to say Dawn Dawn and and that can be a little trickier because of the repetition when we're linking something dawned on me or dawned on him or dawned on her and you hear that repetition dawned on our next phrase is to crack down on something or crack down on someone and it just means to take strong action to stop something and in order to show you this phrase being used in context I have some news headlines that I'd like to share with you Washington Bill aims to crack down on street racing three things we know about Netflix's efforts to crack down on password sharing something that I'm not too happy about the Supreme Court might not crack down on big Tech after all and when you pronounce this phrase more linking may occur we can link the final consonant sound in down with the vowel sound and on Crackdown on and I think this is a little easier to say than the other one something dawned on someone but linking it's very common it allows us to connect these words and say these phrases easily and smoothly crack down on in the blink of an eye this is our next phrase and it means extremely quickly and it really makes sense because when you blink well that that's pretty fast now your likely going to use this phrase at either the beginning of a statement in the blink of an eye something happened or you'll use it at the end of a statement something happened in the blink of an eye this phrase May often get used when referring to time or maybe someone is just suddenly gone and instead of saying something happened very quickly I would just switch it out something happened in the blink of an eye now I have been married for let me do the math six years now and I could say that well this time has passed quickly six years have gone by in the blink of an eye for pronunciation we're going to use that week the with the schwa sound and then link those final four words the blink of an eye and once again it's like we're we're just carrying that final consonant sound over to the next syllable blink of Van Nai the blink of an eye and the next phrase I really like this one but in it just means to interrupt and really you would be interrupting a conversation a discussion or just getting involved in someone else's business and you might hear someone use this phrase if they're telling another person to stop doing this don't butt in just make sure my idiot interns don't screw up you're the idea don't put it or perhaps someone needs to interrupt and they would say something like I'm sorry to butt in but can I make a suggestion by all means perhaps you are asking me would you like me to hit the like button and I would say well yeah by all means please go ahead hit that like button by all means when it comes to the pronunciation of this phrase and someone is speaking quickly they may use intrusion to link the two vowel sounds in the words by and all by all and intrusion is when you're adding either a slight W sound or a slight Y sound and that then allows us to link two vowels and we're going to use a slight Y sound which comes after front vowel sounds like I so by all means and you hear that slight y Sound by all by all means then we have the phrase behind closed doors this refers to a situation that is hidden or kept secret from the public without an audience or crowd watching and again this is a situation that is common so I think this is a very useful phrase people may often use this phrase when referring to government or business decisions that are kept secret we didn't want the public to know so the decision was made behind closed doors and yeah secrecy it's not a good thing when pronouncing this phrase a legion may occur and illusion is when certain sounds get removed and I'm talking about the t or d sounds when they come between two consonants so think about the word handsome that D it comes between two consonants it aligns we don't hear it with our phrase both of the D sounds in behind and closed they're going to align they come between two consonant sounds and and it's like they get muted and you just don't really hear it behind closed doors behind closed doors once again

just listen for it I heard about a third fight between you and Apollo behind closed doors how did he know to choose them everything happen behind closed doors what's going on there so we just talked about secrecy with the phrase behind closed doors now let's go in the other direction and talk about the phrase come to light this refers to facts that become known publicly and once again there are useful collocations with this phrase we could say that new evidence comes to light or new facts may come to light or new details may come to light I could say recently new details came to light showing how the decision was made behind closed doors and it's like this secret information became known publicly when you pronounce this phrase it's pretty straightforward the only thing that I would like to point out is the word to when you're stressing it it's pronounced just like I said two but there is another accepted form of pronunciation and that is when it's unstressed and it's going to sound more like ta and if somebody is saying this phrase quickly they may not stress that word and and it's going to sound like come to light come to light some new evidence comes to light now for a little review I know that this lesson has gone by in the blink of an eye but by all means please watch another video Lesson because let's face it great vocabulary lessons like this one are few and far between and I am a firm believer that if you keep practicing and you keep learning a little bit each and every day when it comes to improving your English everything's just going to fall right into place so I think I need to wrap things up and say goodbye it's for the best and if you enjoyed the lesson and learn something new I would appreciate it if you hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

LESSON 186 OF 749

Advanced Phrases That Will Change the Way You Communicate

Let's change the way you communicate. And the way that I want to help you communicate more effectively and more accurately is by teaching you some advanced phrases. These phrases are more specific. It's not like you're going to use them all the time, but it's going to help you do two things. I mentioned it's going to help you be more specific, descriptive, but also help you improve your listening comprehension because you will come across them. And if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary, please subscribe, turn on notifications, and then that way I can become your teacher. In case we have not met yet, my name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English.

So, this is a quiz lesson. I want you to participate and write your answers in the chat and let's go ahead and get the show on the road. This is our first question and I've highlighted the phrase and in this case I'm just I'm omitting one or more words. So we are on the m of a technological revolution. Which phrase are you going to use in this context? Specifically in this context, we are on the M of a technological revolution. This is a phrase that I'm sure many of you have heard before. Whether you whether you knew the meaning or not, I don't know. But once again, it's not one that you you're going to walk out the door and hear somebody using this phrase.

We are on the of a technological revolution. So with some of these I will I will say I haven't seen the word that we're looking for yet. I I will say with some of these phrases there may be more than one word that can be used. So for example I I see people like we are on the the verge of a technological revolution. That that would work. We are on the brink of a technological revolution. I would say verge and brink would work. edge not so much but the word that I was thinking of maybe this is new I don't know we are on the cusp of a technological revolution you are on the cusp of something so if you're going to use this phrase on the cusp it means we just talked about that word verge you are on the verge of some beginning point or the start of some major development you are on the cusp so keep in mind if you say we're on the verge that would work as Well, we are on the brink. The these are all synonyms, but specifically and this will give you a better idea. Cusp. You uh you can be on the cusp of something. Appreciate the cusp, not the something. Appreciate this moment. Now, so the meaning of the word cusp, it really refers to this point uh in between uh two different things. A point of transition. That is the meaning of cusp, but you're really going to use it with this phrase and say on the cusp of something. We're talking about a major development that's going to change people's lives. So, I I want to emphasize the fact that you're not going to use this every day. Typically, you might hear this more in maybe a speech and somebody says, "We're on the cusp of some major change, technological revolution." And maybe you hear somebody use this when talking about AI. To give you a little more context, I my family, we're getting ready to make a move. And that is a major development for our family. But I would not use this phrase.

I w I would not say we are on the cusp of moving to a new city. That's going to sound a little weird. So you would really use this to emphasize some major development that's really going to influence everybody around the world. you are on the cusp of something. If you if this phrase is new, then let me know. You can hit that like button, hit those hearts. Uh it just tells me that okay, you are building your vocabulary. Uh what about this one? I think this one maybe maybe it's a little easier. We'll see. I always say that and then it's difficult and then when I think it's difficult, everybody gets it. So, I'm giving you the counterargument.

I don't really believe it. I'm just playing. So, if we're having a conversation, think about like somebody's actually saying this and you and I are I don't want to give it away. Uh we're having this conversation and I say, "Look, I I'm just giving you the counterargument. I don't really believe it. I'm just playing what which phrase are you going to use?" In this case, you could say the This is more of a an idiom. I someone said you're just playing around. Yeah, you could say that like, hey, I don't I'm just playing around. I'm just messing with you. That would work. But there is a specific phrase that would really fit in this case. And I see uh one one of the answers in here. So, the idiom or the phrase that we're talking about, especially when arguing with someone else, devil's advocate. So, if you're playing devil's advocate, then

Well, well played. Well played. So, I thought this is um this was a funny little meme because I think you need to be careful when you are debating someone whether or not you're playing devil's advocate or if you're just coming off and being mean and rude. So, just something to keep in mind. And this comic I thought was funny where they say, "Hi, I'm just playing devil's advocate." And you see the devil there. He's like, "No, no, he's just being a douchebag." So, if somebody's playing devil's advocate, maybe again, they're they're really maybe bringing up some good points. But you got to be careful whether or not you're you're not offending someone. You're not talking to them in a condescending way. When you're playing devil's advocate, you're really just arguing the other position, the other point, not necessarily in a rude way or a combative way. So, let's look at the next one. Again, if this phrase, if any of these phrases are new, let me know. You hit those the like button, the heart, those hearts. That that tells me that I should continue doing some more uh advanced vocabulary lessons because I told you these are these are advanced phrases. His comments were beyond it was totally unacceptable. So, we're talking about somebody saying something. They make a comment that was unacceptable. And really, when you use this phrase, you're really emphasizing this fact. His comments were his comments were beyond what? So, that is part of the phrase, beyond something. and and then you could follow it up and say, "Look, this was totally unacceptable. He should have never made those comments that it was just absurd, ridiculous. It was beyond." And every time I say beyond, I I feel like I'm actually going to give away the answer or say it, but I can go ahead and tell you. We're talking about the phrase beyond the pale. So, if you say that something was beyond the pale, it was outside the bounds of acceptable behavior. Well done, um, Angela Joanna, uh, KB, beyond the pale. A lot of times people will use this when referring to somebody's comments, something that they say to someone or the way they're treating someone. And if you think that they're treating somebody really badly, it's unacceptable. It's beyond the pale.

or they say something to a person like in this case you you make a comment and it's unacceptable. It's beyond the pale. So just keep in mind this is a great phrase to add emphasis. If you say that something is very unacceptable, that's when you can use this phrase and say it's beyond the pale. What about this one? This is another phrase that you could put in more than more than one word works here. So if somebody's in this situation being passed over for that should be the promotion. I apologize that's a typo. Being passed over for the promotion was a m swallow. There are a few words missing here, but there are several words that you could use that really mean the same thing. And once again, I will just want to acknowledge the typo there, the missing article being passed over for uh the promotion was a m swallow. I feel like the fact that I'm giving you the word swallow, maybe it makes it a little easier because that is very specific. So in this case, we're talking about something happens and it's really tough to accept. So the phrase that I feel like is often used and I saw many of you got the right answer. Perfect. We're talking about a bitter pill to swallow, a difficult or unpleasant fact that you need to accept and just deal with it. And it's difficult and you can describe that difficulty and say it's a bitter pill to swallow. Now, the word in here that I think you could change out, instead of saying a bitter pill to swallow, you could say something is a it's a tough pill to swallow or a hard pill to swallow or a bitter pill to swallow. So, all of those phrases are really interchangeable. I think this one is the more common one when you're thinking about this expression, a bitter pill to swallow. To to give you an example, again, in this case, they're using hard. It says hard pill, hard pill, hard to swallow pills. Just following up a little joke using this phrase says just because you spent a long time making a mistake, being with the wrong partner, hanging out with toxic friends, working at the wrong job, taking the wrong courses in college, etc. doesn't mean you should keep doing it. So again, just thinking about something is a bitter pill to swallow. It's hard to accept, but you got to accept it and move on. And that's kind of what this is trying to say. all of these bad things. Don't keep doing it. Accept it. It's a tough pill to swallow and then move forward.

Um, wow, Cinderella, thank you very much. I appreciate uh that super chat. Uh, love it. Glad you enjoy these lessons and find them useful, especially when it comes to building your vocabulary because I do a lot of these quiz lessons and a lot of them are vocabulary related because they're I think it's more interactive that way. So really appreciate that, Cinderella. Um, much love. Much love. The ruling was a moment for civil rights. There are several adjectives that you could use. We're talking about the civil rights movement. So, of course, you could say, and maybe I'm going to go ahead and take some of your responses. It was a crucial moment or this was a um this a pivotal moment. This was the ruling was a an an inspirational moment.

The these are not the words that I'm looking for. This is a very specific word which is used with moment. It is a collocation. This is more difficult. This is more advanced. And I wanted to share this with you even though there are other words that you could put in there that make sense and it it works fine whether it's um just reading what you all said like pivotal um uh vital essential crucial there was I saw the correct answer. Excellent. So the the phrase that I wanted to point out, well done uh Joanna, talking about a watershed moment. And if this phrase is new, again, it means the same thing as all of those like crucial uh pivotal.

And if you describe something as being a watershed moment, it refers to a critical turning point. So I don't want to necessarily say this is going to add emphasis. If you use a word like pivotal or vital, uh that is also very expressive. It's very descriptive. But I wanted to share this with you in case it's new because I thought this may be a phrase that you haven't come across or maybe you might not come across it as often. But if you describe something as a watershed moment, it is a crucial turning point. I will say that when you do hear this phrase or even maybe use it, you may be talking about some type of judicial ruling. So the court rules, maybe the Supreme Court rules in some way. It's really going to be a turning point and you could refer to it as a watershed moment. And that is what this is talking about here with this example in the civil rights movement. The ruling was a watershed moment.

Uh, I'm trying to think whether this is easy or difficult. Let's just give it a try. The professor's follow-up lecture continued the same. There are some missing words around the phrase. The word same is going to be in the middle. So, the professor's follow-up lectured continued same focusing on ethical dilemmas in modern medicine. Now, I I feel like as far as the meaning in this phrase, maybe I'm not giving you too much context with this example, but what I really want to say or keep in mind, we're talking about a follow-up lecture. So, they've this professor has already talked about ethical dilemmas, modern medicine, but then they do a follow-up lecture. It really continues.

And that's kind of leading into this phrase in in trying to say um well what it is. So like the the same old song like you could same old song I feel like uh has a little bit more of a negative connotation like ah you're bored. It's the same old thing. That's that's not the the phrase we're talking about. Uh in this case what I want to say is it's it's very similar. So it's not the exact if you say the same old song it is more uh exact when talking saying something similar and this is another phrase maybe I think you probably have heard of it in the same vein and if you say something occurs or happens in the same vein you basically mean that something is happening in a similar style or theme.

So in this case, there was one lesson talking about ethical dilemmas, modern medicine. The follow-up lesson was very similar. It's really we're talking about those same topics. So it continued in the same vein. So great phrase, uh especially if this is one that you you haven't heard of before. I see these like little numbers. I don't know what this familiar with. The number three, the number two, number one with that that crown. I'm going to have to look into that. So, I'm switching it up now uh a little bit. In this case, I am blanking out the phrase. I'm giving you the meaning, but you can use the picture to try to help you. So, the first one is talking about a decision or conclusion that has not been reached. Use the picture, think about the meaning, and what phrase am I referring to? a decision or conclusion that has not been reached and in that case you could say that the what so obviously you see this picture I think you can tell that it's a courtroom and there are different parts of a courtroom what I was trying to find and track down is a picture of the jury box the jury are your your peers who would listen to the evidence listen to the lawyers make a decision. But when the jury has not made a decision and the conclusion hasn't been reached, I you guys got it. You could say, I feel like I'm I'm just uh rambling at this point. The jury is still out. So, this is a great phrase that you can use when you want to say, well, we we don't know. The decision has not been made or we don't know what the conclusion is. Here are some examples using it in context uh just to give you a better idea. will if somebody is asking questions and basically the response is well the jury is still out because often you may end up using this as a standalone statement just to say well we don't know will Bitcoin ever reach uh a million dollars well the jury is still out some people think it will others think it's worthless but the jury is still out we don't know will imposing tariffs make the US a stronger economy if you're following current events especially politics uh a lot of economic changes with all these tariffs and uh if some people would trying to argue that oh yeah it's going to make the economy better and the US stronger is this going to happen well the jury is still out uh we don't know exactly the the effects that this is going to have and then the last one are you going to hit the like button this is something that I would ask you say look are you going to hit the like button what do you think it's right there it's right in front of you go ahead and do it. And maybe you say, "Well, I don't know. I haven't made up my mind just yet. The jury is still out." So, whenever you want to tell someone, they ask you a question and you want to just say, "Well, I haven't reached a conclusion or we don't know." You could use this phrase, say, "Well, the jury is still out." I hope that the jury is not still out and that you've gone ahead and hit the like button. I'd appreciate it. What do you think? This next phrase, the meaning is to create a situation that causes a lot of problems when it starts to be dealt with. And you can use the picture. It's not the most it's not the most pleasant picture to to look at. It's kind of disgusting. But there is part of this picture is it's a key word as far as using uh or or trying to figure out this phrase. Uh the phrase that means to create a situation that causes a lot of problems when it starts to be dealt with. And if you're okay, I think you guys got it. So the picture you can see I tried to blur it out a little bit to make it a little more challenging. That's a hook. Somebody put a worm on the end of the hook. They're getting ready to go fishing. And worm is the key word that's part of this phrase phrase. So, what we're talking about is opening a can of worms. The meaning of this phrase, just what I just said, you're talking about creating a situation that causes a lot of problems when it starts to be dealt with. Here is a fun comic just to give you some context with this phrase. Um, these two birds. It says there's a can of worms and these birds are saying, "Yeah, I'm hungry, too, but are you uh are you sure you want to do this?" Like, "Open this can of worms. Open this problem." One thing I'll say about this phrase is people may use this uh because it creates problems. They may use it in the negative and say, "Look, I don't want to open this can of worms. I don't want to deal with this problem or this this situation is going to create a problem.

Let's not open this can of worms." And you may hear people use this phrase in the negative to say that you don't want to deal with it and you don't because you know it's going to create uh a lot of problems and it's not a good situation. Let's not open this can of worms. How about this one? The meaning is uh to make a bad situation worse. This is a phrase that in my opinion I think many of you know you've heard this before. I think it's commonly used especially nowadays in with social media and basically people expressing every thought that comes across their mind and it just it really makes a bad situation worse. And in that case, you could say that something does what? Once again, this picture, you can see a picture of a fire, which is part of this phrase. So, whenever you make a bad situation worse, you can say that you or maybe somebody else is doing this and they are adding fuel to the fire. And if you're adding fuel to the fire, it it basically means what it says. you're going to make the fire bigger, possibly out of control. And in this case, we're talking about making a a bad situation worse and adding fuel to the fire. Well done, U Julia Talal. Excellent, Lai. Uh to add fuel to the fire, here are some news headlines. Now, just to to give you more context, and I told you I think this one's common, even though this is a bit idiomatic, it is still used. If you're going to read a newspaper article, you may come across it. So, these headlines, don't add fuel to the fire. Europe tries to play it cool as uh Storm Trump approaches. I think this was back before like as soon as he got elected and people in Europe are trying to figure out, okay, how are we gonna deal with this and saying, "Hey, don't add fuel to the fire." The next one, Nike, it may seem like it, it may seem like it, but uh the draw down isn't over. Tariffs add fuel to the fire. We just mentioned uh tariffs. What kind of effect are they going to have? The jury is still out. However, I think with some companies, depending on their business, like Nike, it's going to probably be worse is what uh this article is saying. And it's going to add fuel to the fire. They were having problems already. This is going to make a bad situation worse. And then finally, Prince Harry's dinner with Brook um Brooklyn Beckham, not even sure who Brooklyn Beckham is, I don't know, maybe you guys do, will add fuel to the fire of family feud. So, Prince Harry has dinner with this person, and it's going to add fuel to the fire. When it comes to their family situation, which if you're thinking about the royals, yes, it's not a good situation. And something happens, it makes it worse. It adds fuel to the fire.

How about uh this one? Maybe uh well, I don't want to I don't want to give it away. So in this case, we're referring to something that has both positive and negative effects. You're talking about a situation, some issue has both positive and negative effects. And if you want to instead of saying, well, you know, this has some really positive effects and it could really help, but on the other hand, yeah, it's going to create some real problems and have some negative effects. You could refer to this situation as what? This is a noun phrase. You can look at the picture to give you a hint. Once again, I think just looking at the picture and you know what this item is, it's part of the phrase, which makes it a little bit easier. So, you can see this picture of a sword.

So, if we're talking about some situation, positive, negative effects, you could refer to it as a double-edged sword. A double-edged sword, it is going to have Yeah. P good things, bad things. So, here are some examples to give you more context. Hopefully, these sentences make it a little easier to understand. Fame is a double-edged sword because it brings attention, but also uh loss of privacy. So, there's a good thing about it. You get a lot of attention, but then you have no privacy. It's a double-edged sword. Social media is a double-edged sword. It connects us instantly, but it can also fuel anxiety and misinformation. I think that's a great example. Social media, um, I'm still, again, I try to think about whether or not the pros outweigh the cons. It's a great example of a double-edged sword.

And part of me feels like it's more negative than positive, but I have not made up my final decisions. The jury's still out. And then the last sentence, automation is a double-edged sword. It boosts productivity, but can lead to massive job losses. This is also part of the conversation now with AI automation. Great example of a double-edged sword. And once again, we don't know what's going to happen. The jury is still out. One thing I want to say about this phrase is when when I teach these noun phrases from time to time, keep in mind that it is a noun. And you would say something is a double-edged sword. Often I'll hear small speaking mistakes because people will try to use this as an adjective and they'll say, "Oh, this is a double-edged sword situation." And in that case, as soon as I hear that, it sounds really awkward to my ears. So, you're not going to use this as an adjective phrase. It is a noun phrase. And you'll always say that something is a double-edged sword.

Keep in mind, it's a noun. How about this one? We're talking about postponing or even deprioritizing something. And in that case, what are you going to do? I've given you I've given you a real closeup of this picture. I really wanted to throw it at you. So hopefully uh you you looking at the picture, you know what this is and it's the word is part of the phrase. So if we are talking about something, you bring up an issue, doesn't really matter what it is. Maybe I I don't want to deal with it right now. I uh I say, "Look, I don't want to open that can of worms. Let's postpone it. Let's not This is not a priority.

Let's what what are we going to do with this?" So the picture is uh a stove that is a burner and that is the word that is part of the phrase. And I saw some great answers. Um, well done. We're talking about to put something on the back burner. So, if I don't want to maybe again, if it's opening up a can of worms, I don't want to do it. Let's postpone this. Let's put it on the back burner to or we're talking about deprioritizing something. So, in a sense, the way that you're going to use this is you you're basically saying, I don't want to deal with something now. We're going to deal with it later.

because it's not important right now. It's not a priority. And you might say, "Okay, you bring up a good point, but let's put it on the back burner. We'll deal with that later." So, think about cooking. When you're preparing food, the thing that you're focusing on now is in front of you. It's on one of the front burners because it should be closest to you. When you're cooking and something is ready, you're going to deal with it later. then you may move that food to the back burner because it's not a priority at that moment. You're you're cooking something else. So really again, the the phrase means what it says if you want to think of it in the context of cooking, which is where it comes from.

And you put something on the back burner. You're not going to deal with it now. Okay, I forgot about this uh idiom. Uh this uh this this cat uh just falling asleep on the stove here, kind of joking like it's a a neglective uh kitten uh has been put on the back burner and it's not a not a priority in this case. So, how about uh how about this one? You say something exactly right. Look at the picture. I I'm kind of I feel like I'm giving it away with the picture. This is a If you watch a lot of movies, TV shows, I am confident that you've definitely heard this phrase. But if you want to say to another person, well, you what you're saying is exactly right.

The you know, you you are absolutely right. You what? So, in this picture, I maybe I'm maybe I'm getting a little too close with these pictures because that is a picture of a nail. And when talking about saying or doing something right, and we're talking about a nail, the phrase that you could use is to hit the nail on the head. Well done. Um, pitcher KB uh Lai Kevin, well done. Well played. Here are some examples. And basically, when you would use this phrase, you're kind of confirming that what somebody has said is exactly right. Her um here are some sentences for context. Her analysis hit the nail on the head. Or during the debate, the candidate hit the nail on the head when discussing the root causes of inflation. And what you're saying is right, you hit the nail on the head. or when she said the project failed due to poor communication, she really hit the nail on the head. So, what she was saying was exact, it was correct, she hit the nail on the head. So, this is a useful idiom. Uh, it is again it's idiomatic a phrase that you can use when you want to say that something was exactly right. Uh, another phrase I see people putting like you mentioned, um, yeah, you nailed it. That would be another way of saying the same thing. I do think maybe that's a little more informal, but still even this because it's idiomatic, it's also quite informal. Uh but to tell somebody, yes, what you said is right. You nailed it. Uh that would be another way of of saying it. Perfect. So here are a list. This is a little bit of review. Remember, you can get these lesson notes. Uh join uh our community.

Actually, did I even maybe maybe I didn't even make that announcement. Maybe it slipped my mind. I can't believe I forgot. I apologize. That mistake is beyond the pale. So, if you want to get these lesson notes, maybe I did mention this. I don't know. Um I haven't gotten much sleep lately. Click on the link down below in the description. You can join uh my community. If you're already a part of it, then check your inbox and I have sent them to you. So, just as a little bit of a review, uh, right here, these are all of the phrases that we talked about today. Keep in mind, they are more advanced. So, they they're very useful if you want to be a little more precise because you could use them in specific situations. If you want to say, well, this is hard to accept. It's a really uh, you know, this lesson is coming to an end. I apologize. It's hard to accept. I know it's a tough pill to swallow, but I am going to continue doing more vocabulary lessons like this.

Advanced Verbs (C2) to Build Your Vocabulary

I'm sure you relish learning new vocabulary and in today's lesson I want to teach you some Advanced C2 verbs and because I just mentioned it let's begin with the verb to relish what this means is to like or enjoy something and really you're just adding a bit of emphasis so as I just said I'm sure you relish learning new vocabulary you enjoy it and and you know that you're enjoying it and you can follow this verb with either a gerund or a noun so to give you a couple of examples with gerunds I could say I relish traveling to Exotic locations or I relish eating ice cream on a hot summer day and then if you're gonna follow it with a noun there are some common collocations and these are words that are frequently used together so you may relish the thought thought Prospect or idea of doing something or you may relish the chance or the opportunity to do something and those are some useful collocations when it comes to pronouncing the verb it has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable relish she won't survive I don't relish hurting anyone Stephen well Victoria relishes her status is Queen B right pathologically and if you are someone who relishes learning new vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and as we go through the lesson and I talk to you about these different Advanced verbs I'm going to talk to you a little bit about the pronunciation as well because I tried to choose words that that may be a little tricky to pronounce like this next verb coincide so this verb has two meanings the first one is to happen at or near the same time and often you're going to follow the verb with the preposition with so you would say that something coincides with something else and you're not really talking about everyday activities like going to the coffee shop coincides with this you're talking talking about events that may not occur regularly so I could say look I'm sorry I can't go to your birthday party because it coincides with a business trip that I have to take it's happening at the same time it also means to be the same or similar so I could say if our schedules coincide then we can plan to travel together we'll we'll take the train if our schedules coincide and they're the same for pronunciation the verb has three syllables the stress is on that third syllable coincide and just keep in mind the c-o-i-n it's not pronounced as coin two different syllables Co win coincide to coincide with something and then we have the verb squander I like this verb even though it has a negative connotation because it means to waste money or supplies or to waste opportunities by not taking advantage of so in the United States which is where I am from I could say many people feel that the government squanders taxpayer money and they just waste that money you may also hear people use this in a statement and say hey don't squander this opportunity that is a collocation to squander an opportunity for pronunciation the verb has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable squander and keep in mind that squa has that sound to squander something screw you wanted your gift I honored my gift made 68 albums did I want to be made manager sure a great opportunity squandered absolutely a crushing blow yes right now I want to take a moment to thank the sponsor of today's lesson which is Elsa speak and there are many Learners who relish using Elsa speak to fine-tune their pronunciation so if you are unfamiliar with it then let me show you how it works you just download the app create an account and there's so much that you can do practice daily lessons improve pronunciation let's say that we want to study by topic and there are a variety of different topics to choose from so I would like to practice small talk and as you can see there are many different lessons to help you practice and improve but I think the best part of the app is to practice words and phrases that you want to learn so let's say that we put in the phrase don't squander this opportunity and then you can listen to it don't squander this up opportunity and in practice don't squander this opportunity and let me show you what it looks like if a mistake is made and I mispronounce that verb don't squander this opportunity [Music] instant feedback which then allows you to try to make adjustments and right now when you click on the link below and download the Elsa speak app you can get seven days of the pro membership for free but you can also use my discount to get 85 percent off a lifetime membership or 40 percent off a one-year membership as I said don't squander this opportunity check out the links and discounts in the description if you'd like to practice and improve your pronunciation and before you know it you'll sound just like a native speaker the day that I created this lesson and it's just using the verb in context so hopefully that gives you a better understanding when pronouncing this verb it has four syllables the stress is on that second syllable commemorate commemorate and just keep in mind that first and third syllable have that schwa sound that unstressed vowel sound which sounds like commemorate commemorate and the next verb that's that's your hint what verb is that oh and the verb that I'm talking about is gasp gasp and it has two different meanings and it's really a difference between talking about well one breath or many breaths so the first meaning is to take a short quick breath through the mouth because of shock pain or surprise it's just that one breath oh gasp and people may use this as an interjection and saying something surprising like and he never returned home and saw his family again gasp or it's used in storytelling with those dialogue tags to describe speaking help me he gasped it also means to breathe loudly and with difficulty really trying to get more air and in this case it's several breaths and often people may end up using it in the continuous tense gasping I could say that the wave knocked me over and I was gasping for air that is a common collocation with this verb to say that someone is gasping for air when it comes to pronunciation I think the most challenging thing about this verb would be saying it in the past tense gasp it's a regular verb so in the past it's going to end with Ed and because that final sound is voiceless the Ed is going to take on a t sound so we have the sound followed by the T sound which can be a little difficult it's going to sound like gasp gasped give it a try gasped excellent the next verb is intervene and this means to intentionally become involved in a situation in order to improve it or just prevent it from getting worse so if there is an argument or a fight someone may intervene I could say that the referee intervened to stop the fight they just did not want it to get worse I could also say the Federal Reserve has intervened in financial markets in order to stop inflation and they're getting involved in the situation to try to improve it now for pronunciation the verb has three syllables the stress is on that third syllable intervene one thing I want to point out when it comes to the American accent because I'm from the United States is when the T follows an n Sound especially in unstressed syllables it may allide and people may drop bit so instead of intervene you may hear someone say intervene so just keep that in mind in the United States you may hear both pronunciations one with the teeth intervene go ahead go ahead and intervene I'm just afraid you might be interfering while we're intervening and one without I want to say something terrible to someone I love I got [Music] there's two label this refers to a word or phrase that's used to describe the characteristics or qualities of a person event or thing and really in a way that's unfair so you may label someone as something that is a common phrase to label someone as something in my lifetime I have been labeled as a troublemaker uh at school when I was younger I've also been labeled as a slacker which is a noun that means someone who does not work very hard and of course I would disagree with this but it happens if we get the wrong impression of someone or something and we may label them as this thing which is usually negative now for pronunciation the word has two syllables the stress is on that first syllable label the other thing I'd like to point out is the second syllable it ends with that dark L which is that all sound and then if we're following it with the word as I told you that's a common phrase well then we can link that dark L with the beginning vowel sound in as label as label as they impose struggle in hachipanus the label this as criminals for pushing back the mortgage officer had messed up Miranda's application they had inadvertently labeled her as separated the next verb is imply and this is a very useful verb it means to communicate an idea or feeling without directly saying it and because you're not directly saying it people may use this verb when asking a question and they would ask what are you implying so I'm going to give you an example I'm going to imply something without directly saying it and I just want you to think about what it is that I'm implying so if I said gosh I really hope that you like this video Lesson and when I say like I'm talking about enjoy that you relish learning new vocabulary and if only there were some way for you to commemorate this lesson so that it gets labeled as a great vocabulary lesson and now I'm using it in a positive way it gets labeled as a great lesson if there was just something that that you could do to commemorate this video and I'm just pointing to that thumbs up because I'm implying that you should hit the like button and I think that you were probably able to guess that so when it comes to pronouncing this verb it has two syllables the stress is on the second syllable imply now I don't think the pronunciation is too challenging what I think is difficult about this verb is that it's sometimes confused with another verb which is infer and that's the next C2 verb that I want to talk to you about to infer something this means to form an opinion or guess that something is true based on the information that you have so if you see me and I'm just soaking wet what might you infer about the weather I imagine that you would infer that it's raining outside or maybe you see me and I'm really happy and I'm smiling grinning from ear to ear what might you infer I really don't know you can let me know down in the comments the verb it has two syllables and once again the stress is on the second syllable infer and I don't think the pronunciation is too challenging just try not to confuse those two verbs to imply to infer if by me you are inferring that I have BL Michael he wasn't inferring he was implying was I I see you guys are inferring that I'm stupid that's correct we were implying it you then inferred it the next verb is to speculate and I think this is a very useful verb because it's pretty common people do this all the time to speculate it means to guess possible answers to a question when we don't have enough information to be certain so we do this quite often because well I think people just like speculating about different things when trying to explain something that happened and we don't have all the answers and we may speculate or we're trying to guess what will happen in the future and we can only speculate to give you an example I could say journalists are speculating what the president may say in his upcoming announcement and I think in general it's well it's not always good to speculate or at least we should tell people that that is what we're doing because sometimes people will speculate and then others will just take that as the truth and it can cause some problems now the verb has three syllables the stress is on that first syllable speculate and I really think this verb is well pronounced the way it's spelled it's pretty straightforward to speculate succumb so to succumb has two different meanings and once again I'll show you some news headlines so that you can see how this verb is used in context so the first meaning is to lose the determination to oppose something and really you're just accepting defeat visit these popular tourist traps before they succumb to climate change this is how Israel's economy could succumb to populism Samsung is first to succumb to a slowing economy that is crushing semiconductors the next meaning is to die or suffer badly from an illness or injury battling Morocco eventually succumbed to injuries and in this case they're talking about their football team two succumb to injuries sustained after falling from mobile Tower when pronouncing this verb it has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable succumb and just keep in mind there is a silent B at the end of the verb to succumb and then there's the verb trudge to trudge means to walk slowly with a lot of effort especially over a difficult surface or when carrying something heavy and often you may follow this verb with a preposition trudge up trudge down trudge over trudge through maybe you had to trudge up a mountain or perhaps you had to trudge through the snow and in both situations you're walking slowly with a lot of effort for pronunciation it's just one syllable that d g has that J sound similar to the word judge these are rhyming words trudge judge the other other thing I'd point out is that if the verb is followed by a preposition that begins with a vowel sound then linking may occur trudge up trajector right something to keep in mind let's do a little review now I am not going to speculate as to whether or not you will watch another video Lesson I'm sure that you relish building your vocabulary and because you're still here right now then I'm just going to infer that you will watch another video Lesson because I don't think you want to squander this amazing opportunity to continue improving your overall English fluency and I really don't want you to succumb to any feelings of inadequacy when it comes to your language abilities I want you to stay positive I want you to stay motivated and I want you to continue learning new things all right that's a little review using these verbs in context if you enjoyed the lesson please hit that like button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

Advanced Verbs to Describe the Way Things Move

hey everyone today I want to teach you some new verbs and they are well they're kind of advanced verbs but they are all about movement these are verbs that you can use to describe different types of movement and what I've done is that I've put them in categories to help you better understand the meaning of the verb but also give you an idea as to when you might use these verbs so let's begin with walking and running if you're talking about that movement walking and running there are different verbs that you can use you can use strut and if somebody is strutting it's talking about the way somebody is walking and it is more of a very confident walk perhaps even an arrogant walk as well and you could say that that they are strutting

the next one is stagger and to stagger means to walk with great difficulty almost as if you are about to fall over and often I think you would use this verb in the the present tense like you're talking about something that's happening right now and you would say he is staggering or she is staggering and also I think it's commonly used when referring to somebody who who maybe has had too much to drink they've had a lot to drink they don't really have a lot of control over what they're doing and they're walking with great difficulty then you could say that this person is staggering then we have the verb to bolt and this is just to move really fast almost like a run and you might bolt to get somewhere for example I I often would use this if I'm talking about trying to get to an airplane and I'm late and I might say wow I bolted to the airplane I was running behind and I had to run I bolted to that airplane the next verb is slip and this is talking about moving that you're you're moving quietly so that somebody doesn't notice you and often you're going to follow this verb with a preposition so you might slip by someone or slip past someone both of those mean the same thing you're just trying to get by this person without being noticed you could also slip inside or slip outside of some place maybe you forgot something at work and you don't want your boss to see you you might slip inside the office and get whatever you need to get and then you're gonna need to slip outside because you don't want anybody to see you and then we have the verb to drag one's feet now this is an idiom and it means that you are moving reluctantly you're moving slowly but you really don't want to be moving forward and you could say well you know you're you're dragging your feet so for example let's say that well maybe you and I we're traveling somewhere and we're late we need to get to the gate and I'm like okay we need we need to go we need to bolt to that airplane plan but you just want to take your time a little bit maybe you're like hey let's go let's go get a snack before we get on the airplane maybe I'll say Hey you know stop dragging your feet we need to go we need to bolt now this idiom can also be used in other situations as well it doesn't always have to be talking about movement it could be referring to progress as well so if you have some work that you need to do but you're trying to avoid doing it you are procrastinating you could also say then that you're dragging your feet that you're trying to avoid working on some project you don't want to do it I think we've all been there before but maybe your your colleague your co-worker or even your boss might come over and tell you look you need to finish this project stop dragging your feet now let's talk about some verbs that you can use if you're driving or flying you're in the car you're in the plane and well one thing we could say is hitchhike to hitchhike and this means that you get a free ride with someone in in a vehicle so typically you're talking about driving you're you're on the road you're standing on the road you got your thumb out and you are trying to hitchhike to some location and perhaps somebody would stop and pick you up to hitchhike now I think it I don't think it's as common nowadays in some places people might even say it's dangerous but just so you know in case you see somebody doing it on the side of the road they are trying to hitchhike another verb which I think is very common nowadays is carpool to carpool with someone or carpool with others because it refers to traveling by car in a small group either to protect the environment or just to save money perhaps save on using gas and and people will carpool to work or they will carpool to school and they'll ride together in a small group to carpool then we have the verb LeapFrog and this just means to take turns moving ahead of each other so I think you would use this to describe a situation in which you're driving maybe on the interstate one person is passing the other and then they pass you back and then you pass them again and back and forth you go and you could refer to this situation and you are leap frogging each other to Leap Frog and I think this this happens uh when people perhaps are driving on an interstate and you want to pass a car and you go in front and then you're like okay I'm in front now and then next thing you know they pass you they just LeapFrog you and then you want to pass them again that is the situation in which you might use this verb or or hear somebody talking about it to LeapFrog then there's the verb swerve to swerve and you could use this if talking about driving or flying and what it means is it's a sudden change in Direction especially if somebody has been moving in a straight line and then they suddenly change directions and swerve to the left or swerve to the right to swerve and finally we have the verb soar which is really for flying because it just means that you were flying high and you could describe a plane and say that the plane is soaring through the air it is flying high it is soaring now let's talk about some verbs that you could use to describe the way perhaps certain animals might move and as I tell you these verbs I will well I'll tell you an animal that I think of and just to give you something to associate the word with so you could use the verb Glide to Glide and this just means a continuous motion and what I think of is perhaps a bird Birds might glide through the air or maybe you're talking about like a swan or a duck the way it moves across the water and you could say that it is gliding it is just just a smooth continuous motion now we could also say Slither and this is talking about moving by sliding and twisting and I almost always I would think of a snake and you would say that the snake slithers that is how snakes move they twist they slide and they Slither or you could use the word wobble I think of well I think of a penguin because it's talking about like moving you're like going back and forth from side to side and you're walking with uh you're walking in a way that shows that there is poor balance because when Penguins walk they they do they kind of shake and they almost look like they're about to fall over they don't have very good balance and you could then say that they look like they are wobbling they're just wobbling along and that is just that's how they move then we have the verb Gallop which I think is often used to describe the way a horse moves because it refers to an animal who is running and all four feet are off the ground at the same time they're running the horse is Galloping and then there is the verb wiggle and I've included this verb because I think you could use it with if you're holding an animal and you're holding the animal and maybe the animal does not want to be held so it's going to start wiggling it's going to move back and forth from side to side up and down and they're just these really small quick movements because maybe the animal is trying to escape perhaps you're holding a puppy and the puppy wants to get down and it just starts wiggling to wiggle now let's talk about some verbs that you can use to well talk about situations so in this case it's not really always going to be a physical movement that you're referring to but we're talking about a situation that you may need to move in one way or another let me give you some examples about what I'm talking about so the first one I have for you is approach to approach and this just means to get nearer and nearer to someone or something now we could use this verb to describe some actual physical distance some situation I could say well hey we are approaching our final destination we are getting nearer and nearer to this destination but you could also use it if there is some problem or situation that you don't know how to solve and you could say something like okay how are we going to approach this issue how are we going to get closer to it and in that case you could use the word approach how are we going to approach this issue how are we going to approach this problem what is our plan what are we going to do because we need to we'll get closer to it in order to solve it or or remedy some situation how are you going to approach this then we have the verb circumvent and what it means to circumvent something is to basically avoid something usually in a clever way you're trying to go around some type of obstacle for example maybe well a situation that all of us have is well we have to pay taxes and perhaps there is some type of tax we want to avoid we want to we want to get around this and you might try to circumvent the tax law and I could say well we discovered this new way to circumvent the tax laws and and we don't have to pay this tax so if you want to circumvent something you you're just trying to avoid it you're trying to go around it in some clever way and then we have the verb smuggle to smuggle something is to move something secretly and often I think you're we're talking about something illegal so you might hear it being used in the context of drugs people might smuggle drugs you could also smuggle other people but in either case you're talking about moving something secretly and yes it's often illegal to smuggle next is lag and this just means that well you're making slow progress and it's usually behind some other people so in that case it's quite often that you would follow this verb with the preposition behind to lag behind someone or or you're lagging behind you're making slow progress and well you're behind everyone else you are lagging and then we have the verb spiral which it means that something some situation it's getting worse and worse and it's becoming more difficult to control and quite often you would probably hear that entire phrase and you'd say that some situation it is spiraling out of control that's that's not a good thing you don't want any situation to spiral out of control so I hope this lesson was easy to follow I hope it was easy to understand these verbs by breaking them into these different categories because that is the way I wanted to approach this lesson that that is how I wanted to approach this situation because the next time that you see someone moving I hope you'll be able to identify that if if you see somebody strutting or maybe you see them staggering or perhaps you see somebody on the road hitchhiking you'll be able to associate that movement with the correct verb so that you can more accurately express your thoughts opinions and ideas as always I would encourage you to listen for these verbs try to identify them if you're reading something or even use them in conversation if you happen to be talking about the way something moves that's all for right now I will see you next

LESSON 189 OF 749

Advanced Vocabulary (slang) that You Should Know for 2023

hello and welcome to another live lesson in which I am going to teach you some Advanced vocabulary for 2023 and you can see down there I said useful slang words and phrases so I want to take a quick moment to tell you well why I chose these words so there were really three things that I was trying to keep in mind I was trying to think of some words that are probably new for you so that you'll learn some new words today I also wanted to keep in mind words that I think are relevant for the upcoming year words that you're likely going to hear if you're listening to well a YouTube video or a podcast or you may even read about some of these words um in online articles and the last thing that I the reason why I chose these words is I also wanted to present words that I think are a little more informal conversational which is why I say some of them may even be considered slang and I will I will talk about about that a little bit as we go through this because I'm from the United States and if I present a word that's slang just be aware it it's probably not used across all English varieties and also I think more likely younger Generations May tend to use those words so just those are the three reasons why I I chose them and as we go through this of course I want you to participate in the lesson I am going to be giving you this in the form of of a mini quiz that way you can write your answers in the chat uh if you know what word I'm talking about or even if you're watching this later just write your write the words in the comments I just love hearing from you and just want to make these lessons uh more interactive so here's the first one and this is this word is a form of psychological abuse in which you trick or control someone by making them believe things that are not true especially by suggesting that they may be mentally ill so this is not a good word it's not word that people are using it in a positive way but I do think this is a word that is more commonly you are becoming more commonly used and I'll talk about the context in just a moment I do want to say a quick hello to Vicky Gustav Svetlana great to have you here Lolly Rafaela Angela Takaya welcome welcome so the word that I'm talking about right now I see somebody gave the correct answer it's a form of psychological abuse you're you're kind of control trying to control someone's emotions by suggesting that they may be mentally ill and yes I see some correct answers the

the word that we're looking for is gaslighting now I will say that this is a verb to Gaslight however I'm giving you that ing word so I'm using it either in the continuous tense or as a gerund and I'll read these down here so I've uh as you can see a great way if you want to ever see how a word is used in context just go do a Google search put the words in quotes and then I would click on news and then you see all these news articles either using the word in the headlines or just using it in the article in general and just reading that information Nation gives you a better sense of how the word is used so gaslighting here are the the the headlines that they're using this word the first one says 18 signs of gaslighting and examples of how it plays out in abusive relationships the next one 10 signs of gaslighting and then that final one says stop gaslighting your kids so this is a word that I think

I think everybody can relate to in one way or another even though it's not a positive word whether you're talking to somebody who you're in a relationship with or a family member or a friend and we want to maybe control them in some way what other control something that they're they're doing or the way that they think and here are some examples um right here just some phrases that somebody might throw out if they're having a heated discussion or even an argument that could be examples of gaslighting if somebody says oh you're way too emotional um or somebody that next example like oh you're crazy and just imagining things again just suggesting that the other person is mentally ill in some way or that last one you're being too dramatic because I was just joking so these are are sentences that could be examples of gaslighting someone the other context in which I think you may hear this word probably more often this year in 2023 is you you start to hear it more socially and politically people trying to control and manipulate others for example you could say that in the United States when it comes to guns there are people who are always gaslighting and trying to control um the way people think when it comes to that social issue or even education the things that are being taught in the classroom and people might say something that's really provocative and it could be oh they're just they're gaslighting um so again this is a word that you know just listen for this upcoming year it's not a good word but one that I think you will um you will hear so the next uh the next thing that I want to say if I want to give you another example and I just want to make a quick announcement if I were to say oh if you're looking to practice and improve your speaking you're crazy if you don't sign up for my speaking course and that's just a little segue of me gaslighting uh just to let you know that yes if you would like to practice and improve your speaking you can check out my speaking course and up there not on this side up there you can use the code speak20 to get twenty dollars off so this is the course page I'll put a link right there in the chat if you want to check that out find out more information about the course such as the the price the class times there's a lot of information so yeah if you would like to practice and improve your English with me then yeah check that out the next one we're going to just move right in to the next question and this is a word that I think you'll hear this next year as well as subsequent years possibly for quite some time this is a word related to technology and we're talking about the internet considered as an imaginary area Without Limits where people can meet other people in virtual reality all right what would you call that imaginary space and there are actually I was quite a few different definitions for this word and I was trying to come up with one and and research one that I think was a little more accurate um so this is actually a word that there's a there's a very well-known company Lolly because you mentioned it that has now changed their name basically to this word because this is what they are hoping to achieve someday uh excellent Rafaela Eleonora um Manuel Rose Mina so to answer your question because I the first comment I saw was about Facebook and Facebook recently changed their name to meta which is short for the metaverse so I I like if when I do a Google search this is probably the simplest uh explanation for the metaverse if you this is the first time you're hearing this word is a fictional universe and there are video games uh games that have to deal do with the metaverse I've never played any of these games but again just to associate it with something like Roblox and fortnite there are also books that have to do with the metaverse uh so those are some other examples down there but as I mentioned before this is a word you're going to hear this this year and and in the future as well there was a lot of coverage talking about the metaverse in 2022 and it's something that I think people are going to continue talking about because it's really I think it's really kind of toward the beginning stages of developing this virtual reality but it's a good word to know a good technology word to know metaverse then the next word in and I think this one's a little more difficult it's talking about an influencer who gives advice on financial investments and this is something you would find these people on YouTube they start these Financial finance channels talking about stocks real estate and they're giving Financial advice what would you call these people and this is actually uh the word is a portmanteau I'll give you that hint and I'll also tell you in just a moment what a port meant to is um so what what would you what would you say uh is this word all right so now I see some like as financial analysis so this is a new word and like I said I think it's probably more slang and that's how I've labeled it but we're talking about a finfluencer so it's a port meant to a port manteau is just when you're talking about the blending of things in this case we're blending two words finance and influencer and we get influencer and I pointed it out down in the bottom probably this is a word that younger people are more likely to use because I think some of these people are more likely to be following and watching these YouTube videos these influencers talking about trading and stocks but the word that you could use for them which is a little more slang thin fluencer all right finfluencer so maybe maybe this is a new one it has not made it into the dictionaries just yet which is why once again I'm classifying it as slang then this is a this is a good word um and I think you've I think many of you have probably heard of this word it's talking about a holiday that you take it home or near your home rather than traveling to another place so you're going to you have vacation you're good you have holiday but you're not going to get on a plane or or get on a train and travel to some other place you're going to stay at home or you're going to stay near home what would you call uh what would you call this there is a word it is also a portmanteau all right we're going to follow up on that because we just talked about a finfluencer so what uh what other Port men to would describe this meaning right here uh great job yes Julia Angela um is it not we're talking about a staycation so once again we're blending the word stay and vacation to refer to a situation in which you know you're not going to be working but you're also not going to travel to some other place you're going to stay home and you could tell somebody yeah I'm just going to take a I'm going to take a staycation and just relax a little bit and unwind and then I'm gonna go back to work so it's a it's a staycation so again this is a fun word that has been around for I think well several years now and it's becoming a little bit uh more and more popular all right so if you're just joining us again I'm kind of quizzing you on some new and advanced words for 2023 and they are a little they're more informal and some of them are definitely slang I don't think this one not this one this is a phrase okay I'll tell you it's a phrase referring to a person who does temporary or freelance work especially as an independent contractor engaged on an informal and on-demand basis so you're not hiring this person as an employee you just need some work done from time to time um what would you call this there are a couple of different words that you could use there there's only there's well I'm going to give you one and I want to kind of follow up on that um so what what do you think any guesses as to the phrase that I'm talking about now you could say again two freelance is a verb the noun is somebody who is a freelancer and I think people that um are describing themselves in this way they would probably use the word freelancer that's not the word that I'm about to give you all right so can you think of another word another word that has the same meaning as a freelancer contractor is a little similar okay let me let me show you the answer and um again I want to follow up so we're talking about a gig worker and you could say gig worker I just mentioned I think freelancer is probably more common the reason why I chose this is because I wanted to talk a little bit about the word gig another collocation that you may find with this word is this one right here people talking about the gig economy that is a collocation referring to all of these people that are not necessarily employed by companies as actual employees but really just a bunch of Freelancers here are some companies that would be a part of the gig economy if this is a new collocation for you like uber um anybody can you have a car you could you know sign up and try to start working and giving rides for Uber or if you have a place you could start using Airbnb all right though that would be also a part of the gig economy or Fiverr is a site where you can find different gig workers or Freelancers to to help you out with different projects so I gig worker gig economy those are a couple of phrases that I think are you're more likely to hear in the future because I think there are more people that are just starting to work for themselves and instead of finding a job at a company they may work on different projects and they're part of the gig economy before a long time ago I would say before the internet if I would hear the word gig as a noun

I would think of somebody like playing music somebody in a band and they would say yeah this weekend I have a gig downtown and they're going to work and play music but nowadays the internet has really democratized uh jobs and in this case we have the gig economy full of gig workers the next one that I have for you so this it's another portmanteau okay I'll go ahead and give you that hint the the meaning of this word is to explain something to someone in a way that suggests that they are stupid used especially when a man explains something to a woman that she already understands what would you what what is this word and this is a little I tried to give you this visual right here to to reference what's going on all right I mentioned it's another portmanteau what is the word that has this meaning this is a word that has become uh a lot more popular in the last few years so excellent um I can't read the name sorry and then Peter yes so the word that I'm talking about and this is a verb and this is if this is new for you again this is good for building your vocabulary your comprehension I I would never say that okay you're learning these words that you have to go out and use them but again these are words that I think are relevant to the upcoming year and this is one uh that like I said it's become a lot more popular to mansplain so the reason why I think this is become more popular and out there is just part of you know the women's rights the movement uh equality and it's now referencing something that I think has happened for a long time but we're now able to label it kind of to call it out okay this is what's going on uh some guy is talking about something whether it's work related or something else some other topic the woman already knows about it but the guys oh let me explain let me tell you how this is done and you could say they're mansplaining so I added that like she's trying to say look there's no need to mansplain this is something that um even jokingly my wife would say to me like if I'm want to tell her about something that she already knows a bit about it and she could say look just you know stop mansplaining you don't need to mansplain it to me um and and this is what's going on you're it you're explaining something that she already knows I have had people in the the past ask me if it could go the other way like to woman's plane as far as I know I have not heard uh a a verb used like that but this is one that you can keep an eye out for then we have let's see this next one this one is a word that is more relevant to social media and one that I think was used or talked about quite a bit in 2022 and I can imagine that it's also going to be used quite a bit this next year and in the years to follow because I don't think social media is is going away anytime soon so we're talking about to refuse someone an opportunity to make their ideas or beliefs known publicly because you think those beliefs are dangerous or unacceptable what would happen to this person so for example if we're talking about a platform like YouTube If I say something that is incredibly controversial I might worry about YouTube refusing me the opportunity to keep sharing my ideas my thoughts and opinions so they would do this to me what what word can you think about it it has to it's related to cancel culture but it's not the the precise word that I'm thinking about um and I do wow thank you Vicky Gustav's but Lana I really appreciate the the super chat um send it send and send in love in 2023.

cancel culture censorship it's all part of the same conversation to kind of put a finer point on it I've given you some people here that this last year you could say whether you like them or not they were de-platform because of their ideas because of the stuff that they were saying um I don't if you're unfamiliar with them you have Andrew Tate right there who was recently arrested Kanye West I'm sure you've heard about why he's been in the media a lot lately and of course the guy at the bottom I don't think needs any introduction Donald Trump but yes that was something after the January 6 Insurrection or I think actually after the election and he was talking about all this fraud and stuff he was de-platformed he was taken off of Twitter so again when it comes to social media this is a word that you might hear people talking about if somebody is removed or maybe you want to say oh they should they should de-platform this person because their ideas are dangerous

then I have another I have some more for you hopefully hopefully some of these are new and again I'm trying to talk a little bit about the context and explain why I think they're relevant uh for this year as well as in the future so the next one is um this one it's a little it's not slang it's something that I think has been used a lot more in the last five years it's talking about the practice of answering a criticism or difficult question by making a similar criticism uh or asking a different but related question typically starting with the words what about okay that's your big hint down there at the bottom uh this person they it's a way of deflecting and saying like somebody is criticizing um something you said or something you did and you're saying well this is not bad because of this over here and you would start out with saying well what about this or what about when this happened or what about when this person said this thing this um this situation now has a name and people will talk about it and you would probably hear this more often probably in the context of news um covering different people and situations people trying to deflect and they would they would do this and I'm actually I'm a little surprised oh there it is excellent you gotta answer great job uh Paul thank you saving the day so we're talking I'm talking about what about ism so if you want to talk about this situation somebody is doing this you would refer to it as what about ISM there we are excellent Rafaela perfect so uh before I start with this one let me skip over there because this is the last example of what about ISM that I could think about and the headline of this article was FIFA president defends Qatar World Cup by criticizing Europe so I don't know if any of you watched the World Cup or if you saw this interview um it went it was it was pretty bad but this was a textbook example of what about ISM because there were legitimate criticisms about having the World Cup in um Qatar or Qatar I know there people use different pronunciations um criticizing you know the reasons for having it there that it was in Winter the stadiums and the labor that they use the laws the practices and instead of him addressing those he was just he started talking about well Europe and you know oh Europe has a bad history when it comes to the treatment of other people and the wars and he he wasn't answering the question at all but just saying well what about this well what about this or like the U. S has a a terrible history and it's like yeah well that's true but that does not mean that you can't criticize other things that are happening right now so again this is a way of deflecting and if somebody's doing this you could use this word to talk about that situation like oh this is a form of what about ISM now going back to this list right here this is a uh an article that I had found and it was talking about eight examples of what aboutism when people typically use this um talking about these different situations so if you're talking about like Finance uh you there might be a lot of what about ISM human rights which is related to the the FIFA example that I just gave you and it was a a textbook what about ISM uh or talking about performance or politics family disaster risk status quo uh there are a variety of situations in which somebody may do this and I think again it's just getting labeled nowadays people trying to say well what about this what about this and you say well that's just you know what about ism so again good word I think to know for the future uh and again not saying that you necessarily have to go out and like oh you need to use this word right away but really just listen for it because building vocabulary is not just about you using the words in conversation but also your comprehension as well really goes hand in hand the next one um is this right here someone who is extremely rich and Powerful especially a person from Russia who became Rich after the end of the former Soviet Union and you can see I put the Russian flag behind there and this you know after Russia invaded Ukraine this is a word that I think you started reading about or hearing about a lot more in the news and I think we're going to continue hearing about this in uh 2023. so this is a word to describe a person so this is a noun they're very rich and Powerful especially from Russia um and we're talking about somebody who is an what all right seeing some answers so again I think yeah many of you um you've heard this word you've probably read about it uh or heard it if you're watching the news and we're talking about an oligarch so I've given you some examples again just uh so you can see how the word is used in context often you're going to hear it used as the color a collocation a Russian oligarch even though in oligarch it doesn't have to be someone from Russia but typically uh you're often going to hear it in that way so just I'll read these headlines real quickly Russian oligarch seizes 400 000 Acres of Ukrainian farmland reported by The Wall Street Journal or next one Russian oligarch's yacht seized and Sardinia has disappeared from Port Russian Diplomat Indian politician Spar over oligarch's death and the final one Canada moves to seize 26 million from Russian oligarch Roman Abramovich so again this is a word that I think you will continue to hear this year which is why I have included it in this lesson the next one uh this one's a little more difficult I think at least in my opinion because I also would say it's a bit more slang and it's referring to content deemed humiliating on account of a Poster's looks and when I say poster like the content creator the person who's posting content the the posters looks Behavior or talent and the lack of apparent self-awareness about those things so this is a word it's an adjective that you could use to describe it you watch this video and you think it's rather you know humiliating it's embarrassing it's difficult to watch and you could use this word to describe it um again I would say it's a little more maybe I think it's a little more like slang I don't typically use it that much but I see somebody answered it down the comics excellent uh great job Satya rafella yeah we're talking about uh describing something that is cringe so the one thing I want to say which is why I say I think people will use it as slang um because you could also say the adjective cringy often with cringe you would use it as a verb to cringe and the adjective would be oh that's so cringy but nowadays people are using just cringe as the adjective and they're going to use it as a predicate adjective following the verb to be so I gave you this example you watch something online it just doesn't make you feel it's a little awkward and embarrassing to watch and you could say oh that video is just so cringe and you're not using cringy but you're going to use cringe as an adjective and I I added it down there that I think maybe more likely you might hear younger people using this and talking about it and saying something is cringe or it's so cringe then have some more hopefully again

obviously you guys got some of that um this is another I think this is a good word uh used to refer or describe the person who has performed better than anybody anyone else especially in a sport it does not have to be in a sport but just somebody who is the absolute best at this activity or this thing or this sport what would you call this person and to give you a little bit of a hint this is an it is a type it's an acronym and you would say this person is the what and I feel like uh you know I think many of you will get this because this is a word that I think um you you definitely hear and I think you keep hearing more and more about it talking about some of these athletes so great job Lolly um such as not Angela Manuel Mina uh

Alex Alexander we're talking about goat and you would say someone is the goat you're going to use it with the article the because again in this case you're you're talking about one person you're being specific and to give you some examples of people like we it was I said it's especially used when in sports and referring to the goat um we have Pele there famous footballer or is uh they would say in the United States soccer and again I was debating whether to put Messi in there or Pele I decided to put Pele recently passed away rest in peace um you know three-time World Cup champion amazing career the next one the middle picture Michael Jordan six-time NBA championship Champion uh they would consider him the goat when it comes to basketball and then in the final picture yeah because I'm from the United States I included somebody who's part of American football you have Tom Brady uh famous quarterback there who he continues to play the game the guys like 90 years old and he just keeps playing and you'd say yeah he's the goat so I said this is an acronym technically you would say it's initialism but goat just stands for greatest of all time and you'd say someone is the goat all right excellent I like the Emoji too the goat so uh let me let's let's move on to the next one um I think I have a couple more this is a word um that means aware especially of social problems such as race racism and inequality it's a word that I think has been a lot more commonly used in the last few years I think people will continue to use it this year you'll probably hear it a lot if you watch news and I would say you hear this word related to politics but really referring to like social uh especially like a lot of these wedge issues um and you would say somebody is what all right so again I feel like when people really start throwing out the words quickly it makes me think okay yes it's like I said it's pretty common you've heard about it before um excellent Dr Miro uh yagmore Angela um Muna rafella so I'm talking I put those eyes back there again talking about becoming socially aware the word that I'm referring to is woke now one thing I will say about this word is when if I just talk about oh somebody becoming socially aware and you would say oh that's that's a good thing if somebody is woke but just be careful with this word if you're not not necessarily when if you're using it I don't know if you'll find yourself in a position to use it but if you're reading about it or listening to someone else use this sometimes they'll use it in a like negative way and they're basically trying to say that in that context like something's gone too far so it's a word that you may hear people use and in either a positive as a like in a positive way or a negative way so just keep that in mind I put these uh article headlines in there so you could see how it's used in context talking about the US government's woke training so in this case I I think they're using it in a negative way saying that oh the government's going to woke um especially coming from the Wall Street Journal the next one also same way New York Post more conservative newspaper and they're talking about the woke University implosion and what comes next and that's another criticism that people will talk about like oh universities are becoming too well Oak the Chattanooga Times Free Press opinion yes I'm woke and proud of it uh the next one James Cameron learns the hard lesson you're never woke enough I don't know if that's referring to Avatar 2 I have not seen the movie so I don't know and then the final one uh why do anti-woke free thinkers have the same opinions so this is a word that I think it's really emotionally charged because people are either using it in a positive way talking about we need to become more woke or others trying to really I I guess say that that things don't gone too far and they're really talking about it in a negative way so again it's a word that you're going to hear a lot about and just you know you'd have to just put that in context is somebody talking about it in a positive way or a negative way um just keep that in mind but again good word for 2023.

then we have this word which I think I think this one's going to be tough to guess even though I think you've probably have heard this word before but the meaning is something that's very impressive spectacular awesome there are many different synonyms when it comes to these words right here but this is a word that I think has also become a little bit more slang and because especially in the United States and I would also say you're probably more likely to find younger people using this word I feel like if I use it it may maybe it'll sound a little awkward I don't know I'll try to use it in just a moment and you can tell me if it sounds natural or it's like ah Wes I think you're too old for this word so I told you it'd be tough to guess because there are so many synonyms when talking about something impressive or spectacular or awesome so I will go ahead and tell you the word that I'm talking about and that is epic saying something is epic now I'll point out that this is an adjective I think often before people would use this adjective before the noun and talk about well an epic tale but using it more nowadays like is a little bit of slang people might use it as a predicate adjective following the verb to be like well the waves were epic or his skills are Epic or the trip was epic and you're basically saying that yeah it was amazing it was spectacular and I mentioned down here that a lot of younger people may likely use this word I hope that you find these lessons to be epic and if you do please hit that like button let that's how that's how you can let me know if you think my lessons are epic all right so um again just a fun word that I wanted to include and oh here's a good one um that I think you you would definitely hear this in the United States it's you know has a negative connotation you can see right there an insulting way of referring to someone who is considered by some people to be too easily upset and offended so I'll give you a hint that I think often you may people who are talking about things related to politics might use this word to insult a group of people and they are going to call them what and oh another hint I guess you could say I didn't even I totally forgot that I put it in there just look at the picture all right what is that a picture of and that's your answer right there so excellent um Dr Miro uh Manuel thank you Eleanor the lesson is epic glad I'm glad to hear that uh so we're talking about well Karen's a good one that that would typically again only be talking about a woman if saying somebody's a Karen in this case uh we're talking about a snowflake so and and I said that people might use this more politically and you hear words like like a collocation people say oh these liberal snowflakes like referring to the group of people that they get too easily upset or offended or like in this example right here um this news broadcast is talking about younger people that maybe they're too they get too easily upset and they they have that screen up there it says generation Snowflake and it says the word snowflake has become the norm to describe Generation Z but what does it mean to you so again this could also be an example of like this news channel is just gaslighting and just trying to provoke that emotional response by calling these younger Generations a bunch this younger generation Generation Z just a bunch of snowflakes so again this is a word that you may not necessarily need to go out and use uh and that you're going to need to use in your conversations with people but again it's relevant to this year because if you're watching um the news or reading the news or or listening to others you you may hear people use this word again in a derogatory way to to say that somebody just gets too easily upset they're they're a snowflake so the next one where is it right here okay this again this is slang a person who is silly or not intelligent this is not a word that I use I I feel like I don't know maybe I feel like I'm too old to use this word I told you it's I think it's more slang and I couldn't find an example um I put Homer Simpson in there and I think it will make sense when I tell you the word but of course you can see that this meaning right here a person who's silly not intelligent I think that applies to Homer Simpson hmm excuse me so I'm getting I like some of the answers that uh you guys are putting in their dumb nerd dork okay those are those are great words it's not the one that I'm thinking of uh here again just to give you a little bit of review these are the words that we just talked about in this lesson and I I do think that they are relevant for 2023. I hope some of these are new for you um helping you build your vocabulary improve your your listening and reading comprehension and perhaps you find yourself in a position that you could even talk about these in conversation if there's somebody who's saying all this crazy things online you're like oh yeah they should get this person should be de-platformed or talking about that happening to someone else or again people using those that situation well what about this well what about this oh yeah that's you know that's what about ISM and of course you're probably if you you're interested in technology you probably see Mark Zuckerberg give interviews talking about the metaverse and how it's coming but other ones again you could you could definitely use goat is a good one that I think is pretty Universal talking about somebody who's the best at something so let me know in the chat if you learn some new words I'd like to I'm I'm curious to know which of these words were new for you but I thought this would be a good way to start out the New Year building your vocabulary talking about some Advanced words that I think are relevant to this upcoming year words that I think you will hear about watching videos listening to podcasts or even reading something online you may come across them so thank you thank you thank you for for joining me um great seeing you takayo um Lolly good to see you again Rafaela Mina violet sorry I need to drink some water just give some few shout outs at the end Christina uh Angela I hope that you have a wonderful day uh Vicky Gustav Svetlana Crystal Jorge Mina okay I should wrap things up um yeah because I need to drink some water I hope you have a wonderful day I wish you all the best in 2023 a lot of cool stuff coming out this year a lot of fun lessons that I'm really excited to share with you guys and I will see you very soon oh Frank too uh

Advanced Vocabulary (slang) that You Should Know for 2024

Let's learn some new English words. And I I say new because these are words that have been added to the dictionary this year, but I I think some of them you may be familiar with and others you won't be because they they are considered slang. I'll be perfectly honest, some of these words I did not even know. And that is why I said this is advanced vocabulary for 2024. So these as I just mentioned are words that were recently added to dictionary.com. Now of course there are many different online dictionaries. In some you will find certain words and phrases that you may not find in others. So specifically these are ones that have been added to dictionary.com.

I am going to quiz you. So I want you to participate in the lesson. Write your answers in the chat or even in the comments because again this is interactive English. I want you to participate and make this really an active learning exercise. Let's go ahead and start with our first question right here. And as we go through this, I'm I'm going to start out a little easier or at least I think I am because I'm going to give you one word that's part of this phrase and I'm giving you the meaning as well. So for this one, this noun phrase is the practice of spending many hours in bed during the day, often with snacks or an electronic device, as a voluntary retreat from activity or stress. And I I will say this is one that I was not really familiar with before I put this lesson together, but I I think it's more common among younger generations as far as trying to alleviate stress. You've had a busy day or you feel frustrated. So, you're going to engage in this activity in which you're just sitting in bed with your phone or whatever it is trying to unwind. And you might call this bed. So, I'll give you a moment to think about it, see some answers. If I see an answer in the chat, I'll I'll let you know. Uh you guys are close thinking about what what would happen. Uh, but the answer is bedrotting. So, bedrotting is this idea, this practice. I I imagine it's some it's something I've I've done. I didn't know what it was called, but I'm going to spend some time in bed with my phone. Maybe I I don't really eat um I don't really eat any food in bed, but maybe that's just me. But that that's what this is called. It it is the idea of bed rotting. to give you some examples because again I don't don't want you to think I'm just making this all up. Um here are some news headlines using this phrase. So is bedrotting good or bad for your sleep. What is bedrotting? Gen Z's newest self-care trend explained. I told you I think it's a kind of a new thing among younger generations. And the final one, what is bedrotting rotting and is the Tik Tok trend even good for you? I I think that's something I also came across that it became more popularized on Tik Tok and it's kind of taken off from there. This idea of bedrotting. Something fun that I like to do when I come across new words and phrases. I would encourage you to do the same is you could put it into Google and look at images and see what comes up. It's good to get a I'm a visual learner, so I think this helps.

This is what came up when I put in bedrotting. Now, it seems like the activity is supposed to be viewed as a positive, like to unwind and relax, but just looking at some of these images, it doesn't look like it may be a very healthy thing to do, just the the images that they're portraying when they show bed rotting. But now you know what this activity is called. This next one is for all of you. If you happen to drive an electric vehicle, perhaps you may know this phrase. Again, it's one that I was not familiar with before putting this lesson together. I think it makes sense. And perhaps even if you don't know it, you can maybe piece it together. M anxiety.

And this is the apprehension or fear that an electronic an electric vehicle's battery will run out of power before reaching one's intended destination or a charging station. So often the the word that's missing is a word that I think is associated with electric vehicles when talking about the distance that they can travel. So this this really makes sense. If you have an electric vehicle, you want to get from point A to point B or or to some other charging station and you don't know if you're going to make it and you feel like you have m anxiety. I again I think that that makes sense, power anxiety, but that is not the the phrase that we're looking for. The one that was added recently to the the the dictionary we're talking about. I I mentioned this is a word that you might use when talking about electric vehicles. And you might say, okay, what is what is the range? If if the battery is fully charged, what is the range that I that I

It's a highly contagious but usually mild respiratory infection in dogs characterized by a dry hacking or gagging cough and caused by a number of bacteria and viruses. And again, this is not one that I'm familiar with. Um, my family had a dog uh a long time ago, but uh not one recently, and you may refer to as m cough. The word that is missing is a word that I I will explain and talk about, but it's a word that I think is a um if if somebody owns a dog, it's more relevant. You may use it, you may hear it. Uh, it's not. That's a good guess. Not canine cough.

Uh, that's a good guess. We're We're talking about this. It's contagious. So, where might a dog be that they're exposed to other dogs and therefore something is very contagious and that's when they might pick up the that's where they might pick up this cough. It's a little bit of a hint, but in case you're wondering, the place where a dog might be is a kennel. So, it's referred to as kennel cough. Now, just that word alone, a kennel is a place that uh they they may do several things. You could bring your dog there for boarding. If you're going to go on vacation and there's no one to look after your dog and you can't bring your dog on vacation, you may bring your dog there for training. And this is it's a place that when um when I was younger, we had a dog. If our little dog, nobody could take care of it, we couldn't travel with her. We brought her to this kennel and she might stay there for a week. They had a space and they would feed her, take her out. There was also um a vet that was attached to the kennel. So other people might bring the dog there just to or their cat to go to the vet. But yes, you would say it is a kennel cough. So, for anybody who uh owns a dog out there, this may be a good phrase to keep in mind. Here's the next one. I'm I'm trying to make it a little more challenging because now I'm I'm giving you one letter. I'm giving you the first letter of the word. I I know that those those first uh few were a little challenging. Um so now, actually, it's getting more difficult. So, hopefully you can put this together. This is referring to a rise in prices, rents or the like that is not due to market pressure or any other factor organic to the economy, but it is caused by corporate executives or boards or directors, owners properties, etc. solely to increased profits that are already healthy or excessive. I gave you that image, that picture there of Scrooge McDuck swimming around in uh his money to as a little bit of a hint. So, when you think of Scrooge McDuck, what is a word that that comes to mind, an adjective, and then you could put it together with this meaning as far as an increase in prices, uh, and and you're combining it with this other word, uh, it's a portmanteau, which would describe Scrooge McDuck. And I think this is a one that I I had heard about this before. I had read about it um in news articles and I think some uh you of you as well. I see the answers.

Excellent. Manuel Talog, we're talking about uh Angela, good job. English fluency, greedflation. So, we have the words, you know, greed and inflation. We put them together and you could describe greedflation in which companies may be continuing to raise their prices not because they need to. It's almost like they're using inflation and they're just to make more money, to make some extra money. And it I think when this happens, companies will then blame inflation and they'll say, "Oh, it's because of inflation. We're raising prices." And really in the end, it's just to increase uh their profits. to give you an example and this is u when when I had uh uh heard about this or because I had heard about this talking about uh McDonald's not specifically this article but McDonald's has been accused of greedflation so for for example McDonald's revenue shoots up to 6.69 billion thanks to strategic menu price increases after chain was accused of greedflation. So if you follow any news related to the economy, especially nowadays where there there is inflation, you may certainly hear this noun and come across it. Greedflation. Good one. Good one to keep in mind. Here's another one that's uh more of a pop culture word that has been added. I'm giving you maybe a little bit of a hint. It is a proper noun. starts with B. An aesthetic or style featuring playful pink outfits, accessories, decor. This is another one that I was not really familiar with. Uh, I I I don't want to give it away, but I think the pink and talking about a proper noun, what do you think of something that uh was very popular? I I think even now, but especially last year with the release of a new movie. And I probably now I'm giving you hints. movie, pink, a capital B, and you're probably thinking of Barbie. All right, excellent. Uh, all right. You're on the You're on the right track. That That is not the Barbie, yes, is the the the movie, the toy, but the word is actually called Barbie. And again, I had no idea, but this idea of these pink uh playful pink outfits, I I think because of the movie, you could say, "Oh, Barbie core. Barbie core is a new thing. This is an example of famous celebrities who I guess are engaging in Barbie core and wearing these these pink outfits." So, I think many of you got the Barbie aspect of that. uh pelagoya vidia Julia. But as far as this noun uh the one that was added to the dictionary, barb again, it's a proper noun. I had to check that because I want to make sure. So if you are going to use it or you see this, it's a capital B. I've never seen these words. Yes, some many of them. So far, the only one that I knew before was greedflation. So, the next one, this is another one that I did not know. My wife was making fun of me because I had not heard about this. And I think it shows you that I just I'm not one who stays on top of fashion or I I don't do uh a lot of shopping um in clothing stores. But I was actually surprised when I started looking into it. I was seeing this word all over the place. We're talking about a jacket in the style of a button-down shirt made of a thicker fabric and usually worn over other shirts. What would you call this clothing, I guess? And I'll give you a hint. It's another portmanteau. It starts with the letter S. And this one maybe perhaps you can piece it together. What do you think you would call this? A what? You're talking about two different things, a shirt and a jacket, and we put them together and you get a jacket. Again, I I had never heard about this, but when I started looking into it and just going online, if you were to look at H&M or Zara, um any clothing store, they have a section with jackets. And this is an example of Amazon. I did a search and you see these um uh jean jackets for women fashion oversized button-down denim jacket uh western fall shacket jacket or this women's fashion crop shacket button and you just the list would go on and on with these different uh advertisement or promotions for these shackets. And again, my wife was making fun of me cuz it seems like it's a popular thing or a common thing that if you shop or looking for different clothes, uh you may come across a shacket. Nice. All right. Saw some good answers. Good. Um uh Ravi unleash. So it seems like some of you you're familiar with this. Uh you're more on top of it than I am. Now, maybe this is a little more challenging. I'm just giving you the meaning and I want you to complete the the this is a phrase. Don't overthink this one. This is the study of fire with specific disciplines that include the composition of fire, acceleration and suppression of fire, prevention of fire, control of wildfires and fire related consequences of climate change. There there are two words and I'll go ahead and tell you one of them is fire.

So I I said don't overthink it when you're talking uh the key word in there the the study of fire. So, the study of something you might refer to it as fire. What? And yeah, I if this was added to the dictionary in to dictionary.com this year, we're talking about the study of fire. And even if you didn't know, maybe you could kind of piece it together. The study of something would be the science. Fire science. Nice job, English fluency. So, fire science, it would just be the study of fire in all of these different forms. This is a phrase that was added to the dictionary. I like that. Fireology. Maybe that could also that that may also work. But nice job. Um, who else? Julia Angela Lai. Excellent.

Fire science. Here is a word and this is slang, but again, it was added to the dictionary this year, dictionary.com. It's the shortening of the word delusional and it's used in a specific context which I will explain but I think probably you could maybe put it together. You're shortening the word delusional and you are going to describe someone as being what in in using this word I think it's more used in the context of pop culture and especially music and you could say oh these people are what we're taking delusional we're shortening it to this slang term which has become I more and more popular because again it was just added to the dictionary. Uh in case you're wondering, the answer is dulu. So dulu is a slang uh is a slang shortening of the word delusional. Well done uh Miranda Julia uh Ravi. So here's the the this is the information that they gave that they provide in dictionary.com. I'm not going to read all of it. I said um it's but it's especially used to describe super fans or dating partners who display extreme or odd behavior. I I think this kind of started with like these super fans in K-pop that they would they were so obsessed and they would have this really extreme behavior and people started using this term dulu. So dulu is used as an exaggerated synonym for delusional especially online. And the slang dulu is often used to describe people who act strangely or obsessively because of a perceived delusional mindset in uh it's generally used to describe obsessed fans or dating partners who act erratically. So you could describe these erratic people if they're so obsessed as wow these people are dulu. Most of the time it says uh it's used as an adjective, but it does seem like you could use it as a noun as well. They gave that example sentence at the very end. Some dulus were waiting outside his dressing room. One to keep in mind, personally, again, I think many of these words were they were new for me, but they're new for you as well. Keep in mind, many of them are slang, so you're not going to probably you're going to hear these more often in spoken English. You may not see them as much in writing, uh, except if you're reading maybe a news article about the word. So, most of the time you're going to hear this in spoken English, being used in spoken English. So this is a word again I believe it's slang referring to um mediocre unimpressive or disappointing that is the meaning again it would it's an adjective so you would say that something is it's mediocre it's unimpressive it's disappointing it's what it's a very short word and this is one that I had I've heard before. I have not used it. I don't I don't use many of these words. Probably the only one that I probably have used is uh that we've talked about so far is greedflation. But if something is mediocre, unimpressive, or disappointing, you may say that it is mid. Mid mediocre, unimpressive, disappointing, mid. I like the answer. Meh. That's also uh that that's also then finally that bottom one, fivestar team performance and Muduk is still looking mid. So in each of these tweets or I don't know what you would call them now on X someone is using this and that is again you could use these in writing informally like that or you may see them written in song lyrics but in general for any type of professional writing whatsoever I would not encourage you to use any of these words. This is a food one and it's kind of near and dear to my heart, so I wanted to include it in there. It was added to dictionary.com. This is a colorless, clear, distilled alcoholic beverage from Korea, often made from a mixture of rice and other starches such as sweet potatoes, wheat, barley, tapioca, etc. I say this is close to my heart. I used to live and teach in South Korea. And this is a this is an alcoholic drink that I am familiar with, but I I not sure what the criteria is for adding words one year and not another year. Of course, this has been around in Korea for a long time, but it was added to dictionary.com this year. If you are, if you've traveled to Korea or maybe you enjoy Korean food and you go out to Korean restaurants, this uh is a beverage that you will see on the menu. And of course, if you travel to Korea, you're you may get offered to some of this th those green bottles right there. And we're talking about I figured many of you would probably get this uh Soju. We're talking about Soju.

Great job, Lai Angela. Uh, English fluency. And I honest personally, I've had it on many occasions, especially when I was living there. It's not my favorite drink in the world, but it is very common in South Korea. Soju. This is one that I heard of before. It's I I was surprised that it was added. I think this word I'd been using it over the years. And this is the practice of purchasing an airline ticket for a flight with a layover at one's cruise destination, getting off at the at the layover point and skipping the last leg of a flight. So if you fly often, perhaps you've come across this word.

Let let me explain it. It's almost like if I am traveling from New York City to Denver and I look at flights New York to Denver and it's really expensive. But then I find a flight to Los Angeles, it connects through Denver, so it goes New York, Denver, Los Angeles, and it's a much cheaper flight. I really don't know how this happens and the these airlines and the way they price things, but I think, well, this is a cheaper flight. I'm going to purchase this flight. Once we uh arrive in Denver, I'm just going to get off and uh then the plane's going to go on to Los Angeles without me. This is something that airlines don't like.

They I feel like they try to even charge people or punish people for doing this. But this is the this practice has a name and in again if you travel a lot you may come across it. You may read about it um in the news because it is something that airlines I think are trying to crack down on. They're trying to crack down on this and stop people from engaging in this practice, which if you're not familiar with it is, good job, English fluency, Angela, skip lagging. So skip lagging is this practice of just getting off at the the layover destination, which is your final destination, and not going on. And and you do this in order to save money. to give you some examples. Again, if you put this into Google, there are a variety of ways that you can see how it's used in context. I I mentioned showing some images if you're a visual learner and to see how it's used. In this case, I put it and then just put some videos. There are videos talking about skip lagging. So, these are some video titles. Skip lagging. Great way to save money or illegal booking. Uh the next title, clever but risky. What to know about skip lagging? Travelers turn to skip lagging to save money on flights. And then the final one, why airlines hate skip lagging. So this idea of skip lagging. You're getting off at the layover point instead of uh what the tickets final destination says. And again, if you fly a lot, this is a word that yeah, you may come across. And then finally, another phrase that I feel like I've heard before, but again, this was recently added to dictionary.com.

Refers to cash reserves, liquid assets, or easily liquidated assets such as stocks and bonds held by a corporation or an individual in order to cover current or future obligations, make new purchases, or take advantage of unforeseen opportunities. the image in the back. I tried to give you a little bit of a hint. I'm not sure if you're really going to be able to make out what that picture is, but if you can, that's uh well, it's part of the word, but if we're it's really just referring to money that is liquid that you can use however you want. So, if you follow um finance and some of these TV shows or programs that will talk about stocks and investing, then this is a phrase that you may come across uh if you're reading the news or or watching any of those programs.

In the that picture in the back, in case you were wondering, it does. I I kind of zoomed in so it probably looks a little weird. Uh but it is a picture of powder. So powder is part of this phrase. And if you're talking about cash reserves, you would say that you really need to have some dry powder. It's important to keep some dry powder uh in case you need it for some type of emergency and you need to make sure that you you always have some dry powder or um and and in that case again they're just referring to cash reserves mostly. You may hear this phrase being used in that context of investing or people who talk about money or finance. So, it's a phrase that I think is more specific to that that topic.

kind of curious because again, I always like to quiz you and see how well you did. I feel like before putting together this lesson, if I were to take this quiz, I don't think I would have done very well. But I want you to tell me how did you do on the quiz? And I I don't I'd be very impressed if you got all of them. I'll say I got most of them correct. Uh is one um I knew about half of them. And the third option I'll give you I knew about as much as Wes which would then be uh that that you knew very little that most of these were new and you you didn't do very well on the quiz which before putting this lesson together that's the category that um I would have fallen into. But it's always good to build your vocabulary in different ways. And in this case, we're talking about words that are new.

They've become popular in some way, shape, or form. And because of that, they're added to the dictionary. And we'll see if their usage continues over time. But because we're in 2024 right now, these words are relevant and you could try to listen for them and see if you come across them in the future. So, um, only one word. Uh yeah, I I I'm the same way. I feel like before this I had only heard of a handful of them being used. I knew greedflation, but I'd heard words like mid. I Oh, I knew soju, of course, uh and skip lagging, but uh I've heard words like mid and dulu being used. Uh and some of the other ones were definitely new. So, let me know how you did in the comments. I always love hearing from you. If you enjoyed this lesson and you learned something new, please hit that like button. It tells me that, okay, I should do more of these lessons in the future. Teach you vocabulary that is not as common. It's a bit more informal, but again, it's it's just good to to continue building your vocabulary in different ways and also have a little more have a little fun while learning the language as well. So, it seems like most of you are like me that yeah, you weren't familiar with many of these words, but that's okay. I hope that you enjoy the rest of your day and I will see

Advanced Vocabulary About the Housing Crisis | Read & Put Words in Context

hey everyone welcome to another interactive english live lesson my name is wes and if this is your first time here please write to me in the chat write to me in the comments i love hearing from new people but what this channel is all about just just about helping people practice and improve their english skills and today's lesson is related to both reading vocabulary and a little bit of current events so we're doing this a little bit of a different style with some of these lessons so the way that this is going to work today is that i've chosen a topic which is housing and we're going to look at different articles that are online news articles which i will leave links down in the description and we're going to look at those and try to understand the topic a little better and then identify certain vocabulary words to that will help you better understand this topic if you want to continue reading about it or perhaps you're listening to the news and you hear these words being used so it's really going to help improve your comprehension in that way

so right here we have i have my vocabulary list which we will be going through and i will put the meaning of these words down and i'll write them down and i will include these also down in the description below uh we have the website which we are going to be reading some of these articles um so that's the way that this lesson is going to work and i just first want to thank you guys for joining me today good to see so many familiar faces lolly sleepwalker angela alex um learning with tiktik hi how are you guys i hope that you are having a wonderful weekend so the topic that i want to discuss today is about housing now it's not something i'm going we're going to look at housing as a result of things that are happening because of the covid19 virus and the effects that it's having economically and what's that doing so this is not going to be it's information that's very important it's stuff that you may hear people talking about on the news in your country because it's affecting everyone but it's not something that's overly it's not very positive but it is something that's important and i think we need to discuss it so all of these articles are related to housing connected to what's going on with the virus and the economy and how this is affecting certain people so let's go ahead and begin with our first article all right and the name of that article is uh it's the next pandemic threat to the economy a wave of evictions so i'm gonna read through the article and then we'll go back and look at some of the words we're not going to read the whole thing but just kind of uh just the beginning the first part and then we'll look at some of the vocabulary words that will help you better understand what this article is all about um a wave of evictions and that is a word that we will come back to so let's look down here again i told you these are all articles this is current events these are articles from the past couple of weeks so it says the first of the month had come and gone and now in early july the man with the clipboard arrived at the apartments on north hopkins street a plane two-story brick building where grass and weeds grow scraggly along the street and broken furniture lies abandoned around the dumpster outback the tenants he was to figure the tenants to tenants he was a figure of doom on the second floor he stuck a folded eviction notice in the door of apartment 14.

her worries are increasingly shared by runners across the nation for several months during the coronavirus pandemic a combination of tenet grint grit landlord landlord forbearance and federal aid has helped people stay in their homes state and local bans on evictions have in many cases offered new reprieve now those eviction bans are phasing out along with key government support for unemployed workers with the economy far from recovered some of the steepest declines in income have been faced by low-income renters like miss appling by some estimates the united states could see more than 11 million households evicted in the next month so again this is an article about something that's happening in the united states but i think this is happening around the world as well so i want to look at the first word um right there it's kind of in the title it's talking about the new wave of eviction and what that word means so if you're talking about um where is it let's go talk about these two words right here a tenant when it was saying that the tenants are worried about this man with the clipboard a tenant is just a person who lives um typically their their renting rents um a place to live such such as an apartment so most of the time when people talk about tenants i think they're referring to people who are renting in a in an apartment building and you just call those people the tenants an eviction notice um they talked about those where somebody gets an eviction notice eviction is when people are forced to leave the uh apartment all right and in this case they're talking about people being forced to leave because they're not able to pay their rent because uh due to the pandemic people have lost their job and therefore they're not making any money they're not able to pay some bills so they're they're worried about this and they could get evicted from the apartment so you can use this an eviction would be a noun to get evicted um would be well it's a participle adjective and the meaning is the same where you are forced to leave and you have to leave and then the other one the the landlord um so the tenant is the person who rents the place the landlord is the person who owns um the property where a tenant lives so the tenant would rent the apartment and they each month they would pay the landlord all right so let's see okay so each month they would pay this landlord and therefore that those are that's their relationship you have the tenant and then you have the landlord now i want to continue on because basically right here it was saying um that so far after this people had gotten wait a second uh keep gotta switch back through many of these all right let's go back to the site so people that their worries are increasing her worries are increasing um shared by renters across the nation for several months during the coronavirus pandemic uh a combination of tenant grit landlord forbearance and federal aid has helped people stay in their home so basically you've had this situation hit and part of the reason they've been able to stay in them is landlord forbearance so the landlord is the person you pay forbearance uh which is the other word that i wanted to talk to you guys about so let's go back over to our vocabulary list um where is it so forbearance is when you um you do not have to pay uh for something or the payment is delayed so when you have forbearance it's often talking about money and because of some situation you don't have to pay then you can pay later and they say we'll give you forbearance another example i think in the united states it's very common that people have student loans so for example people have student loans and um therefore they they might get forbearance right now and that means they don't have to pay um they don't have to pay right now the money for the student loan they're getting forbearance and they don't have to pay at this point so again a couple more that i want to talk about ban and reprieve so let's go over back to the website and find those words um okay so it says now those eviction bans are phasing out uh which means if something is phasing out it's going away and a ban is just talking about you can't do it so when this happened basically the landlords were told you cannot evict anybody there is a ban you cannot evict anybody but that's going away so they're phasing that out and people are really worried about that because they say where is it um i wonder look at that number some of the stupid declines uh have been fading and these people may get evicted this is saying that they offered these people some reprieve let's look at those words that i want to talk about uh right here boom okay so a ban is when you are not allowed to do something so in this case they banned landlords from evicting the tenants and this for the tenants this was a reprieve a reprieve is talking about help or assistance to make a situation i'd say easier or easier easier to deal with easier to handle so you have this difficult situation as a tenant and they give you this there was this uh forbearance they didn't have to pay and that was a reprieve all right so these are good words that um i think that you can use that you will hear if you're talking about if you're reading an article about housing um when talking about eviction landlord forbearance these are words that may you may come across if you're reading uh some other articles so let me let's look at another article right here and then we are we're going to end on a positive note i promise you all right and the next article titled right here again it's uh this is more this is outside of the united states but something that's happening um around the world all right uh i probably i i

i'm sorry i'm not able to get into the chat as much and look at some of the the comments and stuff uh i have removed some people like because uh they're just not here to learn so i am looking at it in that regard and just getting those people out of here uh because this again it's all about learning english that is why you guys are here so let's look at the next article um which is titled wait a second let me go over here uh one billion people fear losing uh their home according to a new poll so a lot of people because of this are worried about losing their home uh or maybe they're renting they're worried about evictions like we just talked about so again i'm going to read some of it and then we'll go back and look at a few words and identify their meaning which i hope will help with your comprehension so let's look it says i'm going to start with almost almost 1 billion people around the world fear losing their home or land within five years with owners and tenants and burkina faso fossau and the philippines the most concerned a survey of 140 nations showed on wednesday about one in five adults 19 worry that their housing fields and other land could be taken away from them in the near future hampering their ability to invest or plan according to the prindex global poverty rights index i'm going to move down land and housing insecurity is a huge issue hiding in plain sight said malcolm childress executive director of the global land alliance a washington-based think tank that compiles the index with the british overseas development institute ten-year security is important for individual decision making and has knock-on effects on what people do with their assets whether they send their kids to school or invest in better crops he told the thomas routers foundation a lack of formal documentation and poor implementation of land laws threatened tenure in many countries experts say with more than

5 billion people lacking proof of ownership according to the lima based institute for liberty and democracy people in the philippines in burkina burkina faso um reported the highest levels of concern with nearly half the respondents 48 to 44 percent fear the um fearing their homes could be taken away that compared with singapore and rwanda which had the lowest rate of concern in the same two regions with four percent and eight percent respectively it's not surprising giving the unrest both burkina and the philippines that expressed levels of insecurity are rising said carol bordeaux chief program officer of land rights charity land sea violent conflict displaces many people and those left as well as powerful actors take advantage to seize properties she said in email comments so this is again i will leave a link to these articles down below this is one talking about a concern happening um all around the world specifically in those two uh countries uh burkina faso and the philippines that are concerned with um this situation of losing their land so the where is it um right here so the vocabulary words that i want to talk to you were about hamper to hamper something tenure land rights and seas so in the article let's look at where's that first one um hamper all right so

if we go back to the article it's talking about uh people are they fear losing their homes and land within five years they're talking about owners and tenants we just talked about tenants like people that would be renting um and they feel that their land is taken away that that might hamper their ability to plan or invest so if you if you're talking about hampering something it's refers to

let's go over here and we'll write that down to hamper means to i'd say to make it more difficult for something to happen or occur i'm giving you my definition pretty much off the top of my head i typically i will use cambridge online dictionary if i want to look up one of these words which i would encourage you to do as well but to hamper something it means you're making it more difficult for somebody to have the ability to do something and you might hamper their ability often you might follow it you might use that as a collocation to hamper the ability of someone if we're talking about tenure um all right just to kind of show you guys we can go back to um the website because i do i always leave cambridge open here uh and i do this is probably my website of choice tenure and i throw that in there it's easy to look up the meaning of these words it says being the legal owner of land

a job or an official public position of a period of time of which you own it so in this case we're talking about land so it's like being the legal owner of land and they're talking about somebody's tenure so uh i'll go back over here to our vocabulary document and target tenure the legal um ownership of land all right and i think they're talking more referring to like the period of time all right that this is uh able to happen land rights it says this was um definitely a concern with land rights and when you're talking about land rights it's basically talking about um land ownership all right land rights and you may hear the one the reason why i identified this one because you may hear people talk about land rights who is the owner of the land or water rights who is the owner of this river or this lake who owns this property now don't confuse that with the other meaning of rights if people talk about women's rights because that refers to right in that sense is talking about some sense of social equality that you want equality you want things to be fair so when you talk about women's rights or the rights of a certain group of people the rights of minorities they're talking in that case they're talking about social equality but in this case land rights water rights it refers to ownership and at the end of the article they said they're worried about this the property being seized and to seize something means to take something by force all right when property is seized um i'm going to whoop sorry i'll remove this down here when property is seized it means that somebody is taking it by force they're just taking it from somebody and they seize the property all right so this is again another article i'll link it down below but it refers to the situation that's happening at this time now let's look at the i have one more article for you all right the last article and i wanted to end on a more positive note all right because even in times when people are you know having experiencing difficult situations they're having trouble i often like to think others try to step up and work hard to make things better so i wanted to highlight an organization that i have worked with in the past and there was an article about them written right here so let's look at this article it's talking about uh boom habitat for humanity joined by major partners to launch homes communities hope plus you a global campaign to help communities build back from covid19 and this is what i want to talk about habitat for humanity so let's look at the article and again i'm going gonna try and um boom let me zoom in for you uh to hopefully make it a little easier to see okay i'll read some of it we're just gonna read a little bit of it and then uh we'll pick out some words and go over the the vocabulary so it says as people around the world continue to grapple with the public health crisis and the economic impact of kova 19

the importance of a safe and decent place to call home has rarely been more pronounced all right down here since 1976 habitat for humanity has helped families around the world secure safe affordable and decent housing build community and forge a path toward greater stability now in challenging times habitat is confronting the global housing need that has grown exponentially over the past months through its first of its kind homes communities hope plus you global campaign um the multi the multi-million dollar campaign led by atlanta-based habitat for humanity international and executed by hundreds and of federated habitat organizations across the united states and around the world will raise funds to address housing issues that have been exposed and exacerbated by the covid 19 pandemic the housing crisis is not new but the economic fallout caused by the covid19 pandemic has made it much worse jonathan reckford ceo of habitat for humanity international millions of people in unhealthy and overcrowded living conditions are more susceptible to the virus and millions of others are now facing impossible decisions between paying their housing or keeping food on the table we know the impacts of coven 19 are being felt most by those who can afford it least we know the disparate impact the pandemic has on communities of color communities already suffering as a result of systematic systemic racism that has often too often played out in housing policy homes communica uh communities hope you plus will enable habitat can continue critical work that you uh that we do best enabling families and communities to become stronger through safe affordable and decent housing so again this is a good organization i've worked with them in the past therefore i did i wanted to highlight it so let's go back and look at um some of the vocabulary words from the very beginning and it's talking about people around the world uh i want to highlight these first two they're trying it says can the world continue to grapple with the public health crisis so grapple they're trying to grapple with this crisis um which means that they're trying to they're dealing with it as best as they can so when you are grappling with something you're trying to handle or manage it and you're usually talking about a situation that is difficult that is challenging and you're you're trying to make the best out of this bad situation and you're trying to grapple with it and it says that the importance of safe and decent pla the importance of a safe and decent place to call home has rarely been more pronounced i want to talk about this word because if you say that something is pronounced it means that it is it is very important at this point it is it's very important that we need to acknowledge it because typically when people think about pronouncing something like they think of pronunciation the way you speak the way you say certain words or phrases but if you say something is pronounced it means that it is definitely noticeable it's easy to see that something is pronounced and typically in this case they're talking about a big problem so i want to go over here because just to make sure perhaps there's a little easier meaning to grapple with to grapple with something um yeah so it means to hold on um to hold on to someone and fight with them in this case um try and think if they gave another mean because you could grapple with like something that kind of is talking about physically you're grappling with somebody in this case they're talking about grappling with a problem in which case again i'll go back to my meaning of you're trying to deal with you're trying to fight this situation and deal with it the best way that you can so let's go over here uh sorry i got all these windows open today which is why uh it's so to grapple with something um is to to deal uh to handle something um something or fight against something in the best way that one can all right so you're trying to fight with it in the best way that you can it's a bad situation and they're trying to grapple with this situation again i said something uh if we're talking about something that is pronounced again if something is more pronounced it is easily seen or noticed and in this case they're talking about this housing problem it's very pronounced it's very easy to see it's very easy to notice so let's look at the next two funds and exacerbated um if we go back over to our site and the article down here um where is it those two words okay so habitat free humanity um what they're trying to do is they will try to raise funds to address housing issues that have been exposed and exacerbated by the covid19 pandemic if they're raising funds and often businesses will do this you talk about this is an organization they will raise funds funds is talking about money you want to raise funds you want to raise money and the issues have been exposed and exacerbated if you say that something is exacerbated you're talking about making it worse so let's add those two words to the list um funds and exacerbated so they're trying again in the article said habitats trying to raise funds they're trying to raise money and if something this situation has been exacerbated it's talking about um a situation that has become worse all right something is getting worse and worse you could you could say that it is exacerbated it has exacerbated this situation it's getting worse it's become worse um the next letter is fallout susceptible disparate let's go back over to our article and find where those words are so i said right here it said millions of people in an unhealthy and overcrowded living conditions are more susceptible to the virus all right so if somebody is susceptible to something it means they can easily get it so they are more susceptible to getting the virus but also to feeling the effects of the virus because oh i missed that first part it said the economic fallout if we're talking in this case

um fallout somebody said nard yes collapse that's another good synonym for it um i would say that uh well i'll use your word collapse and collapse or i'd say fast downturn so often i think like i said you might use it with economic the economic fallout and in this case they're talking about like the money the success of something and if there's a fallout then you have a very fast downturn and things get really bad collapse is another good synonym um if somebody is susceptible to something it means that they may easily um get something all right and often i think that something that you're talking about that you are susceptible it's referring to something that's not good something that's bad like somebody is susceptible to uh catching this virus that they can easily get it we're talking about a virus it's something that's unpleasant and disparate we said is something that is different in every way according to cambridge so let's see can you guys see these excellent so i will again i will leave these uh vocabulary words uh down in the the com description section in case you want to review um again i will leave links to these articles and the last thing one thing we do want we're starting to do with some of these lessons is to again try to use our platform to highlight some good things and highlight some positivity because there's so much negativity out there so we have this bad situation with the virus the economy and housing habitat is an organization that's trying to do good things so we wanted to highlight this and i told you this is an organization i don't know okay so i don't know if uh hopefully we'll see i'll find out later i i think things got disconnected and reconnected we'll see if it's still uh working the same i don't know um

so that is a picture of me in asuncion paraguay doing a habitat build and you get together and people work on building a house houses for a family the other picture in the middle is a picture of me i volunteered i worked with habitat when i was in costa rica i lived i spent about a year and a half in san jose costa rica um so that is a picture of me at an office and i was giving my first presentation in another language so i was actually i was speaking spanish i learned spanish and i was giving a presentation in spanish and i was so nervous um doing that and then the final picture is another picture of me in costa rica at a site doing a build with a bunch of volunteers so i would encourage you uh we're gonna make a donation to habitat for humanity international i'm leaving a link down in the description if you want to find out more information um about habitat for humanity international i will also throw a link here in the chat as well um and even if you can't make a donation that's okay i think it's always good to read about organizations like this especially if you're reading about it in english it's going to help you improve your language skills and it's nice to read about organizations or people that are doing good things and positive things because there's often so much negativity out there i think it's good so please check out habitat links are down in the description thank you guys uh for joining me for this lesson sorry that the kind of went in and out i hopefully hope that did not affect the lesson too much um but uh i will be back next week for another live lesson um so thank you guys uh marianna lally yasmina um pachu angela just give some quick shout outs at the end luciana sorry i couldn't make a little more conversation with this lesson i have so many screens open right now going back and forth between the websites and the vocabulary page um but this is something i want to do from time to time is talk about some current events uh build your vocabulary uh it's good for your comprehension but also try to highlight some organization that's doing good work um because i think we need more of that in the world today um uh ms izzy mary sleepwalker i hope you guys have a wonderful weekend and i will see you next time so long

Advanced Vocabulary Lesson | Take the Quiz & Learn New Words

so today is all about building your vocabulary and I will make this promise to you you are going to learn some new words today I promise you you will learn something new so what's up my name is Wes this is interactive English which is all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and today I have a vocabulary quiz that we're going to go through and these are all advanced vocabulary words so I expect this this this will be a bit challenging this advanced vocabulary quiz is going to challenge you but again I told you I made you that promise that you will learn something new now I'll just go ahead and say that that all of the words that we're going to talk about in today's quiz they are all words that we've already talked about these are words that we've had lessons from we we've don't we do lessons about advanced adjectives advanced nouns advanced verbs and those are linked down below in the description so even after this lesson if you want to learn more and build your vocabulary go check out those lessons they're listed down below in the description so I just want to give a quick shout out thank you guys hello Giselle Alberto atavistic Spartan Mohammed Jose Huang Valentino Allah ticktick hello hello hello thank you guys for joining me today I hope you guys are ready so the way that we're gonna do this is that I'm gonna give you some questions and I'm gonna throw in some vocabulary tips here and there that that's gonna help you build and improve your vocabulary because it's so important for your English fluency the more the more words that you learn and you can use that precise language then you can better express your thoughts your opinions and your ideas so let's just begin with the first vocabulary tip that I have for you and that is that this when people build their vocabulary I think it's normal to you you look you learn the word you look at the meaning and oftentimes that's as far as it goes you're like oh what does this word mean oh okay I guess that's it I would say don't just learn the meaning try to learn how to use the words in the correct context and this is key because so many times learners will you'll learn a new vocabulary word and I always encourage people to try and use it and practice and practice in practice but sometimes they may use it in the wrong context use it with the wrong situation or they try to make it they think of a synonym and they try to - interchange them and it doesn't always work out and it doesn't always make sense so the best way to do this and try to use it in the correct context is just to get more and more exposure to the language now if you're looking for something specific when you learn a new word you can use resources like Google and you can put the word into Google and click on news and what that will do is it'll bring up a bunch of news articles that use that word and they're all using the word in the correct context and when you read that information you'll be able to see how it's used correctly so that you can try and use it correctly as well the other way to do that is to do exactly what we're doing today I am going in this quiz I'm not going to give you the meaning of the words all of these are sentences and and you need to try to put the word into context all right so let's just begin and I'll show you what I mean so the first question that I have for you is right here I want you to answer the question in the chat even if you're watching this later write your answer in the comments I want you to interact I want you to engage I want you to participate in the lesson alright everyone was so surprised that he retired at the of his career what do you think which of those words best completes the sentence all right those I've given you a Zenith B epitome C credence I'll read them all out for you in case you have trouble seeing some of them all right what what do you think everyone was so surprised that he retired at the mm of his career what do you think a B or C all right see some good answers yes Michelangelo Donna Shalin the correct answer is a Zenith

all right we are talking about the zenith of his career and what this word is it is a noun that's talking about the the top well the top the peak the highest point all right so if you're talking about somebody who's an athlete and they are at the top of their career and they decide to retire then yes that would be surprising so you could say everyone's so surprised that he retired at the zenith of his career so it could be talking about something that is actually physical you're talking about the the top point of something or something abstract like you're talking about one's abilities one skills the zenith the highest point in their career or of their abilities all right so that that's the way that we're going to do this you need to put these words in context all right the next one he's so hmm he thinks he's always right okay arrogant and unpleasant way and somebody's like yeah I'm the best I know everything I can do anything so this can apply to somebody at work they think that they are smarter than all of their colleagues that they do the best job and you could say they have a cocky attitude I think it's also applicable to sports if somebody is talking about their athletic ability and they say I'm gonna beat you I'm number one nobody is better than me you can say wow that person that person is cocky and again if somebody thinks they're always right then that's that's that is a bit of a cocky cocky attitude that they have I will confess yes sometimes I do like to think that I am right but don't we all don't we all like to think that we're right okay the next one all right I got a bunch of these bunch of these vocabulary words for you the students were mmm for skipping class all right so what do you think which word best completes that sentence and another thing that you can think about as you're going through these if there are words that you don't know like I don't know skipping class or you're trying to think well what goes into that blank think about the part of speech as well are we talking about an adjective are we talking about a verb a noun all right so the students were hmm for skipping class is it a admonished be placated see the moaned what do you think we're talking about students skipping class and I am very happy that you guys did not skip this class today and that you guys are all here yes Wow overwhelmingly less thank you Angela Dean Conchie Martin and

CeCe and Natasha Lally the answer is a so if you skip class if you don't know what that means that is an expression that means that you do not go to class you do not attend class which is not a good thing so if students don't skip class then they would be a admonished and if somebody is admonish they are that should say warn not warm with an M that is a typo to warn or reprimand firmly you're basically scolding somebody or if I were admonishing you then I'm you're scolding somebody hey don't do this that's wrong the students were admonished for skipping class and that is the only that is the image that I could find for a student he looks very very happy for being admonished by a teacher so it's not a good thing to be admonished if you're admonished you're basically scolded for do it so you did something wrong all right you can be admonished at school you could be admonished by a family member they're disappointed they're upset with you and they might admonish you okay you ready let's continue let's keep this ball rolling all right more I like I try to make some of these a bit self-deprecating all right I like to make fun of myself he broke another mug I can't believe it he's such a mmm what do you think he broke another mug I can't believe it he's such a what do you think the answer would be a Acrobat be clown see klutz somebody I tried to make them kind of similar but there is only one answer all right so what do you think would best complete that sentence again put this is what it means when you're talking about put this in context if you don't know what those words mean you understand that first part somebody broke a mug all right that's not a good thing so it's like I can't believe it which means it's probably it happens more than once it's not the first time and you would say yes the answer is C klutz thank you English fives Bassam IRA who else the Dare lanser perfect thank you guys the answer C klutz is a noun and that's just talking about some who is a little clumsy they're awkward they're foolish I think it's most closely related to that first word talking about somebody who's clumsy perhaps they are they fall down a lot or in this case I think it's commonly used to talk about somebody who drops things that they they drop things regularly like a mug and they would break a mug all right he broke another mug I can't believe it he's such a klutz and that is a picture of a mug that's supposed to be a crack in that mug all right but I haven't it's been a while since I've dropped a mug this was just an example all right I have not broken any of our mugs well last year I did all right it's been it's been some time but yes it has happened before but I think it's happened to everybody at one point or another I think we've all been a bit of a klutz it's okay it's normal its life the next one all right perhaps you I almost said the answer all right I didn't all right I perhaps you mmm remember some of these words perhaps you remember some of these words a utterly be vaguely C unabashedly which which word completes that sentence and again this kind of you know is is talking to you I would be talking to you when I say this we're going through this quiz these are all advanced words you may know some of them you may not know others so what would you say how would you complete that sentence what what what word best completes it again these are all ly words which should tell you okay these are adverbs they are describing the verb remember and you should have said B vaguely alright so yes babe live lolly Alberto Paul perfect be vaguely remember that is an adverb which means that it things aren't very clear it's not clearly expressed or stated or it's just something in your memory that like you you kind of remember it but you don't really and and this is what happens especially with vocabulary when you learn a word and then some time passes and you you forget about it and then you see it again maybe you read it or you come across it like in this lesson you're like oh I do remember seeing that word I've learned this before you could say I vaguely I vaguely remember it alright you vaguely remember something that is a good collocation those words are frequently used together vaguely remember alright it's not clear so lets me give you I want to just give you the

finally that light bulb clicks on and you know that word you know what it means and you can use it and you're comfortable using it as well so just always keep practicing which is why we do these lessons to help you guys practice your vocabulary and continue learning new words all right so let's look at the next one all right I'm back I'm back in my own picture so he is the mmm superhero I'm I'm gonna I'm finally decided to to give myself a good one all right and stop making fun of myself let me you let me let me say give a good sentence about me all right what do you think he is the mmm superhero there's not much information given in this sentence you just need to know what these words are to think about okay which which one appropriately completes the sentence a quintessential be nascent see austere and like somebody mentioned these are advanced words we've done lessons with all of them before check out that description I've listed all of those lessons and I encourage you to check them out so yes Malik Rajan II vet English vibes name perfect the answer is a quintessential all right he is the quintessential superhero it is an adjective and it's talking about something is representing the most perfect or typical example of something so I don't again I don't think I am even though I am look at check it out I am wearing my Batman shirt so I could be the cuentas and the quintessential superhero it is the superhero that I identify with but it is the perfect example of something the quintessential you could say quintessential superhero the anything you could follow it with any noun when you're talking about that perfect example of something you could say it is the quintessential mmm something all right whatever that noun is all right he is the quintessential father all right so somebody could again be the quintessential chef any anything let's look at the next one okay the executive got caught trying to money from the company okay so what would this is you know the executive got caught trying to money from the company is the answer a embezzle be repudiate see counterfeit okay what do you think Bess completes that sentence and again if you're just joining we are building our vocabulary by practicing and practicing and practicing some more with this advanced vocabulary quiz and I want you guys to participate okay I want you guys to write your answer in the chat write your answer in the comments that is the best way to remember is to get involved in the lesson which is what interactive English is all about so I'm talking about an executive you get caught which again implies that this is something bad it's not something that's good so what would you try to do and many of you yes you got the answer correct which is a embezzle so great job Rubick Tiger lover CIA SATA Phyllis excellent Michaelangelo a embezzle it's a verb and if you're embezzling money I I think pretty much you're talking about money when you're when when this word is used I think almost always you're talking about some kind of money you're embezzling you're taking money fraudulent Lea you're doing it you're stealing it and the executive got caught trying to embezzle money from the company now that is that image right there that's more of a thief that is not a picture of somebody embezzling money now this is again this is where you can try and get a little more specific so if somebody can steal money and that you could have a person just actually take somebody's money physically or you could steal money from a company but when you're talking about embezzling you are stealing money but it's almost like it's it's done secretly it's done secretly and oftentimes nowadays I think it's done digitally that you would use the computer to take money from one account and you put it over here you move it to a different place and eventually that money goes into your account and it becomes yours and you steal it so there is a difference between just actually seeing some money and physically stealing the money and embezzling the money where you're kind of secretly moving it around and oftentimes that's why I think it's used when talking about banks or orgas organizations or businesses and somebody may embezzle money so again this is a great word to learn so that you can be more specific when you're talking about a situation and speaking about stealing here's another one for you you think I stole your wallet that's mmm so I'm trying to read this one and provide you with the the intonation as well to kind of give you a little more information you think I stole your wallet that's mmm what would it be what would somebody say is it a preposterous be perfunctory or C pernicious what do you guys think and again I'll read it again in case you're having a difficult time seeing this the fonts are a little light on this one you think I stole your wallet that's hmm a preposterous be perfunctory or C pernicious and again if you see some of these other words and you're like what does that mean go check out the other lessons in the description and we talked all about these advanced vocabulary words so many of you yes perfect Syria serious Beheshti active istic tuba Luke great job the answer is a preposterous and if you say something is preposterous it is an adjective that means contrary to reason another word that's a synonym would be like ridiculous saying uh that's ridiculous that's preposterous absurd so those are other synonyms for this word ridiculous absurd you think I stole your wallet that's preposterous I would never do that that's crazy all right it is a great word to know great adjectives to know especially when you want to respond to something that somebody might accuse you of doing something wrong you're like that that's preposterous that's ridiculous and it is a very expressive adjective let's look at the next one more okay going back to the self-deprecating example he doesn't know what he's talking about he's not a professional he's just uh and just so you know these are actually these are pictures from thumbnails I we have a whole bunch of them and I just thought it would be fun to throw in these pictures of me doing all of these kind of crazy gestures and emotions so he doesn't know what he's talking about he's not a professional he's just a is it a sycophant be dilettante or see smartass all right for this one for this one I will accept two different answers okay this one this one could be there there is only one answer but I guess you could say and many of you are choosing that second answer all right you there are two answers thank you guys for choosing C I guess but the answer I was going for was be a dilettante so yes Allah Kareem Angela be dilettante the the the hint that I tried to give you as somebody who's not a professional because a dilettante is a noun it describes a person who they cultivate an interest in something that they're very interested in a topic so that they learn a little bit about it but they haven't learned in depth information and you could say you know he doesn't know what he's talking about he's not a professional he's a dilettante oftentimes it makes me think of somebody who they watch a documentary about something and then they've learned they're interested in it and they've learned a little bit about it because they've watched one documentary but then they'll go and talk about it as and they sound like they are an authority and a professional even though they've only seen one movie about it which may or may not have been very biased they haven't done a lot of research about the topic so you could say well they're a dilettante I think in our lives all of us when it comes to certain areas because many of us have interest we may not be professionals but maybe we just have some knowledge a little bit of knowledge and could say they are we're a dilettante may be a political dilettante would be an example that somebody who's interested in politics but they're not you know they don't have a lot of in-depth information so that is another great word the next question all right the companies mmm influence is felt around the world what do you think the companies mmm influence is felt around the world would it be a esoteric be uncanny or see ubiquitous you're you're describing the influence and I've given you a hint because in that picture yes that is a that is a Starbucks cup of coffee and no this video this quiz is not sponsored by Starbucks all right but it was just for as an example so we're talking about Starbucks that's the company that companies mmm influence is felt around the world and many of you said yes Paul Lally another gentleman a Kent or a woman I can't pronounce the name that's okay the answer is C ubiquitous and if something if you're talking about something that is ubiquitous it is an adjective and it means that it is existing or it is everywhere something is located everywhere something that you see everywhere and again this is a good word that I think people might use they may use it incorrectly so this would be a good word to go to Google News put this word in there surrounded by the the quotes and it'll just bring up a bunch of news articles using this word so that you can read it and see how it's used correctly because it's not something that you can just throw in there anywhere but we talk about the company's ubiquitous influence their influences everywhere is felt around the world because just about anywhere you go there is a Starbucks all right even though and this that's more my style of coffee over there just a cup it says coffee that's from a local that's from a local business right there all right so just want to give let you guys know if you guys enjoy what we do if you guys enjoy these quiz if you enjoy our lessons if you want to show us some love show us some support check out our patreon page we offer some cool rewards it's just another great way to connect with us and and support what we do here at interactive English and support our English lessons check that out I'll throw a link right there boom in case you're interested there's also a link in the description down below so let's continue alright we got more and more more questions for you alright during the trial they tried to mmm her character during the trial they tried to mmm her character so that's a keyword right there her character they tried to a compel be obfuscate or see impugn what do you think alright what what word goes in that blank right there what are we talking about alright during the trial they try to in her character compel Optus gate or impugn what do you think write your answer in the chat or again watching this later write your answer in the comments participate engage with the lesson that is what we want to see alright so excellent and even if you don't know some of these answers just throw them down there I I always want to see I love it when people try to answer that's the best part just try to practice so yes Angela IRA Lucia mopped Mamta excellent sorry if i mispronounce names Conchi the correct answer is C impune you're talking about impugning a person's character that is a collocation because you will find those words frequently used together and that is impune is a verb which means to cause people to doubt someone's character or reputation by criticizing them so in this case it happens we're talking about a court that you don't want the jury to believe this person so they will impune her character and say well she's a liar she's a bad person so that they don't believe her testimony and you would impune someone's carrot I think if you watch any kind of law and order type show that deals with trials and courtrooms you may hear this word so it's a good word let's look at the next one it's very it's very annoying he always changes his mind because that should say because he's so what alright again talking about myself I'm just laughing at that picture I look like such a goofball anyway it's very annoying sorry about this situation it's very annoying he always changes his mind because he's so hmm what goes in that blank he's so a truculent he's so be facetious or he's so C capricious so what do you think it's very annoying somebody's very bothered by this always changes his mind because he's so I forgot he's but that's okay I'm letting you know now he's so what truculent facetious capricious and yes perfect Rocio WOD Irene excellent thank you Akram thank you for your answers the correct answer is C capricious so if somebody is capricious it is an adjective and it means that you are subject to sudden or unpredictable change and I think it can describe somebody's character their personality if somebody's always changing their mind and this happens to everybody but some people are more it it's just the way they are I don't really think I'm a capricious person I think that's just an example usually I'm the opposite if I decide to do something I hate changing it I hate changing it and it bothers me when we do have to change it but the other end would be somebody who's capricious like let's do this no no Kay no no let's do this now I'm changed my mind let's do this another example which I tried to give you guys down here is love whether that it's like it's sunny and then all of a sudden it becomes cloudy and then the next thing you know it's raining and you say well it's just unpredictable the weather has been really you know it's capricious and we have not been a we cannot do follow through with plans is capricious alright so that is a good word to know a good adjective capricious the next question the team worked hmm around the clock that's another good expression the team works hmm around the clock is it a fervently be vicariously or si candidly it's describing how the team worked you see those ly words which should tell you this is an adverb so I again put it in context I think most of you many of you should know what it means to work around the clock all right and if somebody's working around the clock then what do you think what does that mean somebody's working around the clock why would they be doing that how would they be working all right so I see okay all right getting some good answers you guys are rocking this excellent yes and a touch Phyllis Paul Luciana Syed if somebody is working around the clock then they're probably they're working very hard they're working diligently they're also working a fervently which is an adverb and if you are working fervently then you are showing great enthusiasm or in this case I think it would be more intensity you're like oh gosh we really we got to work too in order to finish we better work fervently with a lot of intensity so if somebody's doing something fervently it is with great intensity or with great enthusiasm the team worked fervently around the clock here we go [Laughter] you can't you can't just take food out of our fridge that's mmm you can't just take food out of our fridge that's mmm what do you think no I it was late last night when I was putting these pictures together okay so again think of the sentence forget about the picture I don't know why I'm holding a taco you wouldn't really put a taco in a fridge I get you could if you sure if you wanted to keep it and save it but what what word would complete that sentence a presumptuous be defamatory or C arduous so think about that context you can't just take food out of our fridge somebody is going they open your refrigerator and they just grab some food and if somebody does that you can describe that situation and say that that behavior that's hmm what do you think all right how would you describe that situation yes lolly Zion a leak a presumptuous so if somebody just does something and you're like wow what makes you think that you can do that it's not really polite it's not appropriate and you could say well yeah that's presumptuous it's it's an adjective that means showing a lack of respect by doing something that you shouldn't so if I am visiting if I'm visiting your house which would be great if I could visit you guys and and get to know you and if I visit your house if I want something to drink or something to eat you know the thing you should do you should ask the person who lives there you wouldn't just go in and you open their cabinets and start taking their food or open their fridge and in this case I guess I would be taking tacos I could just be going and taking people's tacos so in this say you you you can't take you can't just take food out of our fridge that's presumptuous it's presumptuous to do something like that all right we must we must be mmm down to the last detail and I've given you these pictures trying to help you a little bit and and because they match up with the question except for the whole thing except for the one of me holding a taco that really didn't do that really didn't convey that message we must be mmm down to the last detail what completes that scent it's a meticulous be cumbersome see conscientious and again I'd say there's just one correct answer if you can't see the words I'll read it again we must be mmm down to the last detail meticulous cumbersome conscientious and excellent yes the answer is a meticulous great job Naima Avani Oh serious Ladon perfect thank you guys great job so the answer would be a meticulous you're talking about the key word in there I think is a detail you've got to be down to the last detail means you're looking at something closely and this is an adjective that means you're showing great attention to detail all right we must be meticulous down to the last detail so when somebody does their work if they are if they show you know a lot of attention to detail and it makes me think somebody who works with numbers could be somebody who is a designer somebody who is an architect and they

somebody who's doing construction they need to be meticulous down to the last detail that is a very important adjective to describe that that type of work when you're talking about these details all right so that was excellent all right if you enjoyed learning some new words if you learned something new let me know by hitting that like button and if you got some of these right which I know you guys did please go ahead hit that like button right now that tells me that you enjoyed this lesson and that in the future I should do more vocabulary lessons and more vocabulary quizzes like this to help you guys build and improve your vocabulary especially with these advanced words that are going to help you be more accurate when you want to perfectly describe a situation or or talk about something and express your opinions all right so please hit that like button and thank you guys so much for checking out today's lesson please share it also with other people that you know who want to build their vocabulary and are trying to improve their English skills as always we love hearing from you so write to us in the comments and check us out on social media we're active on Facebook Twitter and Instagram and we post questions we we we are active on social media again to help people practice their language skills so check that out thank you guys just some quick shout outs thank you serious excellent glad you learned some new words Priscilla thank you thank you new she thank you fairy Nashua lolli Zion Rossiya Bethesda do alum new n Simone Angela thank you guys I tried to give as many shout outs as I can and say as many names CPU era Henry thank you thank you thank you I hope you guys have a wonderful day and I will see you next time so long

LESSON 193 OF 749

Advanced Vocabulary Talking About University Life

so we are asked you can't switch this around which means today we're going to talk to you about some important and useful university words that's coming up [Music] we are visiting and kind of doing a little tour around the University of California so we thought it'd be a good time to not only show you a little bit of the campus but talk to you about some words that you might encounter if you're going to attend University or if you're having a conversation about education in general they're very useful words that are related to University so they don't have to be like oh I'm going to university and you know these words are the general knowledge [Music] in the distance there see the Golden Gate Bridge [Music] the one thing that I think is crazy about universities here is just the cost over the tuition cost the cost is insane yeah yeah and that's a good word to know yes the tuition if you're if you're wondering when tuition means it is the cost of your education your classes your your but it's really just your classes and and it doesn't include books or it doesn't include yeah and you're talking you're talking about the cost for one year typically so the cost of one year the tuition it's this much and they're talking about one year but another you know a great thing that is sometimes available would be a scholarship and a scholarship is another great word to know that is it's kind of you get some benefits some financial benefit to to help cover some of the cost of tuition or even cover yeah the entire cost I've never benefited in receiving a scholarship but it wasn't enough what was your favorite thing about University oh my goodness so I'm a little bit of a dork I like learning about what universities for I know but I loved it I loved learning because here you could choose so I don't I know it's not in every country but in the u.s.

too the the classes the books reading to him [Music] [Music] do you remember which one was your favorite year was it freshman sophomore junior senior I'd say I think I had the most fun freshman year no just a new experience we're living in the you know you're living with a bunch of people in the dorms which that's another good word or more dormitory is just the student housing where a lot of the students would live together so yeah freshman year first year in the university probably make my most memorable then it seems like as each year went by I tried to get a little more serious being mine was the junior year because which is the junior year it's a third third year university here in the u.s. you have four years on first at the freshmen second is sophomore and then you have junior as the third and then seniors the last one yeah a lot of times I think people would just say that they wouldn't say this is my third year they just say I'm a junior yeah so if they say I'm a junior then you know it's their third year senior in its fourth year sophomore is the second year in freshman first so I think I think a lot of people usually say oh like the senior years are favorite because it's your finishing but it's actually a very stressful year cuz you have to figure out what you're gonna do your life that's one yeah so that's why I like the junior year more where you have like you already know what life is like you already have like expectations and you know your classes and things are more familiar but at the same time you still can chill a little bit and you don't have to worry about your life for another year which is nice it's nice so if you're in college take advantage of it another important word for university very important word is major and wasn't gonna tell you what yes so the major is basically your focus of study at university so some people might major in engineering they may major in business or history there's all different types of majors at universities but it's your main focus of study it's your major and when you take when you enter your major you might have to take some prerequisite so there might be some prerequisites which do you want too so prerequisites are classes that you have to take before being able to take another class for example if you can just sign up for advanced chemistry because the materials that are going to be covered in that class they're going to be too difficult if you've never taken chemistry before so you have to take you know like elementary chemistry and intermediate chemistry and then and those would be the prerequisites to advanced camera and it can also be used outside of university too that there in order to do something there is a prerequisite something you have to do for yeah you never tell us what your major was my major was business management business behind me yeah my major and undergrad was business management and then I majored I got my hand too so I don't know if that counts as major them I think is just in university mastercards yeah if you could go back to college with the mind you have today would you choose a different major which is the same one why are you yawning at my question very it's a very boring question I don't know I think I would want to be maybe I definitely want to study languages or now I don't know if I would do that as a major or a minor which is another good one a minor would be like a major is your primary focus a minor would be like your secondary focus you have to take a certain level of number of classes yeah of course is to get the minor but I think I would have liked to have studied more yeah language languages and I don't know I liked having a business focus to it I think I would have done something else at business maybe like finance or entrepreneurship be like business yeah why what about you well I've had one major and two minor since we talked about minors my major at the time was Christine oh my god yeah it was history but I don't find that interesting the one of them was art history and the other one was essential in Eastern European studies they're all connected really but today if I could major in two if I could go back to University today I don't know I feel like I do something totally different like I do like psychology or something what about teaching maybe I don't know why they call you thank you just because we saw the building back there we've been psychology psychology psychology building no I don't know I loved history so it's very hard to meet the truth anything else I think that's the other thing I mean there's so much focus and in university and if you're a student people like oh you know what major you gonna choose and then once you get out of school I think so many people just don't do anything related to what they studied yeah we're teachers although as we grow this channel and do this business is so is history develop a business just cook you mystery history relevant to my knowledge every day as a person [Music] are we going we're gonna look at the oldest buildings in campus you filming me again so I was gonna say that for for America this is a really old building [Music] so behind me you can see one of the most iconic images of UC Berkeley which is the save there gave it like a another one of the entrances it's just just a gate the gate I don't know but if you look up you see both clear Google Images you'll see that image right there when I would go back and if I'm walking around a university just seeing how young everybody looks I don't know what they think I don't think they think we're students maybe we're faculty that is a good word yeah faculty and I feel like faculty looks a little bit more serious like we dressed up we don't look professional what so faculty what it is is just another word that's obviously used around the University campus and just then these kinds of circles it just means professors so any kind of professors teaching to something teachers but in university you don't see teachers you say professors are faculty another position which if you're a student you might here in the classroom is a TA if somebody's talking about a TA that just stands for teaching assistant and they're the ones in the classroom that are helping the professors and teaching sometimes and they're usually graduate students for doing their PhDs grading papers yeah and it's part of their training so you're probably gonna have a TA at some point well in America

having 100 student classes they're so big so many times they have TAS to help with greetings helpless and that's another good word I'll lecture yeah so if you're having a lecture class then yeah it's just with a large large number of students and they gather together for the class and the professor would just give a presentation they would give a lecture right it's not like interactive most of the time it's not like oh they could very rarely they ask questions to the students and so on you just like go up there bla bla bla bla bla and the lecture is over I think another good word when thinking about university a lot of people you'll hear the word academia and when talking about academia it's like how would you describe it like just the lifestyle higher education schools academics I had to find it on the paper there you go that's it when people think of university kind of maybe live in a bubble a little bit because you're so focused on everything that's happening around the university or that's where your life is so involved that yeah

you are just in academia you are part of academia some people spend their whole life as part of every meal like if they go to university then they go through their PhDs sorry what were we talking about I hope you guys enjoyed our tour of UC Berkeley yeah learned some new words along the way maybe maybe we convinced you to come here and now we want to hear from you guys so just in the comments just say hello tell us about your university experience anything that you want to say we just love hearing from you thanks so much for watching and we'll see you next time so what do you think of the University of California you may think that we're like the parents were just wrong

Advanced Vocabulary for Talking About Babies

today I want to talk to you about vocabulary that well it's all about when you have a baby hey everyone my name is Wes this is interactive English which is all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and today I have a collaboration lesson for you because I am going to do today's lesson with our little daughter Emmie she's gonna help me out and teach you all of these different words related to having a baby so if you are thinking about having a baby or maybe you know somebody who does have a baby or is going to have a baby then these are some vocabulary words that you need to know so we're gonna start at the very beginning and then we're gonna move through this as the baby would get older so let's start at the absolute beginning before the baby is born and talk about the word conceive so if we're talking about this word conceived it is talking about the the point at which the woman becomes pregnant that point in time when she becomes pregnant you would say that that the child was conceived it's not a word that you would just use in conversation like oh well when was the baby conceived you may hear people use it informally maybe even joking around like oh I think our our child was conceived when we were on vacation can also use this word as a noun which is conception the point of conception so the next word which is actually a phrase which I think is much more common yes it's much more common and that is maternity leave so if we're talking about just the word maternity it's talking about the period of time just before the child is born what are you doing and and right after the child is born just grabbing my ear and that is maternity and you may hear it used with other nouns like like maternity maternity clothes that's a common phrase that you may hear but what's going on what not am i not am i not teaching it correctly you get back over here you get back over here you get back over here so maternity leave is talking about the the time period that a woman the mother can take off from work the time before she gives birth as well as the time after that time period is called maternity leave and this is something that I think people just talk about in general about how much maternity leave the mother will get maybe she might talk about it or somebody might ask like oh how much maternity leave or are you going to take or how much can you take because this is something that will be different depending on the country that you live in or the job that you have now another word that is closely associated with maternity leave is paternity leave this is the time in which a man is allowed away from work what like once the child is born usually that that is when some a guy would take paternity leave it's not I don't think this phrase is as commonly used as maternity leave that is a phrase that you will hear I think much more often than paternity leave but if you want to talk about how much time the father is allowed to take off from work then that would be paternity leave another phrase that you may also hear people mention is due date and if you hear somebody talking about the due date that is the date at which the the couple expects the baby to be born the due date now once it gets close to the due date or maybe if it's on the due date the woman may go into labor and to go into labor means the process of of giving birth has begun and you would say well she's gone into labor and we need to go to the hospital once the woman goes into labor then you need to get to the hospital and at the hospital that is the doctor would deliver the baby so that is the verb that you would use deliver the baby and this is something that the doctor would do because to deliver the baby it refers to the help that someone receives in order to give birth to the child to deliver the baby the doctor would help deliver the baby now let's talk about once the baby is born and talk us about some words that you could use or you may hear after the the baby has been born and the first one is pediatrician now a pediatrician is a type of doctor it is a doctor that specializes in treating infants or children so once the baby is born and the baby is delivered then people will need to visit a pediatrician to make sure that the baby is healthy another word that you may hear which is related to health and in babies and children is bless you is that funny and and that word is a vaccination and a vaccination is just referring to the the substance that somebody is given typically a shot which will help protect them from disease a vaccination or you could use it as a verb and you'd say to vaccinate a child which is - to give them those shots which will help protect them from disease when it comes to feeding the baby then you would use the word nursing nursing is the word you would use when talking about feeding the baby breast milk now babies can either have breast milk or they could have formula that is the the next word that I wanted to teach you and there are many different types of formula but formula is just talking about artificial food that babies can have so for example if there is some reason that the the baby is not able to have breast milk then the the parents would want to give the baby formula is this talk of food making you hungry the next word that I want to teach you is teething and this is something that that she started pretty early and this is when the teeth start to come in and when the teeth start to come in babies they like to chew on things and we call that teething the the baby is teething or you could somebody might ask like oh has the baby started teething yet have those teeth started to come in another word uh which

I think it deals more with sleeping when babies need to sleep yeah that is swaddle to swaddle this is a verb and it has to do with the baby sleeping typically and that is when you just wrap the baby tightly in a blanket and you really you have such strong feelings about swaddling you would say to swaddle the baby to wrap them tightly so when when talking about a baby there are many different items that you might hear somebody talk about and I want to highlight some of the differences between American English and British English because it's quite often that we use different words to describe the same thing for example the first one that I have for you is stroller in the United States people overwhelmingly say stroller and this is the what this is what you use to push the baby around in a stroller when you go outside you put the baby in the stroller and you go push them around you may also hear people say baby carriage but I don't think that's as common I think overwhelmingly people would say stroller but you could also use baby carriage in the UK people will either say a pushchair pram or buggy I don't really know which one is more popular than the other but you could use any of those push chair pram or buggy something else when talking about babies is a diaper hey this is what the babies wear underneath their clothes because they will pee or poop in the diaper and that is what they say in the US it's called a diaper in the UK people may call it a nappy so diaper or nappy another difference would be well the outfit she is wearing right now in the United States you would call this a onesie it's an outfit that covers the whole body sometimes it does cover the arms and the legs other times it doesn't but it is just referred to as a onesie in the UK this may be called a baby grow now interestingly enough both of those names actually come from very I guess very well-known companies that make them so in the United States Gerber is the company that trademark the name onesie and in the UK baby grow trademark

the name baby growth and those words have have just become the name for this this type of clothing right here a onesie or baby grow something else that babies tend to do is drool quite often to drool is when the the saliva and that liquid just comes out of their mouth in the UK people might say dribble instead drool versus dribble another word that is different is well this right here in the US this is called a pacifier it is what babies will suck on and they're very young in the UK people may call this a dummy so a pacifier or a dummy and if you are in Canada it may be called a binky or a soother so there are many many different names for this this right here all right another difference because babies well I think they're often tired which is what people say in the u.s. people may also say that in the UK as well but another way to say that in British English is neck 'red so if you're in the US you'd say the baby's tired if you're in the UK then you could say the baby's tired or the baby's neck 'red then there's a crib which is a a small bed for infants or young children and that well in the US that's what people say they call it a crib that small bed in the UK people would call it a cot a crib versus a cot so we hope you learn some new words in today's lesson there are so many words when it comes to babies and infants and if you think of some others that I did not include in this lesson then write them in the comments share with everyone that is a great way to continue building your vocabulary if you enjoyed our collaboration please hit that like button down below and as always thanks so much for watching and I'll see you next time all right we'll see you next time yeah can you say bye [Music] [Music]

LESSON 195 OF 749

Advanced Vocabulary in 30 Minutes (Descriptive words you should know)

you can use to talk about movement places and people this is also a quiz lesson so I would like you to participate and if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary Please Subscribe turn on notifications that way I can become your teacher my name is Wes the channel is interactive English it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals and building your vocabulary is incredibly important especially if you want to become a more proficient speaker so let's start out with movement these are all words that you can use when talking about movement and to start out you see the word those question marks up up there I'm giving you the meaning of the word and I just want you to tell me what what what word am I talking about in this case that we're talking about a verb because we're talking about movement and actions so so these are verbs move with a smooth smooth quiet continuous motion what do you think what word has this meaning and then I'll I'll give you a moment to think about it tell you the answer and then I have some uh videos that I want to show you so that you can actually see see the word in in progress so I I kind of tried to give you a little bit of a hint with this picture of a swan right here and thinking about how a swan might move through the water with that smooth quiet continuous motion to M through the water so the word that we're talking about in this case is Glide to glide through the water excellent uh Vicki gusta uh great to see you Rafel L too I just want to give some shout outs so glad SL it has that meaning to move with a smooth quiet continuous motion and a great Association is a swan so I want you to check this uh check this out now this Swan right here is coming in for a landing it is a little bit rough right now to begin with but now we're starting that Glide and you can see that gliding through the water and just continuing that smooth motion as it it moves through the water to Glide here is the next one what do you think jump or dive energetically and really I think this verb is often used when talking about your your you know into the water so you can see this picture right here this diver this person who I almost gave it away jumped into the pool but you could say to M into the water you're you're jumping you're diving quickly energetically I think you will always well not always but mostly hear this verb when talking about something dropping into the water so the verb that we're looking for in case you're maybe in case you're unfamiliar with it or this is new is plunge to plunge into the water often you may follow this verb with that preposition into to plunge into something to plunge into the pool to plunge into the water to plunge into the lake here is a great example of plunge and you see this guy right here let's watch it again and off the boat and plunging into the water one more time just for good measure plunge into the water so I want to make a quick announcement because if you are someone who enjoys building your vocabulary and especially would like more speaking practice you can check out the link down below if you'd like to enroll and join my speaking course the course is for Upper Intermediate to Advanced speakers and it's all about trying to help you speak confidently speak clearly and speak naturally check out that link Down Below in the description go to the course page you can learn more about class times and availability and just improve your speaking skills in 2025 let's look at the next one this is this is a verb for for for any of for those of you who are in the chat right now who have taken take that we have certainly talked about it means to walk slowly with well exhaustion or harsh harsh conditions so think about the picture this person is walking through the snow now it's not easy to walk through through the snow they're probably walking slowly with di these are harsh conditions what verb can we use it's very descriptive it's a lot more precise if you are telling a story or talking about your experience and you really want to capture this idea that you are moving slowly in difficulty because of something and in this case again we're talking about the snow so the verb that we're looking for uh is trudge excellent Rafaela VI uh Victoria Tom too to trudge through the snow this is another verb that you can follow with different prepositions you could trudge through the snow trudge through the mud trudge up a hill trudge down a hill and again something is really causing you to to walk slowly in this case let me give you an example you see this guy who I mean I could say walking through the snow but if I want to be a little more precise I guess yeah he was trudging through the snow and you can see he's moving slowly with difficulty because of these harsh this harsh conditions and trying to move through the snow and trudging through the snow what do you think about this the you could think about the picture you have this deer and headlight so there's a car and well what is the car what's what's the car going to have to do change or cause to change direction abruptly and often I think you may hear this verb used when talking about uh somebody driving and they have to change direction abruptly and they're going to M into the other lane or M to avoid hitting something in the road so of course you we see this deer we don't want to hit the deer and if this is at the very last minute what are you going to have to do with the car Voom change direction abruptly and in that case the verb that we're going to use is to Swerve to Swerve is to change or cause to change direction abruptly so this is actually from a TV show but you can see what's going on here let's uh we can check that out again and he's driving along not paying attention swerves the car to avoid hitting the other one and then ends up hitting this trash can

let's watch it one more time and then he swerves the car hits the trash can and again this is a word that you may use when talking about driving and in a car so here is the other one with movement and then we're going to talk about places and people so what verb means to move slowly and carefully in order to avoid being heard or noticed now there there may be other words out there that have a similar meaning but there's one in particular that uh I want to highlight so again don't just feel like there's only one uh word out there that you can use but in general we're talking about moving slowly carefully you're trying to avoid being noticed or heard what verb could you use now I see some good answers as far as like to sneak that again that works that is like being careful you don't want somebody to notice you to tiptoe that's another one so again I told you there are other words that would fit this meaning but the word that uh I was looking for is to creep so creep s tick tiptoe sneak these are generally synonyms so I don't want to tell you that those are wrong answers but again there this is another great way to build your vocabulary and learn some of these different synonyms here's an example with the cat you can see this cat who is just creeping up on this bird this pigeon maybe I think the cat thinks the bird's going to fly away but uh decides not to we can check that out again and if we're going to use that verb to creep notice when I gave you that example to creep up on someone the cat is creeping up on the bird and just trying not to be noticed moving slowly and the bird just sits there like just H

I don't really care I'm not going to fly away I'm not going to move hopefully some of those words were new for you again this is all about trying to build your vocabulary not just to go out and use them but also to improve your listening reading comprehension because these are words that you will come across from time to time let's now move on and talk about places so I'm going to switch it up a little bit I'm giving you an example sentence as well as the first letter of the word so this sentence the bare trees stood tall in the M Landscape so I'm giving you the first letter of our missing word and then I'll tell you the word and give you the meaning it begins with the letter d and I will say that I do think this is a common collocation with this adjective talking about a M Landscape so the word that uh is missing desolate empty and not attractive or with no people or nothing Pleasant in it desolate a desolate landscape excellent anj L um raphaela Naja perfect so think about that word you might use it to describe a landscape a desert or just some empty area and refer to it as desolate here I just mentioned when talking about creep tiptoe sneak and thinking about synonyms a great way to build your vocabulary this these are some synonyms for the word desolate and you could use thesaurus.com this is just just to provide you with an example and you can see some of the other words down there um bare Bleak derel uh empty isolated again this is another way to build your vocabulary make some associations because these are maybe some of these words you already know and it's another something else to keep in mind uh when building your vocabulary and just learning more synonyms here's this one maybe uh this is a bit more challenging the Four Seasons is an M Hotel the missing word the adjective begins with an O and I think you know the vowel sound because you see the article n NM Hotel the Four Seasons a very well-known luxurious hotel I have never stayed in a Four Seasons Hotel probably never will that's okay I don't mind but if you want to be descriptive and talk about this type of hotel and you want to say again it's luxurious it's I again I don't want to give it away but you can use this adjective an M Hotel so the word that uh I'm thinking of is opulent opulent means expensive and luxurious an opulent Hotel an opulent building an opulent um uh Lobby and you just want to say that wow this is impressive it's very luxurious it's very fancy it's very expensive it's opulent what do you think over the weekend we took a trip to the m Countryside this is another adjective that it's very descriptive it's one that you're not probably going to come across every day but if you're reading a book if you're someone who likes to read stories this is when I think authors definitely use more descriptive words so you could come across this adjective especially when talking about the countryside over the weekend we took a trip to the m Countryside the missing word our adjective begins with the letter V so you have this picture of the country side and I chose this picture specifically because it's very green and I'll I'll get to that in just a moment now I see some like vibrant I don't I wouldn't use vibrant in this case because vibrant makes me think of really energetic colorful and the first word when I think of vibrant I think of the city of Miami the way it looks and the different colors and the architecture so I'm looking for a different adjective and I mention the word green because the word that I'm thinking of is verdant verdant means covered with healthy green plants and grass another collocation verdant Countryside The Verdant Forest The Verdant jungle Le so you're talking about a place that's probably well green with plants and grass and to highlight this I just want to really Hammer this home this is another something else you can keep in mind when building your vocabulary you want to make associations you could go to Google Images put the words in quotes and then just see what pops up and I'm sure the first thing that you notice there all of those images they have one now whether showing um a tropical rainforest or just a forest or the the countryside you can see that color when talking about like well The Verdant landscape and in that case you know okay there are plants it's very green if something is verdant here is the next one I think this is a probably an adjective that's more commonly used you may be familiar with it my office is a mess but her office is always M this word begins with the letter P so already in the example sentence you can see that we're making a comparison and this is a contrast we're we're contrasting these two offices mine is a mess but her office is the opposite you could say is always M which word begin that begins with the letter P that you could use to describe something in this case a place which would be a room or an office that is not messy that is very clean and the word which I saw a lot of excellent pristine if something is pristine it is immaculately clean or has never been used my office is a messed but her office is always pristine excellent uh Arno lff Isaac Hugo um great job saw a lot of perfect uh great answers in there well done how about this next one this is a little more challenging and maybe that hopefully the image perhaps helps a little bit within the impoverished City there is a wealthy with opulent homes I wanted to bring that word back up remember if something is opulent it's very luxurious expensive so let's say that uh you have this city that is generally impoverished and that is this side right here but then within the city over there on the other side you see those opulent homes very wealthy this is not a real picture by the way I believe it's AI generated but you could say within this city there is a wealthy M with opulent home so the missing word begins with an E so this is another very precise word when referring to something within so we're talking about within this impoverished City there is this again you I guess I could say a neighborhood but we're not talking about a neighborhood even though a neighborhood would be within I want to use this other word that begins with an E that describes this situation so the word that we're looking for well done uh Loi an enclave a separate space or group within a larger one so in the example within this the impoverished City there is a wealthy Enclave with opulent homes now I realize maybe this is a a more advanced word most of these I think are fairly Advanced so again you're not going to come across them every day but even if these are difficult hopefully some are new and that it's going to help your comprehension listening reading you may come across them to give you a little more context with this word because like I said maybe it's one that is new for you here are some news headlines so that you can get a better feel as to how it's used Bridgewater's Bob Prince buys 12 I guess million dooll home in wealthy Hong Kong Enclave so we're talking about an a area within the city of Hong Kong this couple transform a Birmingham Ballroom into a lush Garden Enclave on their big day okay moscow-backed Enclave in malova feels pain from lack of Russian gas talking about the country of mdova and in this country there is an area within it that is a Moscow backed onclave and then finally up to 1500 migrants swim to

Spain's quenta Enclave from Morocco all of these headlines are very recent so again it is a word that you may come across you're reading a news article just like this and you find the word enclave now you know now you know what it means let's move on to the next topic because I divided this into different parts and talk about a person's appearance and the way that they look again I'm switching it up a little bit because now I'm giving you the meaning and an example sentence but I'm not giving you any hint as to the word that I'm I'm talking about I'm not giving you the first letter so this word the meaning when talking about well of hair clothes or somebody's General parents it just means very untidy he's been drinking all night now he looks a bit you can see this picture of this gentleman here holding the bottle and I I I will say say I think often it does refer to somebody's appearance like the way that their hair looks it's very untidy like if I were to screw up my hair like I didn't get a lot of sleep and you say oh Wes you look a little not hung over I mean if you've been drinking yes that that would work uh but this is a very descriptive word it's an adjective that you may not be familiar with it's one that talked about uh when we did the member video for this month Hadi uh Hua rafhaela well done disheveled so if you say somebody looks a bit disheveled then you're referring to well their appearance but I think generally like the way their hair looks and maybe their clothes and something has happened and as to why they look a little disheveled lack of sleep um in this case somebody's been out drinking all night and they look a bit disheveled I see some there unkempt is good one that's another one I think uh is a synonym I love it uh horrible sure that's that is a common adjective that that you could use all right love seeing these uh um emojis good tells me yeah you're you're learning some new words which is perfect that is the goal so here is uh the next one showing great happiness love or health I know this is a bit more difficult when I'm not giving you too much because there are there are other adjectives that kind of fit this meaning all of these words definitely have synonyms but this word means showing great happiness love or health her m smile lit up the room and I do think this is used as a collocation talking about someone's smile and it's you're really giving them a compliment and I could say her m smile lit up the room refers to showing that that happiness love health and you could say that someone looks radiant that is the word that uh that I'm going for her radiant smile lit up the room now of course there are many adjective collocations with smile that ad Ive noun collocation a radiant smile a brilliant smile um so again there there don't always think of this as like oh a wrong answer right answer the goal is if you didn't get it it's okay it's just building your vocabulary perhaps this is a word that you didn't think of but you've heard it before when talking about the way somebody looks and they look radiant here is a word that is maybe not as commonly used it is very precise it refers to slightly sad because you are thinking about something you cannot have she listen to sorry there should be an article in there she listened to a sad and M song about a lost love so which word which adjective could you use that that has this meaning I've I told you already it is a definitely more advanced word so it may not be one that you're it's going to be difficult to think of off the top of your head slightly sad because you are thinking about something that you cannot have and in this case I'm using this adjective to modify the word song A M song uh see like some frustrated again that that is a more common word so that's not the one that uh that's not the adjective I'm looking for in this case and again this may be new if it is that's awesome because I do think you may come across this in stories I told you authors they like to use this very precise and descriptive words wistful if somebody is wistful it means they are slightly sad because you are thinking about something you cannot have I see a couple people mentioned nostalgic I think that also is pretty close because if you're nostalgic you are thinking about something that happened or that you can't have and I think generally it does imply that maybe somebody is sad because well it's uh th this thing this experience is over however I I do think in this case if you really want to capture this emotion of sadness then I think wistful is a good one to use um here's the next one I think this one maybe a little easy because it I I believe it's one You' may come AC you may have come across and perhaps you you already use which is great I tried to mix it up a little bit but definitely I would still say these are all advanced words calm peaceful untroubled and tranquil right so I'm I'm on I'm giving you all these synonyms right here she looked peaceful and M as she watched the sunset so so of course you could say again using these words peaceful and calm peaceful and tranquil that yeah that would work but what is another word that that we could use that is a synonym for calm peaceful tranquil she looked peaceful and as she watched the sun set the word that I'm looking for see some of you you got it like I said perfect we're talking about Serene so the these are synonyms calm peaceful untroubled and tranquil she looks peaceful and Serene I think when it comes to some of these words and you want to be a little more descriptive if you're telling a story or like I said you're reading a book you come across it you you may use more than one even though they're synonyms people may still use it just to add emphasis calm and Serene peaceful and Serene Serene and tranquil and you may end up using more than one adjective this one means physically weak or unhealthy and the sentence he lay in bed looking particularly now this I don't know if you can see it too well in the picture this is an older man laying in bed trying to say that somebody is physically weak or unhealthy generally speaking I think you would use this adjective to talk about older people somebody who may be in their 70s or 80s and you want to say that they are you know physically weak or unhealthy and you could refer to them as uh so and there are other words that you could use uh feeble uh good example that's not the one I'm looking for I will tell you it does start with an F so the word that I'm going for not feeble but if somebody looks well physically weak or unhealthy I could also say that he or she is frail he lay in bed looking particularly frail now if I want to check the frequency because I just gave you five different words to talk about someone's appearance and I told you these are descriptive words they're Advanced so they're not ones that you're going to come across every day but even if I want to compare the ones that we just learned and just talked about I can use enr and put in these phrases looks disheveled looks radiant looks wistful looks Serene looks frail and then if I zoom in I get a better idea as to which ones are more commonly used so you can see it puts it on a graph for us and you can see some saying somebody looks radiant or frail is a little more common than using words like wistful or disheveled so just something to keep in mind if you have different words or phrases and you want to know well which one is more commonly used what do most people say in this situation you can use engram viewer to check that out and again this is a perfect example with the words that we just used right now radiant frail Serene wistful and disheveled the one thing I'd like to point out though because again it puts it on a graph is that you can see that the frequency of these words since the year 2000 has been on the rise that you're people are using them more either in well this is a taken from a written Corpus so they're definitely using them more in writing but I do think you would also hear them more in conversation watching a movie listening to the news or a podcast so here are all of the words that we talked about um when thinking about movement places people I hope some of these words were new for you and if you enjoyed the lesson and learned something new you can let me know by hitting that like button because this is something that I try to focus on every year but I want to focus on it this year as well and really focus on helping you build your vocabulary Lear learn new words whether you're learning them passively or actively it's all about you know just building slowly that process and making these words a part of your active memory so these are the words you can review them uh but I hope you enjoyed the lesson and learned something new and of course I will see you very soon in the future for another lesson so long

Advanced Vocabulary in 60 Minutes (Precise words you need to know!)

Today is all about one thing, building your vocabulary. I'm going to teach you a lot of different words, mostly advanced words, to help you be more precise so that you can say exactly what you want to say. I've taken some of my very best vocabulary lessons and put them right here in this video. So, if you are interested in building your vocabulary, I recommend that you subscribe, turn on notifications, so that you'll learn about future lessons, like future vocabulary lessons, and I can become your teacher. My name is Wes, and really Interactive English, it's all about trying to help you reach your fluency goals, phrases in context, and do so while having a conversation, then I suggest you check out my speaking course. And when you click on the link down in the description, you will find a special discount just for you. The course is all about helping you speak confidently, speak clearly, and speak naturally. Each week there is a different speaking topic. You will learn useful vocabulary.

We do engaging speaking activities, and we warm up each lesson with something related to pronunciation or connected speech. There are also pronunciation video lessons included, and I'm going to teach you some of the language nuances, like when to use certain words and phrases. So, click on the link down below if you'd like to sign up or learn more about the course, and I hope to speak to you soon. Now, let's start this vocabulary marathon, and I am sure that you are going to learn some new words and phrases. Would you like to sound smarter when you're speaking in English? Of course you do. So, that's why today I'm going to tell you 10 different adjectives to help you sound smarter.

So, the adjectives that I'm going to talk to you about today are a little more academic, and they're great adjectives because they're very descriptive, very precise. And that is a great way to improve your fluency because you're better able to express your thoughts, your opinions, your ideas, and they just so happen to be 10 of my favorite adjectives that I like to use because I want to sound smart. So, I'm going to give you the pronunciation of these adjectives. I'm going to tell you what they mean and how they're commonly used. So, let's begin. The first word is ubiquitous. And ubiquitous has four syllables. That first syllable is is just like you're saying the letter U. Ubiquitous.

And the stress is going to be on that second syllable. Ubiquitous. Ubiquitous. Ubiquitous. Ubiquitous means existing or being everywhere. It is something that you see everywhere you go. It could be a shop, a store, and you find it all over the world. For example, you have companies that you see everywhere, like Starbucks, McDonald's. Wherever you go, whether you like it or not, you see these places. They are ubiquitous. It could also be used to talk about maybe a word, phrase, or expression that you might commonly hear that is ubiquitous. You hear it all the time. You wouldn't really use it to talk about a person that you see all the time because again, there is only one person.

Ubiquitous is talking about something where there is a lot. It is a lot more than just one. It's everywhere. It's ubiquitous. Local coffee shops are ubiquitous in my hometown. The next word is cumbersome. The word cumbersome has three syllables, and the stress is on the first syllable. Cumbersome. Cumbersome. And something that is cumbersome is something that is difficult, something that is burdensome, and usually it's often talking about something that is physical, that is difficult to move or carry, maybe because it has an awkward shape, or maybe it's really heavy, and it is cumbersome to move something from one place to another. It's not always used to talk about an object. It can be used to talk about a situation as well, something that is difficult, problematic. We could say that it is cumbersome. It's a cumbersome situation, a cumbersome challenge, a cumbersome life. Moving the furniture outside was really cumbersome.

The next adjective, and it's one of my favorites because, well, it kind of describes me, is facetious. Facetious has three syllables, and the stress is on that second syllable. It's like you're just saying the letter C. Facetious. And that first syllable has that schwa, that uh sound. Facetious. Facetious. Facetious means not to be taken literal or serious. And I would say it's kind of in between a joke and a lie. And you're you're almost kind of teasing somebody when you're being facetious. You're saying something that is so ridiculous, it's so outlandish, that the other person or people, they shouldn't take you seriously because what you're saying is so ridiculous. You are being facetious.

Next is presumptuous. And presumptuous has four syllables, and the stress is on that second syllable. And the S almost sounds a little more like a Z. Presumptuous. Presumptuous. And if somebody is being presumptuous, then that just means that they're showing little or no respect for others by doing something that that they shouldn't be doing. They're being presumptuous, thinking that they can do this or that when they shouldn't do it. It's presumptuous. For example, if you go over to a friend's place, most of us don't just walk inside their home or apartment. You knock on the door because it's polite, it's respectful. If you just walk inside like you own the place, then you would be presumptuous.

It was presumptuous of him to think that this was a date. She just thought they were friends. Next is pensive. And the pronunciation, very easy, just two syllables, and the stress is on that first syllable. Pensive. Pensive. Now, if somebody is pensive, that just means that they are in deep thought. They're really thinking about or reflecting on something. It's almost like a dream-like state. You're in such deep thought, you you've just tuned out the rest of the world. You would say that this person is pensive, or somebody might look pensive. And usually, if somebody is pensive, it's it's because something requires that deep thought. It could be something serious. It could be something bad or unfortunate that that makes somebody pensive and really have to think about something.

She's thinking about her friend in the hospital. She looks pensive. The next adjective, which is another one that I really like, is circuitous. And circuitous has four syllables, and there's a few things going on with the pronunciation. In the first syllable, that C is going to have more of an S sound. Circuitous. The stress is going to be on that second syllable, and that C U is it's kind of like you're saying the letter Q. Circuitous. Circuitous. And circuitous is talking about a very roundabout way to get somewhere, where you you're just not taking the most direct route. And I think we've all probably tried to go somewhere, and maybe we got a little lost, and we went way out of our way, and we ended up taking a circuitous route. And frequently, it's used with this word when talking about the direction that you go, a circuitous route, a circuitous path. And it is just this windy, roundabout way that you try to go and get somewhere. Circuitous. We took a circuitous route to reach our destination. Next is conscientious. And this is a great adjective to describe maybe yourself or someone else. And I think the pronunciation is what makes many learners avoid this word because they look at it and think what what's going on there. So, conscientious has four syllables. And the stress is on that third syllable, that n n, conscientious. Conscientious. That second syllable it is what really confuses people because that s c i almost sounds like you're saying she. Conscientious. Conscientious. And someone who is conscientious just means that they have a moral responsibility to to do their work carefully and also, you know, treat others with respect and be fair to others. Someone who's conscientious is really able to put themselves in another person's shoes and really see how they feel and empathize with them. They are aware of their surroundings and because of that we would say they are conscientious. Great word. She's very conscientious of her health. The next word is meticulous. And this word has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, meticulous. Meticulous. That first syllable also has that schwa, that uh sound, that reduced vowel sound, meticulous. This is another word that that I like because I think it does describe me in in many situations. If someone is meticulous, that means that they try to pay really close attention to the details. They're meticulous in their work. They're focused on the details and they want to make sure every little thing is in order. Someone is meticulous.

Now, it it's usually I think it is a good thing when you're talking about somebody's work that you want to pay close attention to the details so you don't miss anything and be very meticulous. He's meticulous with his designs. The final adjective that I have for you is convoluted. Convoluted also has four syllables and the stress is on the first syllable, convoluted. That second syllable again has that schwa sound, that reduced vowel sound, uh. Convoluted. Convoluted. If something is convoluted, it means that it is extremely difficult to follow because things are connected and intertwined and mixed around in a way that's difficult to understand. That means that something is convoluted. It can be used to describe a story or an argument or maybe even a sentence that is hard to follow and it doesn't make much sense.

It's convoluted. The story was convoluted because there were so many different people involved. So, those are 10 super awesome adjectives that will help you sound smarter when you're having a conversation in English. It will also help you be more descriptive when you're expressing your thoughts, your ideas, your opinions. So, please use those adjectives. Welcome to today's lesson, which is more of a vocabulary lesson because I'm going to talk to you about 10 amazing adjectives that you can use to sound more academic, more professional, and more competent when you're speaking English. And these are not words that you're going to hear every day on the street. Instead, you're more likely to hear these adjectives in presentations, debates, or in-depth conversations that are a bit more serious because these are words that sound more professional, more convincing, and they they give us a bit more authority when we're speaking about a topic.

That's preposterous. You're not going to like this video? That that's preposterous. Next is a very cool word and that is perfunctory. And perfunctory has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, that funk, perfunctory. That third syllable has the schwa and it's going to end with that long e sound, perfunctory. Perfunctory. And if something is perfunctory, it means that that you're doing something out of routine. You're doing it without even thinking about it. It's habit, it's a ritual. You just do it in haste without giving it much thought and we would say that that it is perfunctory. When she saw us, she gave us a perfunctory smile.

The next adjective is truculent. And this word has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. Keep in mind that that c u is pronounced it's like you're saying the letter q, truculent. That last syllable has the schwa, truculent. And if somebody is being truculent, then that means that they're being fierce, a little cruel, kind of very aggressive, aggressively hostile if someone's being truculent. So, it's not not a good word. It kind of means that that this person is upset with you maybe because of something you said and and they're just being a bit cruel. They're truculent. They're stand-offish. Sometimes when I've had a really bad day and and I don't want to talk to people and I'm just upset, I can be kind of truculent with others if if they're trying to approach me and I don't want to deal with anybody, I can be truculent. A great example would be in politics. People maybe they do something wrong and the media wants to talk to them about it and they're they're angry, they don't want to speak to the media and they might be truculent. So, we could say Politicians are sometimes truculent with the media.

Another great word is this one right here, austere. And this has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable with that long e sound, austere. And if somebody or something is austere, it means that they're very severe in their manner, they're very strict or even without excess, austere. Her austere manner intimidated the students. The next adjective, which is one of my favorites, is capricious. And this word has three syllables and the stress is on the second syllable. And keep in mind that first syllable has that schwa sound, that k k pricious. Capricious. And if someone or something is capricious, then that just means that they are subject to sudden or even unpredictable change, capricious. So, you could say a person is capricious.

Perhaps the weather is capricious or maybe even your plans are capricious. They're subject to change. And I could use it in an example sentence and say I can never get her to commit to a time because she's so capricious. Next is the word defamatory. And this word has five syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, defamatory. Defamatory. It's not a good adjective because if something is defamatory, we're talking about false or unjustified harm caused to one's reputation. And we could use it in an example sentence and say The president's defamatory remarks startled everyone.

The next word, which is another one of my favorite adjectives, is esoteric. And this word has four syllables and the stress is on that third syllable, esoteric. And when we describe something as esoteric, we're talking about something that's really understood by a small group of people because they have knowledge or interest in that thing. Usually it's somebody that has direct experience with it. So, we say that it is esoteric. For example, somebody could have esoteric knowledge about something. Maybe they have an esoteric experience because there's just a few people that really understand and and know what it's like. I spent 6 months in the woods hiking the Appalachian Trail. It was an esoteric experience.

Another great adjective is nascent. And this word has two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. It has the long a sound, nascent. That second syllable has that schwa, nascent. And if something is nascent, then that just means it's beginning to exist or beginning to develop. It's at the early stages. It is nascent. And we can use it in a sentence and say The project is at a nascent stage of development.

Another very cool adjective is quintessential. And this word has four syllables and the stress is on the third syllable. Quintessential. And when we say that something is quintessential, it means that it is representing just the most perfect example. It's quintessential. Now, let me give you the quintessential example sentence. Interactive English is the quintessential channel to learn, practice, and improve your English skills. If you agree with that last sentence, please please show us some love and hit that like button down below. Welcome to today's lesson. It is a super awesome amazing vocabulary lesson because I'm going to teach you 10 different verbs to help you sound smarter. And I say that they help you sound smarter because these are more advanced verbs. These are advanced vocabulary words that are very specific, very precise, that you can use in certain situations so that you can perfectly express your ideas, thoughts, and opinions, and say exactly what you want to say. These verbs are going to help you do just that.

Now, I'm not only going to tell you the verb and the meaning, but I'm also going to give you the pronunciation as well as an example sentence so that you can see how these words are used in context. That's very important. So, without further ado, let's begin. admonish. And admonish has three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, mon. Admonish. And this is a verb that we use with a direct object to admonish someone, usually for doing something wrong because what it means is to

to counsel or advise against something. It's kind of like you're scolding somebody in a way, but not because you are super angry and they did something really terrible, but but they just did something wrong and it's not correct. Maybe it was a little rude. interrupted me again while I was admonishing you for interrupting me.

Have you ever been admonished for doing something? I definitely have been admonished for many things in my life. The parents admonished their child for telling a lie. The next wonderful verb is to advocate. This word has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, advocate. And to advocate means to show strong support for something. It could be a support for a policy. It could be support for an issue. And you advocate for it. We often use it with the preposition for. You advocate for something when you are really passionate about something. You really really really believe in it and you want to advocate for this thing. The teachers advocated for better pay.

The next verb is to bemoan. And this verb has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, moan. Bemoan. You may also notice that that word in that second syllable, which kind of shares a similar meaning to the verb to bemoan, which means you are basically expressing that you are upset, you are distressed about something. It's kind of like you're complaining and you might bemoan a situation that you are in. You might bemoan someone's decision if you disagree with it and you don't like it. You're not very happy with something that happened and you bemoan the situation. She bemoaned having to look for another flight.

The next verb is compel. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, compel. And what it means is to to force or drive or maybe even encourage somebody to to do something, some course of action, to do something that that you want them to do. You you really want to convince them to do something. Sometimes it can be done by force. You compel someone to do something because maybe you're threatening them in some way, shape, or form and you are compelling them to do what you want them to do. The power of Christ compels you. But you're really just trying to get somebody to to do this thing, to compel someone to do something.

The police compelled him to tell the truth. The next verb is good one, embezzle. To embezzle. This verb has three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, embezzle. Embezzle. And what it means is to take money or maybe even property, but most of the time we're talking about money, and to do it in a fraudulent way. People are creating some false records, some false receipts, and they are taking that extra money and stealing it and they are embezzling the money. You can embezzle money from a company. You can embezzle money from a bank. Lloyd Gross is a fictional salesman we invented to, how do I put this, steal from the company, embezzle, to commit fraud. I just got fired from Sweetums.

Because you were embezzling. Now, if you do this, it's a crime. So, it is not a good verb. It's not a verb that you want to be associated with. The accountant embezzled millions of dollars from the company. The next verb is extol. To extol. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, extol. And what it means is to praise highly, to to give a lot of high praise to someone or to something. Often times you might extol someone during a eulogy. If there is a funeral and a person is giving a eulogy and talking about the person that has passed away, you you want to talk about all the good things that this person did. You want to give them a lot of praise and and you would extol this person. You can also use it talking about places or things if you really just want to speak highly of it, extol. She extolled the beauty of modern art. Next is the verb impugn. To impugn. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, impugn. And what it means is to to claim that something is false, to to say that, to challenge it and say that it's not true, and kind of cast doubt upon this situation or or even this person. So, because of a few bad apples, you impugn an entire continent? I'm impugning a continent. A lot of times you might hear it with the word character, to impugn someone's character. Basically saying that this person should not be believed, that they say things that are false, they're dishonest, and and you're trying to cast doubt over the things that this person is talking about when you impugn someone's character. Mr. Chairman, if she's going to impugn his character while he's speaking, It's not a good verb. It's not something that we should try to do, but this is a situation that happens and it's a great way to describe it, to impugn someone or something.

They tried to impugn her character with false accusations. Another great verb, which is one of my favorites, is obfuscate. This verb has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, obfuscate. And what it means to obfuscate something is to confuse or bewilder and just try to create a confusing situation so that it's really difficult to understand. So, you might hear it being used. They they want to obfuscate a situation. They want to obfuscate an issue. They want to obfuscate a policy. It happens a lot I think in politics when you're trying to get people to believe one thing or another thing and some people try to obfuscate certain issues.

Another great verb, repudiate. This verb has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, repudiate. And this means to reject something, to to reject it with disapproval because there's no authority in this thing that people are trying to to say or do. To repudiate someone or you could repudiate something. So, for example, at work, if if you are the manager and you have employees and and they make a request and you could reject it and say no, I don't like it. This is a terrible idea. You would repudiate this. Senator Eleanor Prentiss Shaw, does it bother you at all your son repudiates so many of your more controversial policies? No. It was refused, rejected, rebuffed, repudiated. It's kind of a confrontational word because if you repudiate something, then you're you're really letting the other person know that that you're a bit unhappy, that that you don't like this and you are rejecting it. You repudiated.

The professor repudiated the students' request to postpone the exam. So, right now, I would like to advocate for you to write us a comment and let us know a English word that you have recently learned. It can be any word, a noun, an adjective, a verb. Just let us know. We love hearing from you in the comments. If you don't write us a comment, I'm not going to bemoan the situation. I'm not even going to admonish you, but we would really appreciate it and if you do, I will placate you by coming out with another lesson next week. If you would like to sound smarter and be smarter than this lesson is for you because I'm going to tell you 10 nouns to help you do just that. Many of you out there have said you would like to learn more advanced vocabulary words and that's what these 10 nouns are. They're not only going to help you sound smarter, but they're going to help you more accurately express your your thoughts, opinions, and ideas. They also happen to be 10 of my favorite nouns.

So, as I go over these nouns, I'm going to give you the pronunciation, tell you the meaning, as well as talk to you about how they're used in context. show on the road. The first noun is this one right here, quid pro quo. And it is three words. Each word is only one syllable and if if you're saying it together, the stress is is kind of on that first word and that last word. Quid pro quo. And what this means is it is something that that is given or or even taken in return for something else. So, it's kind of like you're you're you're doing a favor for someone in exchange for something else and that would be considered quid pro quo. Often, we hear this when when talking about politics.

Somebody gives a politician money and then that politician does something in return for them and they would refer to it as quid pro quo. Quid pro quo, Mr. Powers. I need some quid pro quo from you. Quid pro quo. I I do things, you tell me things. Maybe you're negotiating with somebody and you're like, you know, I'm going to need a little quid pro quo if I do whatever favor it is for you. If you want us to donate to your campaign, we'll need some quid pro quo.

The next noun, which is one of my favorites, is catch-22. This is two words. It's a compound noun. The word catch is just one syllable and then 22 is three syllables and the stress is on that final syllable. Catch-22. The word comes from a famous book by Joseph Heller, which is titled Catch-22. And the meaning of a catch-22, see if you can follow me, is it is a problem that cannot be solved because the solution to the problem is inherent in the problem itself. Now, you may be thinking, what the heck are you talking about? And it's often referred to situations where, again, you can't solve the problem because the solution is within the problem itself and it's just like this circular loop. So, this is a a great noun to describe this type of situation and again, it's just like a standalone statement. are tough, they resent you and when you are cool, they walk all over you.

Catch-22. There's no unspoken thing. Well, it's a catch-22 because if you said it, then it would be spoken. Part of their paroles that they're required to have a job, the catch-22 of it is not that many people are that excited to hire a felon. We don't really use this noun with any adjectives. It's just really that standalone statement and you would describe something and say, it's a catch-22.

Next is epitome. And this noun has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. Epitome. This is a word that when you see it, many times people may mispronounce it because the third syllable has that schwa and the last syllable is that long e. Epitome. Epitome. And what it means is a a person or thing that is that is typical of a a class or group as a whole. Something that possesses to to the highest degree what what this whole group is all about. And therefore, we we say that something is the epitome of something else. Kind of giving an example, saying that this thing best represents this whole group.

It's the epitome of something. Interactive English is the epitome of English teaching excellence. And if you agree with that statement, then go ahead and and hit that like button down below. It's it's kind of like a quid pro quo. I teach you new nouns, you hit that like button. It's a fair exchange. Another great noun is dichotomy. This word has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. Dichotomy. And that third syllable it has that schwa, that uh sound. Dichotomy. What it means is the division or or contrast between two things that are represented as being opposed or entirely different. So, let me give you a couple examples of a dichotomy. You could have science and religion. Two things that you can compare and they're kind of opposed to each other in some ways. Also, city life and country life.

Completely different, but we can still compare them. And when using this noun, you you say the two things that that you're comparing. Dichotomy of good and evil. The tired dichotomy of jock, artist. Often, we use it with the preposition between. You talk about the dichotomy between two things. For example, we could say, we're studying the dichotomy between economic development and environmental protection.

The next noun is myriad. This word has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. That m y r sounds like a mir. Myriad. And a myriad is a very great or indefinitely great number of things. Often, it can be used as a synonym for various. You talk about a myriad of something. There's a lot of variety. There's a great number of these things. There's a myriad. There is a myriad of trees in the forest.

The next noun is credence. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. Credence. And what it means is the belief as as to the truth of something that you're kind of that there's a belief and it's showing that that belief is true. I never gave these stories much credence. He's a criminal or a terrorist. People aren't going to give him credence. And uh though we we give them no credence at all, Larry. And often, you may find this noun with the verb give. Something gives a belief credence. It makes it seem a little more true. For example, the email they discovered gave credence to his unethical behavior.

Next is malaise. This word has two syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. Malaise. And this is not a great noun. The reason I say this is because its meaning is a a vague feeling of physical discomfort or uneasiness as an early sign of an illness. So, if somebody is just starting to feel ill, then it's very possible that they might experience malaise. I experienced bad headaches and malaise before deciding to go to the doctor.

The next noun is sycophant. And this noun has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable. The spelling may throw people off to the pronunciation, but that s y c is just pronounced sick. Sycophant. And the meaning of a sycophant is a person that that tries to gain attention by flattering wealthy or influential people. So, this is not a good noun. You don't want somebody to call you a sycophant because basically means you're sucking up to somebody else for no real reason. It's pathetic. Yeah, it's not good. Some sycophants in the media refuse to acknowledge the political corruption.

Another great noun, which is another one of my favorites, is a dilettante. And this word has three syllables and there's kind of like a stress on that first and last syllable. Dilettante. The reason I say it's one of my favorites is because I guess, you know, I could be considered a dilettante. Many of us can be considered dilettantes because its meaning is a person that that cultivates an interest in something without really learning in-depth information. And I think this just happens with people all the time. We become interested in a topic and we learn a little bit about it so that we can converse with our friends and have discussions. But we we have difficulty really debating this topic with facts and information because we just don't know enough. They will remain dilettantes in war and tourists in Vietnam. What's your point? Your knowledge is a mile wide and an inch deep. Do you know what that makes you? A dilettante. But if somebody calls you a dilettante, then it's probably not in a good sense because they're they're probably referring to you saying that well, you're a person that you think you know a lot, but you really don't. You want to think she knows a lot about health and nutrition, but she's really a dilettante. The next noun is zenith. Has two syllables and the stress is on the first syllable, zenith. And when talking about the zenith, you are talking about the top, the peak, the highest point or state of something or someone's condition. So, if you are at the top, the highest point, then you are at the zenith. It basically implies that you're not going to go any higher. So, it's like saying you you've reached the top, you're not going to go any higher, and things are just going to start going downhill from here.

His athletic career has reached its zenith. So, I hope some of these nouns were new for you and now that you've learned them, you can go out and practice using them so that you can improve your overall English fluency. Today, I have a vocabulary lesson for you and these words are all adverbs. They are advanced adverbs and every single one of them ends in l y. And these are great adverbs to know because they're really going to help you accurately express your thoughts, opinions, and ideas. And throughout the lesson, I'm going to do a few things for you. I am going to show you the adverb. I will then tell you the correct pronunciation. I'll give you the meaning and then I will also give you some example sentences so that you can see how the adverb is used in context and that is really useful because it's just going to reinforce the meaning.

The next word is reluctantly. This word has four syllables and the stress is on that second syllable. That third syllable also has that schwa, reluctantly. Reluctantly. And what it means is that just unwillingness to do something. That you are not inclined to do this thing. Reluctantly, I am asking for your help. But all he gives his loser son is grief. And a place to live. Reluctantly. He gives that reluctantly. Each year we we have to pay our taxes annually, but I think most of us reluctantly file our taxes. It's not something we want to do, but we have to do it and many of us do it reluctantly. The employees reluctantly came in to work over the weekend.

Then we have unabashedly. This adverb has five syllables and the stress is on that third syllable, that bash, unabashedly. That second syllable has that schwa, that uh sound, unabashedly. And what it means is just that you are not apologetic, you are not embarrassed, you are very certain about your position. You do something unabashedly or maybe you say something unabashedly. She unabashedly told her boss that she wanted a raise. Then we have an adverb that that I like to use and that is vaguely. It has two syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, vaguely. And vaguely means that something is not clearly expressed or something is not clearly stated. Does smell vaguely poisonous. Who are exposing me to information and ideas that seem vaguely familiar. If I were to reach our rendezvous on Titan with the time stone still attached, you'll vaguely irritating person.

Kramer, remember that whole deal with you selling Peter in your stories for his book and then he came back to you? Vaguely. We often use it with the word remember. I vaguely remember What do I vaguely remember? I vaguely remember the example. I vaguely remember you telling me to pick this up at the grocery store. The next adverb is one of my favorites, fervently. It has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, fervently. And what it means is that you are just showing great enthusiasm, great intensity to do something. For example, right now I'm fervently trying to explain the meaning of these new adverbs. They fervently worked around the clock in order to finish the project on time.

Next, we have diligently. This adverb has four syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, diligently. And it just means that that you are working very hard to accomplish something. You are very focused on the task at hand and often it's used with the verb work. We have been working diligently on this problem. Preston shares your concerns and is working diligently to find a solution. Senator Gates had a series of mini strokes a few months ago, but we are working diligently to get him through his final term. I'm sure all of you are working diligently to build your vocabulary and learn new words, which is why you're here. The police diligently collected evidence in order to find the criminal.

Then we have another great adverb, which is vicariously. This adverb has five syllables and the stress is on that third syllable. Is it on the third syllable? I vaguely remember. Second syllable, my bad. The stress is on that second syllable. Well, yes, it is on the second syllable. That third syllable, it's like that that letter i just has that e sound and the fourth syllable has the schwa, vicariously. And what this adverb means is imagining a situation through the eyes of another person. Okay? And it's often heard over and over again in the same way. You live vicariously through another person. So, if somebody else has this exciting life going on and you're trying to imagine it and you might tell them, wow, I am going to live vicariously through you.

Yes. I live vicariously through you, remember? So, I can live vicariously through you guys, can't I? Marry me. Uh-huh. I need to live vicariously through you. Just give me a couple of details. No. Wow, I'm I'm just going to live live vicariously through you because you're doing all these cool and amazing things and you're going to tell me about it and I will imagine it. She lived vicariously through her children.

The next adverb is hastily. This word has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, hastily. And what it means is just excessive speed. That you are doing something quickly, rapidly, and with great urgency. And because you're working so fast, you're you're not going to be able to put the the same amount of care into it that you normally would, which means that you might be more likely to make mistakes if you are working hastily. Just to these hastily passed, untested, pandering laws. Perhaps I spoke hastily. Oh. A last minute gift hastily bought on the way to the party. Often I think of a situation where you're running out of time and that's a problem. So, you have to work hastily in order to get it done.

They hastily completed the final report in order to meet the deadline. Then we have another great adverb, utterly. This word has three syllables and the stress is on that first syllable, utterly. It means completely, totally, absolutely. Those are all synonyms for utterly. And he was brilliant. Utterly. Utterly brilliant. She's insane. Utterly mad. Completely and utterly alone. I prefer to use utterly because I I think it adds a nice little emphasis to to the verb or the adjective that you're describing. For example, his outfit is utterly ridiculous.

Next is intently. This adverb has three syllables and the stress is on that second syllable, intently. So, this word means that you're you're just giving all of your attention to something, that you are you are sharply focused on this thing. I'm sure he's pressing his ear up against it and listening intently. Why is he watching us so intently? And you are intently listening to someone. Maybe you are intently watching something. Are you guys intently watching this video? I hope so. I hope you listen intently to our lessons. So, we work diligently to come up and create new English lessons for you guys each week, and I completely and utterly hope that that you find them useful and that they're easy to follow. So, if they are if you were listening intently to this lesson, let me know in the comments. Tell me and just write, "I intently listened to this lesson." That way I know that you were focused, you paid attention, and you understood all of these adverbs. Let me know in the comments. Thank you guys so much for watching. Don't forget to hit that like button.

Actually, you can fervently hit that like button. Do it with some energy, some enthusiasm. I want to teach you 15 irregular verbs that I think will help you improve your overall English fluency. Now, these irregular verbs in particular are not as common as verbs like go or have, but they are very useful especially in specific situations, which is why they are a bit more advanced. So, I'm going to give you the verb in three different forms. The present, the past, and the past participle. I will also tell you the meaning of the verb and then give you an example sentence so that you can see how it's used in context.

arise. That is the present, the past, and the past participle. And this just means to become apparent, to notice something. So, to give you an example, I could use it in the past and say, "New problems arose last week, which delayed the project." If you were working on something and problems arose, then that may delay the work that you're doing. Problems arose. Then we have the verb bear, bore, born. Notice that with the past participle you may find it with the e or without the e. And this verb has a few different meanings. It can mean to turn slightly in one direction. It can also mean to accept something that is unpleasant or to give birth or produce. So, let me give you a few example sentences. I could say, "Uh if I'm giving directions, you need to bear to the left, or you need to bear to the right." This is a common way in which this verb is used in the present tense. Or perhaps I could say, "He was the leader and bore the responsibility of his team." It was his team, so he bore the responsibility and had to accept maybe something unpleasant. And finally, I could use it in the present perfect and say, "The apple trees have bore plenty of fruit this season." They have produced plenty of fruit, have borne. The next verb I have for you is behold, beheld, beheld. So, the past and the past participle are the same. And this verb just means to see or observe something. And often I think you may hear it being used in the context of like showing somebody something that you want them to see, and you'd say, "Behold, um behold my water bottle." Now, you'd want to show somebody something a little more exciting than a water bottle, but you get the idea as to how somebody might use this verb, "Behold." And then they would show somebody something that is important or maybe even a little surprising. The next verb is creep, crept, crept. Now, this verb means to move slowly and carefully in order to avoid being heard. You don't want anybody to notice you, you don't want anybody to hear you, so you might creep through a room, and that that's kind of that's how I was going to use it in my example, and I was going to say, "Last night I crept into the kitchen and took a cookie." And that's actually a true story. Yes, last night I did I crept into the kitchen. And the reason that I crept into the kitchen is that well, I felt a little guilty. So, I just I didn't want anybody to hear me, and I crept into the kitchen. Notice how many times I say these verbs. I do that for a reason, so you will hear it again and again and again because this works. This will help you remember. Then we have deal, dealt, dealt. And this verb has a couple of different meanings. It can mean to distribute cards, or that you have some kind of business in commercial trading and you are buying and selling things. I think most often you would use it in the context of a card game and playing cards, and somebody would deal the cards. I can give you an example sentence in which you could actually use all three forms of this verb. I could say, "She deals the cards" in the present tense.

Or in the past, "She dealt the cards." Or if I want to use the past participle, I could give you a sentence in the present perfect, "She has dealt the cards." Then we have forsake, forsook, forsaken. verb means to abandon or to give up. For example, I think of usually some kind of promise or commitment was abandoned. People take vows. So, somebody could say, "He has forsaken his vows. He has abandoned his commitment, his promises. He has forsaken his vows." Now, the next two verbs cause a lot of confusion, and I hope to clear up some of that confusion right now. So, let's just start with lie, lay, lain. And this verb means to assume a resting position or to be kept in a specific state. That that's where you are. So, let me give you an example. I will use it in the past, and I'd say, "Well, I didn't feel well, I lay in bed all day." That this happened in the past, I assumed that resting position in my bed, and I lay in bed. Don't confuse this with the other meaning of the verb, which is to say something that's not true. That is actually a regular verb and ends in ed. But still, this irregular verb, lie, lay, lain, is confused with another irregular verb, which is lay, laid, laid. And this verb means to put something down or to prepare something. Lay, laid, laid. So, let me give you an example, and we'll we'll start with putting something down. Again, I can use one sentence and use all three forms. For example, I could say, "We lay the baby on the bed" in the present tense. Or in the past, "We laid the baby on the bed." Or using the past participle, "We have laid the baby on the bed." We have put the baby down.

Then to give you an example with its other meaning, to prepare something, I think you may hear somebody say, "We've already laid the groundwork for this project." Laid the groundwork. They have prepared for the start of this project, to lay the groundwork. So, please don't confuse these verbs. Lie, which is to assume a resting position, lie in bed, or lay, which is to put something down. I'm going to lay I'm going to lay my head down on the pillow. Then we have mean, meant, meant. And this I think is actually a very common verb, but the meaning can be a little challenging. And what this verb means is to intend to refer to something. Often I think it's used when we're talking about questions. Well, what does this mean? I might ask students, "Well, what does this word mean?" Or if I want to use it in the past and say, "Well, that is not what I was referring to." You may hear somebody say, "Well, no, no, that's not what I meant. That's not what I meant. I didn't want to refer to this thing. That's not what I meant." Then we have the verb overtake, overtook, overtaken. And this verb means to come from behind and move in front of. Often I think you would hear this verb used in the context of driving because cars pass each other all the time, and you might want to overtake a car that is in front of you. I can give you an example and say, "Well, we overtook the bus because it was driving so slow." So, we came from behind and went in front of the bus. We overtook the bus. Then we have the verb rise, rose, risen.

This verb has a couple of different meanings. The first one is to move from a lower position to a higher position. And the next meaning is just to get up. So, let's start with the first meaning, and I'll give you an example, and I could give you a simple sentence and use all three forms. the past, "The sun rose." Or using the past participle, "The sun has risen." And if I want to say get up, I often think of the expression rise and shine. And somebody would say this just telling somebody else to get up, "It's time to start your day. Rise and shine." Next is the verb swear, swore, sworn. And this verb means that you are making a promise to do something. Swear, swore, sworn.

And let me give you another example in which you could use all three forms in this one sentence. I could say, he swears to tell the truth. Or in the past, he swore to tell the truth. Or he has sworn to tell the truth. Often I think it's used in in that context of you're you're making a promise in which you are going to tell the truth. I think it's also used as a question and somebody would just ask, you know, do you swear? Do you promise? Or they might say, do you swear on something that is important which in that case it's kind of an expression which means, well, you really have to be serious about this promise to swear on something. Then we have shake, shook, shaken. And this verb means to move something up and down or from side to side or or even to tremble.

And I could use it and give you an example and just say, you know, when we met we shook hands. I often think of this verb being used talking about introductions and people shaking hands. Or to give you an example about trembling, I think well, in that case I think somebody is very cold and not only that but I think it would often be used in the continuous tense. So, I could say, well, you know, last night was very cold and I was shaking. I I was shaking as I lay in bed. Next is weep, wept, wept. And this verb means just well, to cry or to shed tears. And often I think it would be used in a context that is a little more serious, a little more severe in which you would say that you wept. You were crying a lot. For example, uh I could say that after the breakup he wept for days. He was so sad, he wept for days. Then we have withdraw, withdrew, withdrawn. And this verb means to remove something or to take something back. So, when I think of this verb, I think it's often used in the context of money and you could say, well, she has withdrawn all her money from the bank account. She has removed it from her account. Or maybe you want to apply for a job and then you decide that you don't want it. And I can give you an example and use all three forms and say, I withdraw my name from consideration. Or I withdrew my name from consideration or I have withdrawn my name from consideration. Wow, I'm impressed that you have made it all the way to the end. Congratulations. I'm sure that you have learned some new vocabulary and I'm sure that a lot of that was also review and it's good to get that review. But try to listen for these words or if you're reading, try to identify them and also practice them if you're having a conversation. So, if you enjoyed the lesson, please hit that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time. So long.

I want to help you build your vocabulary by teaching you some super Advanced words and phrases that are going to help you be more descriptive and precise and if you'd like to get the lesson notes click on the link down in the description join our email community and you can access these notes if you're already a part of our community then I have sent them to you so let's begin with some super Advanced verbs and for each one I'm going to talk a little bit about the meaning and give you different examples as to how they're used in context so the first one is to bamboozle someone I really like this verb it means to trick or deceive someone Often by confusing them and you might say well I was Bamboozled into doing something or buying something or someone Bamboozled me I just really like saying the word bamboozle here are some news headlines

so you can see how this verb is used in context why smartphones bamboozle politicians holiday firms trying to bamboozle customers with long tnc's including jet tw's 23732 words tnc's in this case refers to terms and conditions so again that is a way that perhaps a company is trying to bamboozle its customers and then watch GAA star bamboozle Australian foe with gaic football skill that leaves AFL crowd stunned the next verb is to dwindle this means to become smaller in size or amount or fewer in number so you could say that something is starting to dwindle in order to help you better understand this verb I wanted to show you some different synonyms that have a similar meaning they may not all be direct synonyms so I'm not going to go over all of them I'm just going to mention a few that I think are a little more common like decline instead of saying something is declining you could say it start to dwindle or diminish or drop fade lessen these are all verbs that have a similar meaning to dwindle every year our numbers dwindle well our membership has been dwindling over the past 5 years his business is twindle down to almost nothing then there's to jeopardize this means to put someone or something in a situation in which there is a danger of loss harm or failure and this is a verb that's a little more descriptive and to help you better understand this verb I wanted to share some common cations with you these are words that are frequently used together so you could say that something jeopardizes your chances or your health or something may jeopardize progress or jeopardize a group of people like passengers or citizens or even jeopardize your chances of winning something I'm not going to go through all of these collocations but this this is a great way to build your vocabulary instead of learning just one word you're learning other words that are often used with it the next verb that I want to look at is to entertain now this is a verb that has multiple meanings and I'm not talking about the the one that most people are familiar with which is just to feel enjoyment from watching something in this case I'm talking about giving attention or consideration to some idea or feeling or perhaps even a suggestion so here are some example sentences using the verb entertain in this context he refused to entertain my offer or I will not entertain such accusations or she wouldn't entertain his outlandish suggestions in each of these examples I'm using it with the negative saying somebody did not entertain the offer or did not entertain these accusations it doesn't have to be used with the negative but I do think in this context that that is how you may hear it that you're not going to consider something and you're not going to entertain this thought or idea then we have to articulate this is a great verb especially I think when when talking about learning other languages because it means expressing oneself readily clearly and effectively so one thing I want to point out with this verb is the pronunciation because you can use it as a verb or an adjective however the pronunciation is different with the verb the stress is on the second syllable but the final syllable has that long a sound articulate to articulate something he articulated the new policy changes if we're going to use it as an adjective the stress is still on the second syllable but that final syllable has more of a short eye sound articulate someone is articulate he is very articulate it's difficult to articulate ability to articulate never ceases to amaze many of them cannot even articulate the fo let's move on and talk about some Advanced adjectives and for these words I wanted to give you some synonyms as well as an example sentence so if you say that someone is sanctimonious this is really a word that you would use to describe a person it has a similar meaning if you were saying that someone is self-righteous or insincere hypocritical Pious or smug this person is sanctimonious he gave a self-serving and sanctimonious speech the next adjective is preposterous this is another word that I just enjoy saying but some synonyms include ridiculous strange bizarre foolish excessive that cow won't be able to climb over the style that's preposterous and I think you may hear it used in that statement and someone would just say look that's preposterous that's preposterous that's preposterous that's preposterous no that is preposterous the next word is levelheaded I think this is a great adjective to describe someone especially in the context of work and you want to talk about your colleague or a boss who is levelheaded some other synonyms for this word include practical balanced composed reasonable cool-headed these are all words that have a positive connotation my colleague works well under pressure she's very levelheaded the next adjective is daunting now this has more of a negative connotation and you can see that just by looking at those synonyms alarming awful dire disheartening Dreadful and you could describe something as daunting he faces the daunting Prospect of up to three different exams in one day yes that sounds daunting then there's agous this is another adjective that has a negative connotation some synonyms atrocious deplorable extreme flagrant glaring he made an egregious mistake so this is a great descriptive adjective anytime you want to add emphasis and talk about well how bad something really is and you could say that it's egregious to give you an example as to how often these words are used we can use engram viewer which allows us to compare the frequency of different words and phrases I have put in our five Super Advanced adjectives right there and you can see which ones are more commonly used like daunting egregious and then the other three are not as commonly used sanctimonious levelheaded Preposterous but again it's all about building your vocabulary so these words are good to know now speaking of great words let's have a look at some Advanced nouns and the first one is superiority this means the fact that one person or thing is better stronger than another here's an example sentence he boasted about his accomplishments and walked around the stage with an air of superior ority now I highlighted that entire phrase because this is a common cocation with this noun and I want to share with you some other collocations with the word superiority so you might hear it used if somebody's talking about an air of superiority or technological superiority or perhaps military superiority or moral superiority the next noun is custody this refers to the legal right or Duty to care for someone or something especially a child the court awarded custody to the mother and that is another collocation so let's have a look at some more verb noun collocations with the word custody to award custody or to get custody to share custody to Grant custody or you could use it when talking about gaining custody or losing custody these are all great phrases with this now is this Court's decision to award full custody to Mrs Hillary I lost custody with my daughter so that's why we've agreed to share custody next is the word novelty this refers to the quality of being new and unusual so here's an example sentence I still love scuba diving but after several Dives the novelty started to wear off that is a common cocation if you say that the novelty is wearing off or it's starting to wear off or the novelty has worn off here's another funny little example using this this is supposed to be a joke the novelty of your lazy eye has yet to wear off yes that is a a very strange and unusual statement to say to someone and I'd probably say look that's that's preposterous that statement is preposterous next is the word comeback this refers to a situation in which someone or something becomes popular famous or successful again after a period of being much less popular and in that case you would say that something is making a comeback like my example sentence socks and sandals are making a comeback I will admit I I wear socks and sandals occasionally I would like to think that it's making a comeback but it probably not but we could use it with the verb make you could also use it with those other verbs to mount a comeback or even to Stage a comeback my guest today are mounting a comeback I'm trying to Stage a comeback here apparently syphilis is making a comeback so you could use it when talking about popularity but I think it's also commonly used when referring to sports a team is losing and then all of a sudden they make a comeback or mount a comeback or stage a comeback then we have the word scene this is an expression of great anger or or a similar feeling often between two people or an occasion when this happens so I I could say please don't raise your voice you're making a scene so again this is a common cocation with this noun it is a noun that has multiple meanings but I'm not talking about the the scene of a movie I'm talking about somebody making a scene and they're raising their voice they're attracting ing attention and you could use it with the verb make or you might say that someone is causing a scene or you're commenting on somebody else arguing or fighting in public and then you could say well that was quite a scene let's now have a look at some Advanced adverbs and the first one that I want to teach you is blindly this means not thinking about or understanding what you're doing I really think this picture sums up this word nicely with Darth Vader and the Stormtroopers they blindly follow orders without questioning Authority and I I think that is another collocation with this adverb to blindly follow orders to give you some more context I have some news headlines for you China asks Banks not to blindly withdraw loans to developers and then painful experience rational contemplation lead Europe to reflect on blindly following the us and finally we must not blindly follow the science so again hopefully this gives you a better idea as to how this adverb is used in context then we have sparsely this means with only a small number or amount of people or things I could say the town is remote and sparsely populated there's just a very small number once again here are some more news headlines so you can see how it's used in context get to know the sparsely populated area where you can work without the need for documents or Bard say man dies on sparsely populated island of GED I know I'm mispronouncing that but one thing I want you to keep in mind just looking at those first two headlines sparsely populated that is a common collocation and then finally withdrawn covid-19 vaccine sparsely used in Bermuda the next word is Expedition iously this means with speed and efficiency they worked expeditiously in order to fix the mistake before the deadline here are some more news headlines using this adverb bipartisan lawmakers urge DOJ to act expeditiously on Tik Tok complaint or Pakistan Iran agree to expeditiously finalize trade agreement and then finance ministry asked Banks to expeditiously resolve issues of exporters but I shut that down expeditiously expeditiously man I need to quit right here what's up the next adverb is auspiciously this means in a way that suggests a positive and successful future our vacation didn't start auspiciously the flight was delayed for 12 hours so in this case I'm saying well it didn't start in a positive and successful way and it didn't start auspiciously once again here are a few more news headlines so you can get a better idea as to how it's used in context start the month auspiciously what the stars have predicted for the signs during August or auspiciously awesome eat it and like it and then we have unlocking luck how to travel auspiciously this Lunar New Year 2024 with Jennifer 2 let's have a look at our next word which is billy this means happy and without worry really a casual and cheerful indifference so it's like you're just not thinking about something or you're trying not to think about something because you just you don't want to worry about it and you're you're happy you're indifferent I could say they billy ignored any evidence that did not support their Theory here are a few more examples Yellowstone tourist billy wanders into the middle of a herd of two 2,000 lb bison that is a big mistake or us companies push guns as billy and murderously as they once did tobacco and finally you are billy unaware of how educational research impacts you so those are some adverbs to help you be a little more descriptive and accurate and here is a review of all of the words so let's let's practice them right now I know that you are not going to memorize all of these words that seems like a daunting task but I believe that you are a levelheaded person and that if you study them you're going to be able to learn them over time and I'm I'm not trying to trick you I'm not trying to bamboozle you I hope that you will entertain my suggestion and continue to learn them and review them and of course if you would like to keep building your vocabulary you can watch another video Lesson because I would also like to think that the novelty of learning new vocabulary has not worn off and you would like to learn more new words and phrases so uh again you don't have to blindly follow my suggestions that's just what I think I'm going to wrap things up and I'm not going to make a scene I'm just going to say goodbye but if you enjoyed the lesson and learned something new please let me know by hitting that like Button as always thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time so long

LESSON 198 OF 749

Advanced Vocabulary to Describe People (like politicians)

let's talk about some Advanced vocabulary words that you can use to describe politicians now it is an election year in the US which is where I'm from and I'm sure you're aware that it is an election year so I wanted to focus on this topic because these are words that you may likely come across in the the coming months but I will say these are very descriptive words that you can really use to talk about friends family members colleagues not necessarily all of them but for the most part you can use them like this so the other thing I want to say if you would like to get the lesson notes just click on the link Down Below in the description if you are already a part of our community then please check your inbox I have sent them to you let's go ahead and begin this is a quiz lesson so

I would love it if you participate and I because we're talking about politics we're you know there there's a lot of negative things that you can say I think most of us probably have a negative association if I ask you to think about politicians I'm going to try to balance it and I'm going to give you some negative words and positive words we'll start with the negative ones and I'm also going to try to balance it between Democrats and Republicans the two main parties in the US and then once we get to the end I'll tell you a little bit about my um what where you know where I'm coming from when it comes to uh Democrats and Republicans but of course you can find good and bad things to say about people on both sides so unfortunately there are many unethical and politicians I'm giving you the first few first few letters or I will give you the first letter to see if you can come up with the word now this is a this is definitely a more advanced word so it's a little more challenging unfortunately there are many unethical and politicians what do you think and as we go through I may try to give some shout outs so un and then you have the word that begins with an S I'll tell you right now that we're we're talking about the prefix un un politicians and I think this is definitely true I have blurred out the picture only because I there is a politician behind there and then I will tell you who I think is an M politician I almost said it so unfortunately there are many unethical and M politicians this is really kind of a synonym for unethical and the word the answer is unscrupulous so if you say someone is unscrupulous it means that they're behaving in a way that is just dishonest unfair they just want to get what they want probably looking at that meaning you think wow that definitely describes a politician and in that case you could say they are unscrupulous an unscrupulous politician and if this is a new word for you that's great I think this one is definitely one you may hear when talking about politicians and to give you an example of an unscrupulous politician our winner is Senator Bob Menendez who is a Democrat and this is recent too Senator I've given you an example down there Senator Bob Mendez found guilty in bribery scheme and this happened very recently and even years ago people they were investigating him because of accusations so this this is not a uh a a very ethical person Bob Mendez I think they are getting rid of him at this point and I say good riddens we don't need any more unscrupulous politicians in Washington so hopefully that that may be a new word great job oh excellent r F good job nice one thing I want to point out with this because we're using the prefix un unscrupulous so if you wanted to say that someone is scrupulous it has the opposite meaning that they behave in a way that is more ethical honest the reason why I'm giving you this is because this is one of those rare instances when the negative is actually more often used than the positive so you're more likely to hear somebody describe another person as unscrupulous instead of just saying scrupulous and that's just one thing I wanted to point out using engram viewer which allows us to check out the frequency of different words and phrases so I'm sure if I ask you to think of an unscrupulous politician you probably have someone in mind what do you think about this her remarks during the committing meeting were uncalled for and the missing word uh begins with the letter V and because V is you know it's not the most commonly used letter in the English alphabet perhaps you can think of uh an adjective that would fit this description talking about someone's remarks and I think that is a little bit of a a collocation her M remarks during the committee meeting were uncalled for what do you think that in this case again it's negative we're talking about negative words what would you use to describe someone the way they talk is just really it's you know it's off-putting you don't like it and you say oh this person is just really what the answer that we're looking for the the adjective that we're looking for is vulgar her vulgar remarks during the committing meeting were uncalled for if you describe someone as vulgar which is

first time she has been associated with the word vulgar because of her attacks and the way she talks about people and treats people you know some of her supporters I think they they enjoy this about her but I think you got to own it that even if you do like her yes she is someone that you could describe as vulgar how about this next this next negative word right here he will say or do anything to remain relevant he is a complete M starts with s and you can see that I'm using the article a complete what so basically I'm trying to tell you that this is a noun it's not an ad adjective you can use nouns to describe people as well but someone who will just say or do anything they're really I don't know sucking up to another person just like a cheerleader and it doesn't matter they just want to be relevant they want to have power and you could say this person is a what I think it's often used in politics but even I think in business to some extent you have certain Business Leaders that are very powerful influential and then down people who suck up to them or you could describe them using this noun as well he will say or do anything to remain relevant he is a complete what what do you think I oh wow excellent wellplayed Kurt we're talking about someone and Julia somebody who is a siopen and this is I'm giving you the meaning somebody who's praising people in Authority in a way that is not sincere usually in order to get some advantage from them but also I feel like I mentioned somebody who's kind of like cheerleading for this person and whatever they say or do that oh it's okay it doesn't bother there's nothing wrong with it and you could describe someone as a sycophant this is one that you will hear in politics because you those are people in positions of authority but as I said before in business as well you could maybe describe someone who treats the business leader this way as a sycophant somebody is a sycophant and when I think of the word sycophant as far as politicians go especially in the US I think of Lindsey Graham of course he is a senator from uh South Carolina he is a Republican and here's an example a news headline for you Trump sycophant Lindsey Graham will do everything I can he says I will do everything I can to make impeachment die quickly in in the Senate some of these people you I don't know if you follow us politics you may have heard about these people you may have seen them on TV and I'm trying to mix it up between whether it's a governor a senator Congress person uh we you'll see there there's well I I wanted to blur out the pictures kind of leave it as a real surprise until the end but Lindsey Graham is a sycophant and he is a republican sycophant how about uh this word right here nobody was convinced by his M explanation and that is a cocation with this adjective a m explanation starts with the G and you may also use it uh other collocations to say somebody as an M speaker as well kind of the way that they talk I know there are probably some other some words that may fit this description but there is one word in particular it's an advanced word so it's not one that you're going to use every day again this is more related to politics if you follow us politics read the news or listen to the news you you are more like you are likely going to come across them at some point so the word that I'm thinking of and I'm using this well I don't want to give it away nobody was convinced by his glib explanation so the word glib means that someone is well speaking or like something is spoken in a confident way but without really careful thought or honesty so if you think somebody's just being dishonest they're insincere and really the way they're talking so that's why I said that you may use it as a collocation to say that well it was a glib explanation or someone is a glib speaker and we're going to use the word glib and to give you a hint the winner uh when I think of somebody who gave a glib explanation when they said I did not have sexual relations with that woman then hopefully you hear that you think of this man right here Bill Clinton so Clinton was a you know he's not a politician now still somebody who comes up in conversation the the president a while back uh even before uh well right before uh George Bush and uh he he is somebody who I again in that definitely in that s in that sense when he was claiming that look I did not know this person this is a lie he was being insincere that was a glib explanation and this is it's not a news headline this was actually from another headline about the a documentary that has recently come out about the the Bill Clinton and this was like his explanation is so horrible when he says oh Bill Clinton blames presidential stress for Monica Lewinsky scandal did to manage my anxieties and it's like yeah come on come on dude so he is somebody you could say that was a glib explanation a glib speaker but I think this one is a good word to know because I feel like in general politicians in general are glib speakers that you really don't know if you can trust exactly what they're saying because it you know they they're saying it for their own self-interest and they are glib speakers or maybe they give a glib explanation I hope some of these words are new if they are you can let me know hit that like button uh or let me know some of those hearts in the chat tells me that okay you're building your vocabulary and that's that's what the goal is how about this question right here at this point I don't trust his rulings this is my personal opinion right now this is what I would say at this point I don't trust his rulings I think he is a a m there are two words I'm giving you the first letter of each word a m basically because we're talking about I don't trust his rulings probably you can put it into context and know that I'm talking about somebody who is a part of the judicial system now technically speaking so you may argue well you know these aren't really polit Ians yeah kind of I don't know in a sense yes but at the end of the day the way that these people are appointed it's extremely political and they may as well be politicians and that's kind of the point that I'm I'm trying to make so what do you think at this point I don't trust his rulings I think he's a what and I think this this phrase is definitely one that is more associated with politics some of these other words uh when we talked about somebody like vulgar or glib you could use them to talk about colleagues and others but this one is definitely a little more specific when talking about politics I don't trust his rulings I think he is a partisan hack so the meaning of this in G the the meaning of this phrase is someone who cares more about supporting a particular party or ideology than supporting what is morally right or factually true I said that you're going to hear this phrase specifically when talking about politics that somebody is very partisan that they only support their party and I'm using the word hack if you want to say somebody is a hack it's more of a derogatory term that they are unprofessional like they don't know what they're talking about they don't know what they're doing and this person is hack you may use that noun in other contexts but because we're talking about partisan that makes it very political in nature and the winner of the partisan hack award which uh which Supreme Court Justice do you think I'm talking about perhaps you know if you follow some if you've been watching the news I'm talking about Clarence Thomas and uh this was a great article headline I found there is no doubt anymore the US Supreme Court is run by partisan hacks specifically Clarence Thomas has been in the news a lot over the in the course of the last year for taking money from uh billionaires going on these lavish vacations and the way that he well his rulings nowadays it's I I feel comfortable even though maybe you disagree and that's okay I feel comfortable in my opinion saying that yeah he he is a partisan hack he he may as well be out there campaigning with the Republicans I've labeled him as a republican I'm sure he votes Republican and he is Republican through and through and even you know changes his mind and argues it against himself I don't want to go into details about you know the ins and outs of what's been going on with the Supreme Court but in my view I think Clarence Thomas is a partisan hack how about this uh this one he's such a m and really has a way with words this is another phrase I'm giving you the first letter s and t this is a phrase that I think that you may have heard of before especially if some of this other vocabulary is new and you could use this phrase to talk about people outside of Politics as well really anyone who has a way with words they are a in you know if you don't know that for phrase it's saying that someone is a convincing speaker they're very persuasive but maybe not always persuasive in a sincere and honest way and in that case you could say someone is a what any guesses I haven't seen it in the chat that's why I kind of prolong these explanations but the phrase that I'm talking about is a smooth talker he's such a smooth talker and really has a way with words it uh means that somebody talks in a very confident way and is really likely to persuade people but in this case it may not always be honest and sincere one thing I want to point out with this phrase is that generally speaking I think it does have more of a negative connotation if you say this person's a smooth talker kind really in more of a negative way that it doesn't mean it's always going to be negative it could just be somebody is very persuasive the way they argue and the the way they present information and say wow this person is definitely a smooth talker so it it could be a little more neutral in that sense but I do think it's negative and the person when I think of someone who is a smooth talker I think of Governor Gavin Newsom he's the governor of California and uh here's a little headline to Santis who was the governor of Florida should um be of Newsom's smooth talking used car salesman Persona which may appeal to viewers during the debate a while back he had a debate uh the two Governors Gavin Newsom and Ron de Santis and he is like I'll to he is a smooth talker even when presented with things that are very problematic with California again I think even if you're you like Gavin Newsom you just got to own it California has many problems I used to live there and I think one of the things that they try to press him on is the the issues when it comes to homelessness and crime and when he answers these questions he's very smooth he's a he's a politician that he's able to talk about it and frame it in a way and kind of go around to where you're like oh okay maybe yeah maybe they're doing a good job but really at the end of the day these are serious problems that uh the state of California is facing but Gavin Newsom is a like I said he is a very effective politician because of the way he talks because of the way he communicates and you could say he's a smooth talker now we we talked about some negative words let's let's move on to some positive words or words with a positive connotation because I think there are probably so many different negative words that we could talk about but I don't want to I don't want to uh just focus on uh the the bad let's let's move on to the good so the first one many people support them because they are very what now I have blanked out the word not giving you any letters but I'm giving you the meaning down below so these people are very

what word means that it will be used to describe people who have an outgoing energetic and likable personality that seems to naturally draw other people to them you would say someone is what and I feel like this is a word that you may be familiar with you've heard perhaps you already use it actively and it's part of your active memory right now and you know this adjective but I think it is one that you definitely hear when talking about certain politicians not all of them but some of them they have this ability to draw people in and we're talking about someone who is well done Angela charismatic if someone is charismatic they just have this energy or personality that that really draws people in Well Done excellent uh raphaela um again hopefully again some of these words if they're new that's great so I don't know if you know the two people in this picture that that uh that I put in there so what well the people that were talking about Trump and Obama I know that people on either side you know they a lot of people don't like Trump a lot of people don't like Obama still even if you do not like these individuals you have to admit they are charismatic that the way they speak and talk to other people it draws them in and I think what's very fascinating about both Trump and Obama they are charismatic in different ways because they are not like they are totally different when they are speaking in front of an audience but they're still charismatic and this news headline just says so much from Obama to Trump America

now defers to charismatic leaders and I don't think that's anything new I think in many countries around the world many politicians if somebody is very charismatic I think it helps their career they're more likely to succeed in the world of politics if someone is charismatic the last thing I want to point out is because you say someone's charismatic it does have a more of a positive connotation but it does not mean that the this is a good person so just because you give someone a compliment say they're charismatic you're really talking about their energy and uh you know the way they talk the way they draw people in and people tend to like them but it's not necessarily commenting on whether somebody is good or moral or ethical I just want you to keep that in mind how about this people in California have always known she is a m and calculated politician the word that's missing means good at judging what other people or situations are really like I actually found quite a few different meanings for this one um but I thought this one would work somebody again who's good at judging like the situation and they're able to then make a decision as to well what is the best course of action and you could say someone is a politician this is an adjective that is often used when talking about politics what do you think any any guesses I know I feel like this is this is a little bit more of a challenging quiz and I think that's good if some of this vocabulary is new again let me know hitting that like button um that tells me that oh okay you're you're learning some new words the the word that are thinking of somebody who can judge these situations and that's often used when talking about politicians shrewd someone is a shrewd politician people in California have always known she is a shrewd and calculated politician I also want to point out that with this word if you say somebody is shrewd more or less it does have a positive connotation that they you can see the situation you can make a decision that's going to help you or or at least what you want to do however sometimes it does have this kind of uh it implies a level of like callousness that you don't care you just want to get your way you want to win and you are a shrewd politician and if it hurts somebody else then well that's that's the way it is so overall I think it's more of a positive if you say somebody is a shrewd politician but it could also come off as meaning like a little careless that you just want to win at the end of the day that is the most important thing if you say somebody is shrewd uh well done nice Julia Kurt raphaela excellent some uh uh Roman some of you got that one and again that that's a good one to know oh I wanted to I gave it away um I was gonna see if you could guess because we're talking about California uh probably the most one of the most you know maybe well the most well-known congresswoman uh at this point is Nancy Pelosi she's been uh representative of California for a long time uh and uh you can see in the article Nancy Pelosi shrewd tactician who confronted Trump she is a Democrat and I definitely think she is a definitely a shrewd politician there are others that also you fit into this uh category as well if someone is shrewd what do you think he has been able to work across the aisle because he is skilled in negotiating especially between states or people this is an adjective that is often used in politics but you could use it in the world of business as well if somebody needs to solve problems disputes disagreements you could say this let's get advice from this person because he or she is very what do you think what adjective has this meaning I think this is a word you are probably familiar with I'd still say it's an advanced word it's a descriptive word that you could use to talk about someone in that specific situation great at problem solving um settling arguments and in this case negotiating between states or people and you could say someone is very diplomatic and uh yeah in politics this is a well positive word you want politicians representatives to be diplomatic and be able to negotiate between different groups of people in this case in the US different parties helped avert a government shutdown which was important so I think Biden was able to be rather diplomatic here's an example brisk trip to Asia highlights Biden's diplomatic strengths and uh he hopes uh and he hopes his vigor as well well vigor is another thing the other thing that we're speaking of American politics that as I've shown you all these pictures something else you've probably noticed is that many of these people are quite old that is another issue that uh I have always had when it comes to politicians that you have these people that have been around for such a long time and they have trouble letting go and uh Biden of course uh is also very old looks a little confused in this picture and uh hanging out with Mitch McConnell who is another shrewd politician yet again very old what do you think he's because he always did what he felt was right the meaning the word that we're looking for showing strong beliefs about what is right and wrong and you could say somebody is what I know this since we get getting toward the end I think this is a little more difficult me just you know giving you a sentence and the meaning of the word because I know there are other words that are synonyms that you could probably also use but there's just one word that I'm thinking of if somebody has you know very strong beliefs about what is right and what is wrong you could say this person is very what I think you could use it in a variety of contexts but often it is used when talking about uh a politician and politics and saying that and I think this is definitely a positive word saying that someone is principled he's principled because he always did what he felt was right so if you talk about somebody whether it's a politician or someone else who is principled that they have their beliefs and I also think of somebody who's also consistent in their beliefs and they think this is what's right and wrong and I'm not going to change even no matter how much pressure someone gets and when I think of someone who is principled trying to balance it out between Democrats and Republicans I I think of uh the the late John McCain John McCain was a senator of Arizona he was the Republican Presidential nominee when uh went up against Barack Obama uh Barack Obama and lost and he he passed away uh here you can see in the article John McCain honored as a principled politician beloved father uh uh at Washington Funeral so this is what someone I think again even if you don't like John McCain that's okay but I still think you got to own it that yeah he is someone who is principled he had his beliefs and he wasn't going to change I think it was very uh iconic when they were trying to replace the Affordable Care Act uh in the Senate and he gave that thumbs down I'm voting against it in which case it was not going to pass even though he he was getting a lot of pressure because of that so that's someone I think of when I think of the word principled or a principled politician his argument are persuasive because he's such a speaker in this case we're talking about a positive word expressing yourself readily clearly and effectively I think this is something that many of you aspire to be I the same way I would like to be this kind of speaker as well we've already talked about a collocation that is more negative in saying someone is a glib speaker in which case they're more insincere Dishonest but this is a positive collocation again you could use it with the noun speaker and saying somebody is such a well I've given you a little bit of a hint n speaker because we're using the article n then you know that the word begins with a vowel sound that's a little bit of a hint right there and I think you've heard this collocation before if you follow the news um or you get a lot of exposure to English this is I think a common adjective when talking about someone's speaking ability and if you are someone who gives a lot of speeches or presentations it is very useful if you are an eloquent speaker well done Karina Faith uh Ravi Julia nice uh Raffaella good I think again this is a more common adjective I think you've heard it before but if you want to be descriptive and talk about someone who's very persuasive they can talk easily and I like I said smooth talker has a little bit of a negative connotation but if you want to just make it positive you could say someone is an eloquent speaker again maybe you don't like him but I think you got to own it an eloquent speaker is Pete Buddha judge he um is the Commerce transport a secretary in the Biden Administration he is a Democrat young guy which surprisingly I've shown you all these older people he is actually pretty young he's in his uh late 30s I believe so he I think he's going to be somebody he's going to be around for some time but he goes on TV does interviews from you know all sorts of networks and he makes compelling arguments and I think he is definitely an eloquent speaker someone you could describe as an eloquent speaker the example Pete Buddha judge masterclass Fox news interview takes off online this is a recent article uh an interview that he did online or not online uh on Fox News and it's one of those the clips went viral how about uh this question right here she was m in her convictions and it ended up costing her the job if you follow politics you may be able to guess these people that I'm revealing after I I show you the answer but the meaning of this word is determined in character action or ideas determined in character action or ideas you could say someone is what she was m in her convictions and it ended up costing her uh the job I think this is a word that is a little similar to principled they are not direct synonyms but someone who's very determined any guesses I'm going to show you because I I think there are other words that may fit this as well but the

want to overwhelm you some negative and positive words that you may likely hear when people are talking about politicians so what I what I'd like to know is of course how you did on the quiz but because again we're getting to the end I'll tell you where I stand I know we're talking about politics and I tried to mix it up between Democrats and Republicans but if you if you want to know because I want you you can tell me your your political stance as well when it comes to us politics are you you know more supportive of the Democrat agenda or the Republican agenda are you a trump fan do you like uh support Kamala Harris let me know in the comments of course I'd love hearing from you even if even if we disagree it's okay for where I come from I am more somebody who is fiscally conservative but socially liberal so fiscally conservative I say that because that's how I live my life I am Frugal I don't want to spend more money than I make my wife probably would say she would use another word that's a little more know derogatory and probably say that I'm cheap but that's okay I'd say yeah I'm fiscally conservative the problem is I don't think either party Democrats or Republicans are fiscally conservative I know Republicans say they are but then when they have control they spend spend spend that it that's just a fact and then when it comes to uh you know being socially liberal when I think of some of the main things that people might talk about um whether it is climate change um guns abortion immigration I am more in line with the Democrat Democrats Viewpoint so that's that's where I'm coming from so I will be voting for the Democrat uh candidate

Kamala Harris in the upcoming election and that's okay if we disagree and you can let me know in the chat uh what you think about politics in your country or uh in the US I just love hearing from you guys I hope you enjoyed the lesson if you did you can let me know by hitting that like button and of course I will be back very soon for another lesson in the future and maybe maybe we'll do another political lesson too uh before the election we'll see but I want to thank you all for joining me have a great day and I will see you next time so long

Advanced Vocabulary to Talk About the ECONOMY

Let's build your vocabulary by learning some very, very, very useful words and phrases when talking about the economy. Now, I'll go ahead and say yes, the topic is the economy. It may not sound like the most exciting thing in the world, but I will say that I do think this is incredibly important because this is something the economy, it affects all of us. And I think nowadays you will come across a lot of this vocabulary if you're watching the news or uh you're reading a newspaper because it's important because it's impactful and again even in your work life and your business your career. So, although the topic may not sound super exciting, I think it is incredibly useful and I want to teach you some advanced words and phrases that I think are going to help you navigate these conversations as well so that you can talk about this topic. If you would like to get the lesson notes, just click on the link down below in the description.

Join our email community. If you're already a part of it, check your inbox. I've sent them to you, but I might as well go ahead and introduce myself as well in case this is your first time here. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. And I want to help you build your vocabulary and learn some important words and phrases. So, let's start with collocations. These are words that are frequently used together. And I say economic collocations because these are all collocations with the word economic. So, let's begin. I want you to participate in the lesson. Write your answers in the chat in the comments. I always love it when you participate in these lessons. It is interactive English after all. So as consumers cut back on spending, economists fear that it might result in an economic what? So think about the situation and this is a phrase that you will often hear. An economic downturn would be the result of consumers. They cut back on spending. If you're unfamiliar with that phrasal verb, to cut back on something just means to reduce. So you reduce your spending. You cut back on your spending and then that may result in an economic what this uh some of them there may be maybe more than one word that can be used.

This one I do think it is more specific. There's just one word and I do see a correct answer. Good job, Julia. An economic downturn. So, this I'll give you the meaning down here. It refers to a significant decline in economic activity um spread across the economy lasting more than a few months and you would talk about an economic downturn. Thing things are slowing down and that's when people cut back on spending. So, one a good good phrase to keep in mind because I think this is more common that you might hear people talk about an economic downturn than you would other words like a depression which is uh a real catastrophe or a crisis, things like that. The next uh question, these are important other important words. All of these words in this lesson are incredibly important. unemployment, inflation, which is a word we've heard about, we've heard a lot of uh the last couple of years, and GDP are examples of economic what? Unemployment, inflation, and GDP are examples of economic. We're going to come back to well some of this in just a little bit, but um what do you think? These are certain parts of the economy that they'll measure and you could say that like individually, you know, we look at each one and those are different economic indicators. So if you hear somebody, they're talking about economic indicators. Uh there's the meaning they are leading uh coincident or lagging figures that indicate broad conditions and they tell us well what's going on with the economy. Economic indicators. How about this? According to most forecasters, the economic for the next quarter is slow growth at best. Now these are not I'm just these are example sentences. This is not actually uh not talking uh about the state of any particular economy but uh according to most forecasters the economic m for the next quarter is slow growth at best. One thing to keep in mind when you're trying to think about what word best fits that we're talking about the next quarter which is the future. So what word would also imply the future the economic m for the next quarter? And you may hear it when talking about the next quarter, the next year. So in this case, nice zs the economic outlook. So if you're talking about the economic outlook, we're referring to a future time. What is the economy going to be like in the future? What is the economic outlook? And you might use certain economic indicators to try to determine the economic outlook, the expected future state of an economy, encompassing factors such as growth rates, unemployment levels, and inflation rates. Again, we just talked about some of those economic indicators.

How about this? The this one I think is very common. It's a little more broad. The economic m of the strike was severe. The economic of the strike was severe. So if there is a group of people and they go on strike, they're they refuse, they're not working, maybe they're trying to negotiate that that's going to cause problems and it could have a severe economic what this is a pretty common word that I think you could use it uh with other adjectives. One key thing to think of would be that preposition of the economic of something. So in this case, we're talking about the economic m of the strike. I saw a couple. Nice. Good job. Correct answer. Again, I think it's a maybe a little easier because this is incredibly common. The economic impact. Well played everyone. So when you refer to something as having an economic impact, we're talking about a financial effect that something, especially something new, has on a situation or person. And you know, people may ask questions like, well, what will the economic impact of this thing be? or it's going to have a positive economic impact or in this case something negative a severe economic impact in countries like Thailand. Tourism has a strong economic impact. I'm using it again. Tourism does have a strong economic impact on the overall economic. Now I wanted to use economic impact. It does, the sentence does sound a little redundant uh using the word economic more than once, but I just wanted to to keep bringing these collocations up. We're talking about countries like Thailand, tourism. It's very important. It has a strong economic impact on the overall economic what? And a key word for this one, a little bit of a hint would be overall.

So overall we're talking about uh you know everything which could be uh businesses, the restaurants, employment, how many people are coming. So there there are maybe again maybe there is another like different words you could use but the collocation that I I wanted to get you thinking about was the economic environment. So if we're talking about the economic environment, it is the condition of a country's economy and the way that it influences how effectively businesses can work, how much profit they can make, etc. I think I saw some of it people some responses like the overall economic development sure that that would work as well. So in this one I do think there are other nouns that you could put in there that would also work. But the collocation that I wanted to highlight was economic environment. Like what is the economic environment? Is there a favorable economic environment? Is it good for businesses or maybe um maybe the economic environment is struggling?

Here is another one. This is my last set of collocations and then we're going to look at some useful vocabulary. I put two in there and I think both of them are pretty common. They're pretty broad and I think these may be a little easier. The economic m coming the economic m coming in suggest that there will be strong economic m in the second half of the year. Again there are a couple of words and phrases that I think will help you figure out what word is missing. So the economic m coming in something is coming in. you are receiving this information. So what type of economic information might you receive? And then there will be a strong econ there will be strong economic m in the second half of the year and a key word there would be strong because I feel like this is another um word that's often used as part of these collocations. So there's two blanks in there. The economic m coming in. So we're talking about information that's coming in which would in this case refer to the economic data. The economic data or data either one coming in suggests there will be strong economic in the second half of the year. In that case, I'm I was trying to get you thinking about growth, strong growth, strong economic growth. So those are the two collocations for this sentence. Economic data is describing was just the data describing an actual economy, past or present. And then the economic growth just refers to an increase in the production of economic goods and services in one period of time compared with a previous period. I feel that I'm giving you the meaning of these, but I feel like if you you see these, you know these meanings. If somebody's talking about economic growth and you understand that, I really just want to highlight these collocations because these are the phrases that you will likely come across again and again and again. And then I even though I think a lot of this is a part of your passive vocabulary, the goal is then to try to to make it a part of your active vocabulary. you come across it enough, you'll feel comfortable using it. You're having a conversation and you won't have any trouble talking about certain economic indicators and how they are influencing the economic outlook and hopefully there's going to be economic growth and it's just going to be a natural part of your speaking vocabulary. So, this is an acronym that I've already mentioned. GDP is the standard measure of value uh of the value added created through the production of goods and services in a country during a certain period. So this is the the technical definition for GDP. My question for you is what does GDP stand for? So, if you watch certain shows or uh you know, you're watching the news and an economist is out there or they're talking about the economy, you're going to hear GDP a lot and they'll talk about GDP, GDP, GDP.

And they're not really often going to say the entire phrase. They're just going to use the acronym, which is well, good. Good. I feel like uh um this one you're probably familiar with. Gross domestic product. So gross domestic product is the standard measure of value added created through the production of goods and services in a country during a certain period. GDP gross domestic product. How about uh this question? Governments use policy. I've highlighted policy because I think this is another common collocation when talking about the economy. Governments use policy to control the amount of money in an economy and how easily available it is. So when thinking about this situation in trying to control the amount of money that is in the economy that's available or trying to you know take money out the policy has a specific name and I don't well I don't want to give it away but you would hear people talk about policy and a key word would be money thinking about something that is related to money. It is not a money policy. It's not a not a currency policy. It is referred to as a monetary policy. So a central bank will establish uh the monetary policy for a government for a nation and that is how they're going to try to control the amount of money in the economy and they will pursue a certain monetary policy. Monetary policy. Excellent. Here are just some examples just to show you how common. I didn't really have to look very hard. I just took some news headlines that would be using this phrase just to give you some examples.

Bank of Japan reverses gear on monetary policy back to managing inflation uh inflation. Oil up 1% of head of Fed's monetary policy decision. How quickly do prices respond to monetary policy? The impact of artificial intelligence on the macroeconomy and monetary policy. And then finally, the strength of monetary policy in emerging markets. Again, just looking at these headlines, I don't know if you're like, "Okay, these articles do not sound like that fascinating that you want to uh read them. Perhaps you do enjoy this content." Uh again, it's not uh a topic that I think most people would say is incredibly exciting. However, it is incredibly important because this affects all of us.

Here's something else that can affect you. And I'm kind of, you know, building on top of some of the things we've been uh discussing so far. QE is a monetary policy strategy. We just talked about monetary policy. QE is a monetary policy strategy used by central banks. With QE, a central bank purchases securities in an attempt to reduce interest rates, increase the supply of money, and drive more lending to consumers and businesses. So again, this with this acronym, because most of the time you hear economist or people talking, they they're just they're going to talk about QE and it's just a lot easier. It's a lot faster just to say the two letters QE. But what does QE stand for?

It is a monetary policy strategy. Basically, when we talk about QE, they're, you know, purchasing securities. We're just putting money into the the system. We're increasing the supply of money is what is referred to like QE. So if you are somebody who reads articles uh about the economy, about business, what's going on, how is this affecting the the world or your country, then this is an acronym maybe you've heard of before and in that case you know that QE stands for quantitative easing. Excellent. Well done, Lai Zs. All right, uh Manuel, good. So quant quantitative easing QE that this is the monetary policy that central banks use if they want to try to increase the supply of money drive more lending uh reduce interest rates and it's known as QE quantitative easing.

How about this? There are two blanks missing in this sentence. And again one of them is a collocation and that's what I tried to highlight. The US economy lost trillions of dollars due to the tech in the in uh I should say in the 1990s I apologize which resulted in the stock market of 2001. So there are two things that I want you to think about. These are other words and phrases when talking about the economy. They lost trillions of dollars in the tech in the 1990s which resulted in the stock market of 2001. I don't know depends on how old you were at that time. You may very well remember what happened and in that case it'll be a little bit easier to think of the the words that I'm referring to the tech.

This is something that absolutely happened in the 1990s. It's a word that I feel like is often used when talking about stocks and the stock market. And people might say there's a m or to give you another example later on fast forward in the early 2000s especially in the US there was a housing. This is the first blank that I'm talking about the tech or if you want to talk about the early 2000s there was a housing. So what what I'm referring to the first one because the next one it resulted in a market crash. I think that is pretty common. You can kind of see the picture with the arrow going down a market crash. But before the crash, typically what ends up leading to that is people are very enthusiastic and they're just buying, buying, buying, buying and it ultimately leads to a bubble. So in this case are talking about the tech bubble.

The value of these companies were really inflated in the late 1990s especially and it just got to a point where it just wasn't sustainable. And then that bubble burst and that led to the stock market crash. So a bubble is used to refer to a significant usually rapid increase in asset prices that is soon followed by a collapse in prices. And that market crash would be like the collapse the sudden dramatic decline of stock prices across the stock market. So not really just with one but many. So I had mentioned before in the early 2000s in the US there was a housing bubble in which case the the value of homes was just inflated and that led to the housing crisis.

The M is the cumulative amount of money the government has borrowed throughout our nation's history. All right key word throughout the history of the nation. The other word that's missing is the difference between the money the government takes in and what the government spends each year. And I wanted to highlight these because I think these words are commonly confused. So the first one we're talking about the history and then the next one we're just focused on that year. How much is the government taking in and receiving and how much is the government spending. So in number two, we're talking about that one year and that amount is referred to as the what I think when I show you these words, these are words, you know, these are words that you've heard before, but I just want to make sure that the meaning is very clear because as I said, these are words that may be commonly confused mostly because they sound pretty similar.

So when talking about the amount of money that has been borrowed throughout a nation's history, the amount of money that needs to be paid back, we're referring to the debt. The debt that a country or government has versus one year in which case we're then referring to the deficit. Debt deficit. So, I think especially now that it's an election year, I feel like politicians will creatively use these words to make their point. And mostly, I think it's done disingenuously, maybe to confuse voters, but the debt is the overall amount that is owed throughout the history versus the deficit, which would just be uh typically over a year or I just mentioned the elections. Um you could say that during any administration especially in the US because there's always a deficit each year whether it's going back to you know Obama had you know deficits throughout the Trump administration from 2016 to 20 there were deficits and then throughout the Biden administration there were more deficits and then all of that is just being added to the debt and of course now with it an election Everybody has an idea of how we're we're suddenly we're not going to have any more deficits. We're going to have a surplus and then that's going to help us reduce the debt. I'm skeptical. But here is a funny little uh picture that maybe helps put it into context a little bit. So basically the debt is always going to be much larger than the deficit because the deficit is just really like that calendar year. So you have the deficit which most people can see and this is what I think a lot of people talk about because it's a smaller number and then you have the debt which is underneath that iceberg which is massive which people don't really see which stays hidden and I think because at least in the US because it's so large I think a lot of people want to try to ignore it and pretend it doesn't exist. So you have the deficit versus the debt. I hope that's uh I hope that's clear. How about this right here? A M is a period of temporary economic decline during which trade and industrial activity are reduced generally identified by a fall in GTP in two successive quarters. This is the I guess one of the more technical definitions for this word even though the word in general is used loosely and I saw I think some people tried to use it as an answer before and a question mark but uh this is a the the definition for this economic decline over a period of time technically speaking would be when GDP GDP growth domestic product um would fall in two successive quarters.

This would be the technical definition for identifying what would be referred to as a recession. If well the economy has entered a recession and you we have had two quarters of GDP or two quarters in which GDP has fallen and you could say that uh we are in a recession or there is an economic recession if you want to use a collocation but this is a word that you will hear a lot recession recession recession you're going to hear it a lot more this the the more severe one would be uh a depression But this is more common that a an economy will enter into a recession and then they're going to try to get out of that and resume and have more economic growth. Just to use that collocation. So keep in mind this is the technical meaning of a recession, but in general this is when the economy is declining.

Which verb which verb best completes this sentence? our house by 20% in two years. This is a verb that is used in finance. It's used when talking about the economy, such as this. We're talk about buying and selling homes. When we're referring to the economy, our house by 20% in two years. what word really kind of captures this uh this meaning and there are other ways that you could use this verb. What do you think? Any guesses? So we're saying that in this case I want to say that the value has increased and I maybe I could have given you that context that we're talking about increasing because you could use it the other way as well. So what I was trying to say is it increases in which case our house has appreciated by 20% in two years. To appreciate is to increase in value. But of course, if it if I were to talk about it in the other way, you could say our house depreciated by 20% in two years. That could also happen in which case there it is to decrease in value. But the one that I wanted to talk about was when you're saying something increases in value because I want to stay positive. That's what we all hope will happen, that uh the assets that we buy, especially if it's like a home, that it's going to appreciate over time. Some other collocations, if we're going to use this verb to appreciate, uh you could use it with several different adverbs, to appreciate significantly or uh appreciate considerably or appreciate dramatically. Or when talking about currency, you may come across this collocation to appreciate against something. If I say, oh, the US dollar has appreciated against the euro and it has gone up in value. But the to go up in value, keep in mind, is to appreciate. To go down in value, to decrease is to depreciate. What do you think? This is a word that I feel like is you you you're coming across it more often in the US because it's been in the news recently, but this is a noun. It just refers to the exclusive control of a market supply of a product or service is referred to as a what and I think a key word is exclusive control. You control the supply of a product or service. Then you could say that you are your business has a what?

Or your business is a what? It is also the name of a very well-known board game that has been around for a long time which also deals with I think is a good game teaching people about you know money and finances and you know how it's used. So, exclusive control of a market supply of a uh of the market supply of a product or service is referred to as a monopoly. Excellent. I think this is a word that you all know, you've heard it before. I say it's been in the news a lot especially in the US because you do have the I think it's the uh the FCC um or the the FTC going after certain companies as a being a monopoly whether it's Google is now in court whether or not they are a monopoly Microsoft I maybe I think Apple recently there was a suit filed against them probably three or four months ago again claiming that okay I think that uh this company is operating as a monopoly what do you think this is another this is I'll tell you this is a phrase but this is a phrase that you have heard of that you know and I'm basically giving you the meaning of this phrase the level of wealth and comfort people have in a particular society is referred to as the what and I think this is a very useful phrase even in conversations when you're talking about different countries, different places you may or may not want to live. And you might wonder like, well, what is the what? And then you could use this phrase, the level of wealth and comfort people have in a particular society. I was going to give you a word in there, but I thought it would make it too easy. And the word that I was going to give you is of the m of.

So there are three words and I'm talking about excellent the standard of living. This refers to the wealth and comfort people have in a particular society and you would talk about the standard of living. I think this is a common phrase that you see it, you hear it, you know what it means, and hopefully if you're having a conversation, you'll feel comfortably actively using it and talking about well, you know, what's the the the standard of living in this place and referring to the the wealth and comfort people have in a society. So, to give you some more examples, here are some news headlines. Again, this is incredibly common. government's government's policy settings have caused the collapse in Australian standard of living. That's not good. Millions will struggle with a minimum standard of living if state pensions uh if state pension age rises. I just took these at random. Canadian standard of living continues decline. And then finally, New Zealand's standard of living going backwards report. Well, as far as the news, there's not much positive when well, at least when I looked yesterday and just got the first few articles I saw it, yeah, it seems to be pretty negative as far as standard of living goes. I don't know if you live in these countries or have been there, if you feel like this is true, but these are ones that uh these are recent articles that I found uh just yesterday when talking about standard of living. But hopefully it gives you again a better idea as to how you're going to use this phrase in context. Here is a review of all of the the vocabulary I wanted to go over. Of course, my goal is that you always learn something new. And if you did, I would have love it and appreciate it if you hit that like button. And again, if you want to get a copy of these lesson notes, check out that link down below in the description. The last thing I always do, I always want to know how you did on this uh economic quiz on this this quiz on the economy. So, I'm going to put a poll in there and you can tell me how you did on the quiz. Uh how did you do on uh the quiz on the economy? Again, there are many other words and phrases. I just chose ones that I think are useful, ones that you're going to come across, which is why I really wanted to highlight some of those collocations. I rocked it. Um, maybe 100%. Um, let's see. Not bad would be 75%. I'll add some options. Okay, let's say that's 50%. And I need to read more articles about the I need to read more I'll say economic articles. Um there we go. What do you think? Let me know how you did. I'm always interested in getting your feedback, hearing from you whether this was too easy, too difficult. But this is a topic that I think is incredibly important, even if it's one that you don't find the most interesting because when you look at the meaning of some of these words and phrases, yes, they don't sound too exciting, but they are very useful in conversations. You're talking about the future of the the country you live in, the economy, the state of the economy. And you can hopefully use some of these phrases if you're referring to well the economic outlook or maybe the the economy is heading into an economic downturn or if there's a bubble and just knowing the difference between debt and deficit I think can be incredibly useful. So it seems like seems like it was a bit challenging which again hopefully uh um you guys learn something new in that case which makes me happy. But uh if you enjoyed the lesson, you can let me know by hitting that like button. As always, thank you so much for watching and being here. Let me give some quick shoutouts. Lai, Manuel, Chile, Julia, um Zs, Dio, Julio, thank you guys for being here and participating in this lesson.

And I will see you very soon for another lesson in the future.

LESSON 200 OF 749

Advanced Vocabulary to Understand American Politics

Watch the original lesson on YouTube

Today, I want to teach you some advanced vocabulary words related to politics. Hey everyone, my name is Wes. This is Interactive English, which is all about helping you practice and improve your English skills and today is a vocabulary lesson about politics and I know that some of you may be very excited about this because you love talking about politics. Other people may be like, Oh no, I don't like talking about politics, but still this is very important because even if you don't like to talk about politics, you are going to hear other people talk about it. Maybe your friends or even if you're listening to the news or your where you may read about it. So this is very important for your comprehension.

I want to let you know that that these words specifically refer to American politics. Now you may also be able to use them when talking about other countries and their politics. It really just depends and you can also use some of these words and phrases even when you're talking about things outside of politics. The other thing that I want to warn you about is that many of these words and phrases, uh, have a bit of a negative connotation. When people think of government, when they think about politics, many people have a negative view. Oftentimes they may view it as a necessary evil and that's the first expression and phrase that I want to talk to you about when talking about government.

People may say that it's a necessary evil and it kind of means exactly what it says. People don't like governments. Maybe they don't agree with everything. All of the laws that are being passed and they, they might just describe it in the extreme case as evil, but it's a necessary evil. It's important you must have it because if you don't have government, then the alternative is much worse. So people might describe it and say, you know, you know it's a necessary evil. You can also use this expression to describe other things as well. If there is some situation could be at work in a business environment, you don't like it, you don't agree with it, but it's important.

You must have it. You could say, well it's a necessary evil. The next word is impeachment and this word means a a serious charge against a public official for some misconduct and that misconduct, it may be criminal, it may not be criminal and it could just be some unethical behavior, something that's just wrong and others within the government may try to impeach this public official and you can use it as a verb to impeach someone or as the noun impeachment. And again it's a serious charge because if someone is impeached then they may be removed from public office. So this is a word that that does apply to American politics but it's also a word that may apply to other countries.

Their political system as well. Impeachment, it is a serious charge against the public official for misconduct. Then we have quid pro quo and quid pro quo means the that you are giving something in exchange for something else. And when I say something I'm talking about something of value so it could be giving something in an exchange for money perhaps in exchange for information there. There is some kind of transaction there and it is a quid pro quo. We use this when when talking about politicians in government, they do favors for businesses or other individuals and they get something in return. We'd say that is a quid pro quo. Again, this is another expression that you can use outside of politics.

If you're talking about something in exchange for something else. Let me give you an example, okay? I am willing to teach you some more advanced vocabulary words, but you need to do something for me. All right? This is going to be a quid pro quo. I want you to hit that like button. You do that for me and I will continue teaching you some vocabulary words. It's a quid pro quo. Then I have a word that I think many of you may already know, but when thinking about politics and government, it is something that is so important and that is compromise. And what it means is to work together in order to reach an agreement.

So for example, if somebody has this position right here, this is what they want. The other person has this position. You kind of need to work together and you need to meet in the middle so that work can get done. People need to compromise, politicians need to compromise and unfortunately, especially in American politics, it seems like fewer and fewer politicians are willing to compromise and work with other people. They just say, Hey, this is what I want. If you don't give it to me, well then nothing will get done and this is one example as to why people might refer to government as being a bit evil because people don't compromise, they don't get things done, but still it's a necessary evil and again, this is a word that you can use in so many different situations at home or at work.

Another word which kind of relates to that is that if they decide not to leak information because it's illegal, they may try to become a whistleblower. And that's the next word I want to talk to you about because a whistleblower is a person that tries to expose a government for some wrong doing and what they do is that they would tell a person in authority that that something is happening and this is wrong and oftentimes it's used in politics and it's talking about something in government that is wrong and somebody becomes a whistleblower. And in this case there are channels that you can use so that it is legal, that it is appropriate and somebody becomes a whistleblower.

The next word that I have for you or or words, because it's a phrase, two words and that is big brother and this is just a, an expression that's used to refer to a government that has complete control and they limit people's freedom, even their freedom of thought. And, and this expression comes from George Orwell's amazing book, 1984 and it's talking about, you know, this government that just has complete control over every aspect of a person's life. Nowadays, I think it's used a little more informally when talking about a part of government and politics. Something that may be happening that you don't think is right. You could refer to it and say, ah, you know, big brother, big brother's watching you. You gotta be careful.

I think there was even a TV show out there called big brother in which they just put these cameras up all over a home and people live there. They had no privacy and it was like, you know, big brother was watching. Then we have a verb which is to lobby, and this is a word that is very common in American politics to lobby a public official, and when you lobby somebody, it means that you are trying to persuade or influence this public official to take a particular action or maybe even to change a law to lobby someone and you're doing it for pretty much your own personal gain or or somebody else's interests.

You may also hear this word used as a noun when referring to a group of people like and they refer to it as a lobby or as a person who does this for a living, and this is their job. They may be called a lobbyist, so a lobbyist would lobby a politician in order to influence them so that they do something that they want. They might change some law or they may vote a certain way to lobby someone. This is something that I really don't like about American politics. There is way too much lobbying going on and people looking out for their own interests, companies, individuals instead of the country as a whole.

If you have a lot of money, if you are a company or a very wealthy person, you can pay a lobbyist to represent your interests and they would lobby the politicians to do what you want. And there's kind of that quid pro quo because if the politician votes a certain way or tries to change a certain law, then that that individual, that company will donate to their campaign, they will try to help them get reelected and donate to their campaign. Which in a way is a quid pro quo. And campaign is actually the next word that I wanted to talk to you about it campaign is a group of people working together to achieve a certain goal and usually that goal is to get someone elected. So a politician, if they want to get elected, they need a campaign, they need to get a group of people working for them to to get donations to do advertising. And these people work together. And that is a campaign, and this is a word that you will hear often in American politics because all politicians, when they want to get elected, they have a campaign. They have people working for them that are trying to get them elected to office. We can also use it as a verb to campaign and say that a politician, a public official is campaigning. They're out there, they're traveling the country, they're talking to people. They are campaigning because they want to get elected. They want people to vote for them. Then we have the word pundant and this is referring to a person. It is a person who knows a lot about a particular topic and they're usually asked to give their opinions about this topic. Mostly because they, they sound smart. They sound like they know what they're talking about and you would say that that person is abundant. Often, I think you could refer to people in the media who talk a lot about politics. People refer to them as political pundits. They talk about politics, they share their opinions. They are political pundits. Next is red tape and this refers to rules or processes that seem unnecessary and just often caused delay. So if you want to do something, uh, in the community, you may need permission from the government. You may need to go talk to your local politicians and they may tell you, well, you have to do this and this and this and this, and you think, wow, there is a lot of red tape. There are things that I have to do.

It's completely unnecessary. I don't why I'm doing it. And that is what you would call red tape. It's often used when talking about government politics. When you want to do something, you know, you'd say, well, I want to, I want to throw a parade, but there's just, there's a lot of red tape. I want to open a business, but in order to do so that there's a lot of red tape that I have to go through.

Next is a word that is, it is more informal, maybe even a little bit of slang and that is shady. It is an adjective that you can use to describe someone who is just dishonest and they do unethical things. Perhaps illegal things. You could say, well you know this person is a bit shady. Politics and the U S you know it can be a bit shady. Some politicians may be very shady so when we describe somebody as shady, it's just somebody who is dishonest and can't be trusted. We can use this not only when talking about politics but other situations as well. Just people in our everyday lives. You could say that that somebody is shady or maybe even somebody looks shady, they look like they can't be trusted shady.

Then we have cynic and this is just describing a person. Somebody is a cynic and if a person is a cynic it means that that they believe that other people are only looking out for their own self interest and that that just the common good can not be done that that things are not going to get better because most people involved or just trying to get ahead and trying to work for themselves. You could say that that person is a cynic and it's often used as an adjective as well to describe a person and say that somebody is cynical and if somebody is cynical then then they believe that very thing people are motivated by their own self interest. To be perfectly honest, I can be cynical when it comes to politics and politicians because I might see the way that that somebody is voting or what they're doing and I might think to myself, how, how can they possibly be doing that? They're not looking out for the interest of the country. They're looking out for their own self interest and perhaps, I don't know, perhaps there's some quid pro quo that they are getting something from a lobbyist. Somebody who's lobbying them to do something that that's not in the best interest of a country and that just goes back to, you know, thinking that you know, perhaps government perhaps it is, it's a necessary evil and I'm trying to use these words and phrases in just a regular context, but also to show you that they are very common. We use them all the time. Then we have a word, which is a very serious word, but it's used when talking about politics and that is treason.

And if we're talking about treason, we're, we're saying that somebody is working with the enemy, with the enemies of a government to try and often illegally overthrow the current government. And you would say that somebody trees, and we use it with that verb to commit treason. And if somebody commits treason, it is very serious. If that person could be punished very severely, but it means they're just working with an enemy government to undermine or overthrow the, the current government to commit treason. So there you have it. These are some advanced words and phrases that you can use the next time you want to talk about politics, especially American politics. Or you may even hear this vocabulary.

If you are listening to the news or reading a newspaper about politics, I hope you enjoy this lesson and learn something new. If you did, hit that like button down below. As always, thanks so much for watching and I'll see you next time.

Advice to achieve your fluency goals in 2021 | Interactive Q&A with Wes

hello hello hello hello hello and welcome to today's lesson uh thank you guys so much for joining me my name is wes and this is interactive english and this channel it's all about just trying to help you guys practice and improve your english skills and i know i say that i say that every lesson but it's really just for those of you who may be new here and joining me today uh let me know write your name in the chat or in the comments love hearing from new people and of course i love seeing so many familiar faces um i'll give some shout outs in just a moment but i wanted to quickly talk to you a little bit about what i want to do in this q a so this is going to be a question and answer lesson and because it's a new year it's 2021 i know i've already talked about it a little bit getting you thinking about your goals for this year some of your learning goals when it comes to learning english and that's what i want to focus on in this question and answer session is just really trying to help give you some advice if you have your learning goals for this year or you know of some things that you would like to do and you want to ask me about it i can try give you some suggestions some advice as to how you can best achieve those goals and make it come true make it happen because i want all of you to improve as much as you can this year in 2021 so i just want to give some shout outs and say hello to some people uh great to see so many so many members and patrons here lolly hello welcome uh katrudis good to see you maggie good morning um who else we have here takayo i saw you uh hello liliana mina suhana mehmet welcome uh jamal ismail trying to make sure i get as many angela trying to get as many names as or not as i can um and what i want to do is again just take some of your questions so i'm not going to be able to answer everybody's question i'm sure some of you will have some goals that might be similar like vocabulary or pronunciation so i hope that in having just this conversation for the next half hour or so that i will kind of talk about some of the things that you might be interested but before we jump into it and get started i do want to tell you there is still some time remaining if you would like to enroll in my speaking course called speak up it's getting ready to start this next week tomorrow is the last day that you can enroll in the course so here's a just a little picture of the course page uh it's a little weird looking at myself uh on this but the the course is just about helping you practice and improve your speaking skills it is a 10 week course classes are 50 minutes it is for mostly intermediate to advanced english speakers intermediate to advanced we do these lessons on zoom once a week there are there are also weekly pronunciation video lessons that i've also included in this course uh so you can check that out there is a link down in the description i will throw a link in the chat in case you're interested some of the classes have um have filled up already but there are still a few more that are open and again please if you do so decide to enroll or you're interested and you want to sign up use um the voucher code speak 10 to get a 10 discount all right i'm throwing this in there as well as a reminder okay so what i would like to do is well yes without further ado let's start the q a if you guys have some questions think about some of your goals for 2021 when it comes to learning english all right that that is my field of expertise uh so if you have other goals about exercise whatever i don't know if i would be much help with that but if you have some goals for learning english write them in the chat right now i'll have a look at some and what i'll do is the ones that i'm going to answer i will copy that question or statement or whatever topic i'm discussing at that moment and i will also write it in the chat so that it's easier for you to follow along and you can see my post in case you're wondering wait what what is this guy talking about right now um okay well quick question because uh musa asked about the price of the course good question the price of the course uh is 149 149 for uh 10 weeks lessons are once a week uh you get those do preview lessons as well as pronunciation lessons but again use that voucher code speak 10 to get a 10 discount so uh let me say i'll just write it in price of the course is uh 149 what not a thousand for it but use speak 10. i saw some questions in there i'll get to in just a moment to get uh a 10 discount all right so lolly asked this uh i think pronunciation is more important than accent am i right okay excellent question i'm gonna highlight this so you guys know what i'm talking about right here okay so i do want to make a distinction between the two because pronunciation and accent i think sometimes even when uh with among teachers english teachers um teachers on youtube sometimes they get conflated

it's really referring to the way people in a certain country uh region the way they talk pronunciation i think you're you're right la la you would ask like you know pronunciation more important in short yes because when i think of pronunciation i think of you're you're creating the sounds you're trying to get the sounds correct so that people understand what you're saying because there are certain words that you can clearly mispronounce and it doesn't really matter whether you're speaking with somebody from australia canada uh the uk they may not understand what you're saying so when i think of pronunciation it's really creating the sounds the correct sounds so that you have mutual intelligibility i think i maybe have mentioned this before in a video lesson mutual intelligibility means that two people who speak a different languages can understand each other so if you are from france and you travel to thailand probably english may be that common your common language that you're going to use english to communicate and if you can use english to communicate even though english may not be the the person's native language then you have mutual intelligibility that's what i mean and that's when i think pronunciation is is great for that to make sure you're pronouncing the sounds correctly saying words uh correctly and again pronunciation is different among certain accents and i think it's good to be aware of that that maybe um the us people from the united states pronounce a word one way in british in the uk they may pronounce it slightly different so i definitely think pronunciation accent they are different um i do think uh it's good if you're trying to like focus maybe more on pronunciation uh if you want to just start like speaking clearly to make sure everybody understands you but if you are more focused because i've met learners who are living in the uk and because they're living there they would like to speak more with a british accent i completely understand that so just be aware i'm sorry that was a kind of a long roundabout answer to that um so uh uh i do not ask wes i'm from ghana how can i take part i i did leave i if you're talking about the speak up course there's a link in the description um i'll i'll throw a link in the chat a little bit later on uh as well so uh somebody asked um my goal is to improve listening excellent okay so here is what i want to talk about for for a moment if you're looking to improve your listening skills i i think in that case you just need more exposure to the language you need more listening practice uh whether it's music or like even right now you're you're watching this lesson even if uh i'm not talking about a specific topic like teaching you grammar or new vocabulary you're still listening to me speak english and you are getting some listening practice then to follow up on that because i think 10 people may say oh i'm going to listen to music the the challenge with music is that it's hard to control the speed and most people speak very quickly there's a lot of music in english that i don't even understand i'm like wait what are they what are they talking about what did they say the thing with listening that i would encourage you to do is try to listen at your level or even slightly above your level so when i when i'm using music as the example because you're not able to really slow it down otherwise the song is going to sound a little weird it it can you may be listening to speech that's just too fast and sometimes i think if uh you're listening to something and it's too difficult to understand that can cause people to get a little frustrated a little disappointed and that's why i would say try to listen at your level if something is too fast slow it down a little bit for example on youtube youtube gives you the ability to slow down the videos a little bit i think there are only a few options but still it could help if you're watching some streaming networks i think they also give you the the ability to slow down the speed of speech so that it's easier to understand so i think that's the most useful thing for improving your listening really try to listen at your level and or even just a little beyond your level and think about it like right now you're probably of so many people tell me and i think a lot of other english teachers on youtube and they say well i i understand what you're saying i can understand you clearly uh and and part of it is because yeah naturally over time i then i i i well since i started teaching english i've slowed down my speech a little bit it's just this is the way i speak now um but i because of that i i've been teaching i do try to speak very clearly i enunciate um my my words my speech so i think i i am somebody who would be a little bit easier to understand but if you're listening to me right now and you understand 90 of everything i'm saying perfect that's great um maybe you could even listen like uh a little faster but listen at your level or a little above your level all right so yes the baby uh our little girl i mean she just woke up from her nap so you may hear her chime in uh from time to time uh i'm trying to get to the let's see and i'll come back um oh you're welcome lolly uh takayo she is a patron uh anna answer her question right now and i'll come back to some of the others um reading materials uh what do you recommend for intermediate learners that's a good question and i'll follow it's a good follow-up on the what we just talked about with listening because listening and reading those are two inputs where you are receiving information and just like i told you with listening to listen at your level readings the same way i would always encourage you to read at your level don't try to read something that is just way too difficult so read at your level but also read something you're interested in and that kind of becomes challenging for me sometimes to recommend things because what i'm interested in you may not care about and i i wouldn't tell you to read that if that's not something you're interested in so think about your interest if you like i don't know fantasy stories or uh then maybe try harry potter or i think if you like certain activities maybe gardening or stuff like that you could find things online one thing i would say there is an english resources maybe i'll check it out if you want this is for learning um this is a learning resource and teachers may use it in the classroom it's called breaking news english so let me i did it put the website here so let's boom all right so this is the site breaking news english i'll put a link down in there if you want to check that out and what it is it's like uh it's just a bunch of news articles uh pretty much current events things that have been taking place uh let me see where did i hold on a second um okay all right so here they are like this there's a article here taxi driver offers uh free rides for singing karaoke man crosses rough sea on jet ski for love so there's just news articles that you can read the good thing about breaking news english is that if you you see down here it says level zero one two three you can control the level of difficulty so if i click on level zero uh no that's an ad let's skip it you can see right here the this is the article all right it's a lot shorter the language they use is going to be a little bit easier if i go back and i click on uh that same article for level three let's have a look at it here is the level three article so this is a good resource because it allows you to control the difficulty because i think when i say try to read at your level that can be really challenging because you uh the question uh takayo asked about intermediate learners and that that can be challenging to think of okay what are specific books that are intermediate i did create another lesson in which i gave a few suggestions for intermediate stories i'd have to go back and think about see if i can link it but just off the top of my head this is a good resource breaking news english it's free it's all online let me write it here news english in the chat boom if you guys want to check that out so it's a great question and i think this is a very useful resource if you want to find things that you can read and be able to control the level that you're reading at let's see um mag yes as you mentioned in the previous course ready is very important hence my small goal this year is try and read at least 30 minutes every day and memorize vocabulary perfect that's that's excellent um so that is a great goal to have i i think just try to read 30 minutes every day because i i'm a very um i'm very pro reading i would say i think it's great because maggie and you mentioned reading it and and learning new vocabulary because i think reading is an excellent way to learn new vocabulary because when you're reading you kind of use space repetition throughout because you're learning a new word and chances are that as you continue to read you may come across that word again later on especially if you're reading about the same topic maybe you come across it a few days after that and you know oh okay yeah i remember what this means and then you come across it again the following week as you're doing that and you continue to come across these words you're then able to put it up here in your active memory and then put it in your long-term memory over time it's the same thing i kind of talk about when i do those reading lessons some of those fundraisers and we look at different articles about the same topic and as we look at those different articles we we come across the same vocabulary so reading is excellent for building your vocabulary great goal to have let's see um

let me look at a question um uh let's see oh something got uh taken away uh angela ask this uh let me copy and paste it down below right here um boom okay so this is what i'm talking about uh right now angela asks about i can understand journalists politicians but i'm not able to understand movies yet i mean 80 percent and i'm watching how can i improve this so i i think again you're referring to a couple of different things probably speed of speech because in movies it's more conversational the way people talk out on the street a little more informal so people are naturally going to speak faster and then like a politician or like i told you like i'm talking right now i tend to speak a bit slower people that are politicians or journalists or news anchors they are also going to try to speak very clearly and articulate so that it's easier to understand so if you're having trouble more maybe with movies it could be about the speed and also i think perhaps the type of language that people might be using because you're going to hear a lot more idioms uh watching movies than you would listening to a politician or a journalist you're going to hear more just informal expressions you're going to hear more slang when you're listening to tv show or movies compared to politicians or news journalists so that would also be related to a little bit more vocabulary if perhaps you want to add on to a goal or something for this year to try to build your vocabulary and learn more informal vocabulary some of those idioms because that may help a little bit more when it comes to your comprehension of tv shows and movies i i noticed too when i'm in class just kind of free-flowing and riffing i tend to use a lot of idioms in my speech uh i and now that i've been teaching english i'll tend to catch myself when i do it and so whoop i just used an idiom let's see um abdi nasir ask this one uh like a lot of copy and pastes saw that question excellent um i'll come back to em and zine in just a second uh asking how can i speak fluently i'll get this question now so uh until 2022 so again if you're just looking in in general to improve your overall english fluency i'd say just practice practice and more practice try to practice with all four language skills reading writing listening speaking i think i talked in a previous lesson that three of those skills you're able to easily do on your own especially if you have access to the internet reading um writing even i tell people like right now you guys are writing to me in the chat i hope even if you're watching this later write to me in the comments listening you're listening to me right now the only thing that uh you can't get possibly might be more speaking practice and again that would entail either finding a speaking partner somebody in your town or city somebody else who would like to practice their speaking skills just doing individual exercises on your own like um for speaking in front of a camera recording yourself posting it online put yourself out there pretend like you're giving a presentation and speak out loud that's something else you can do or it would go back to taking uh maybe a class online such as the speak up class uh to throw another plug in there so let's uh i said i'd look at this um somebody uh n m z about improving i would like to improve my writing how should i do i passed the c2 exam um but with a c1 mark on writing will you give me any particular advice yes so just as i i think i mentioned um we talked a little bit i i think where is it i want to say reading and listening are both inputs you're receiving information speaking and writing are outputs now i think they they do complement each other but also i think when you're talking about like an input output i think of listening and speaking typically go together because you're having a conversation you're speaking to somebody the other person is listening in that same way i do think reading and writing really complement each other as well the one great way to improve your writing i believe is just to do it passively and when i say you're doing it passively it means that you are learning something without directly studying this thing so reading is going to help you improve your writing because when you're reading you are seeing the correct grammar structure you are learning new words but you're also seeing how they're used in the correct context so as you're doing this and you're reading a story you're still get putting that information up here and you're learning it passively even though you're not trying to focus on this one thing and then when you come when it comes time for you to write and you're trying to put together your sentence structure you're trying to use a word in the correct way or even an idiom i think you're more likely to do that because you got the appropriate exposure to the language you were reading more so i definitely think reading is a great way to improve your writing and also i think i've done some other lessons before maybe you could search for some of the writing live lessons i've done about finding your own mistakes and practicing your writing and then going through it and try to look for try to identify mistakes but look for one mistake at a time and when i've done this in lessons i've talked about start with

um maybe just things like uh uh articles a and and the and try to go through just look for that see if you find any mistakes spelling go read through what you wrote only look for spelling and prepositions you can do that with your writing and the reason why i say just look for one thing at a time because then you're focused on that that one thing and as you're able to do this over time if you do it a few times then you're more likely to identify the things that you have trouble with because we all make writing mistakes but somebody may have problems with it when it comes to punctuation another person may have problems with with spelling and if you're able to keep a running list it's a way for you to discover what are some of the things that are most challenging for you so that that is one thing um that i would say let's see um oh just mean i want to talk about this question because i mentioned it um so josephine asked this which books would you recommend uh me as a as a beginner honestly i think one thing i i would say and would be kind of like dr seuss nursery rhymes i know it sounds like real just go all out children's books i'm i'm serious and i know as uh as adult learners that can be a little shocking or like i don't want to read a children's book i think it's absolutely the best thing you can do and if you think about it when people say well children learn languages faster than adults i think in part that there is a definitely a strong argument to make that yes they do but also i think you need to consider how they're learning the language the things they're listening to the things they're reading the people would read nursery rhymes where you really can get the flow of speech and there's a lot more rhyming and it's a little sing song the words that they use are very simple so i think when children are learning that way they're learning definitely at their level and it really gives them a starting point for something to build on i think one thing that is challenging for adults when it comes to we've already talked about reading and listening and i i was talking about reading at your level and listening at your level people tend to just go way uh too far to advance too fast and i think it's good to challenge yourself from time to time but it can also be i think a little overwhelming when and a little discouraging uh when i was um learning i started learning spanish i was probably an intermediate learner and i wanted to read a hundred years of solitude um and that was a that was a bad idea i got the book in spanish i started i got to page three and i was like oh my goodness this is way too difficult it was giving me a headache i was a little frustrated and upset with myself because it made me feel like oh my my spanish is just not that great i need to improve uh so i definitely again listen at your level read at your level even if you're a beginner that's what i would say uh let's see um what is it somebody asked what does it mean quid pro quo quid pro quo means something in exchange for something else kind of like a favor i think of politics people will do quid pro quo like you do me a favor i'll do you a favor people ask um how do you pronounce this word pronunciation for this word i'm just going to write the word in here so you guys can see it fortification fortification so fortification i'll say it one more time let's see lally asks a great question is it necessary to go to an english-speaking country to learn english uh no i i in my view no i especially nowadays where everybody's so well connected with the internet where we talked i just showed you that resource for reading breaking news english if you want reading practice you can find it you want listening practice you can find it on youtube uh speaking is something that could be a little more challenging but there are courses online like the one i'm getting ready to run there are other options out there as well if you want to find a teacher somebody that you can speak with a lot of that is paid like like even the course that i have but it is possible to i absolutely think it's possible to learn a language without going into the the country um living in a certain country the only thing that i would say and this is just my opinion that if you are living in an english-speaking country say that you're living in the united states the one thing i do think that might provide is kind of a maybe a little more motivation a little more incentive because as you go out and just start doing your daily activities shopping at a grocery store going to the post office whatever uh and everybody's speaking english then you might have a little more motivation incentive to like okay i really need to do this um and i really need to get on and stay on top of it so that that is one perk that i think might come from being in an english-speaking country is really being able to motivate yourself a little more because i motivation is something that that's that's something else that can be very challenging

i i have trouble with it with things that i want to do every year every year my goal is like going to get more exercise i'm going to eat right this year and uh it's like it's difficult to stay motivated to do these things and i know all of you would like to improve your english and as you're just going on with your lives it can it's probably at times it's difficult to stay motivated so uh let's see let's be available for others um purchase i think somebody i mentioned about um yes you finally caught me live yes i am well i'm both i am alive and this is live excellent yes glad you made it uh mazzier asks is it possible to improve your english skills alone i would say yes that's something else absolutely it's possible to do it alone i think uh again i think it's related to what i just talked about if you have to be in an english-speaking country if you're learning with somebody else the same way uh if you are like if i want to do more exercise if i'm doing it with another person i think that does provide a little more incentive a little more motivation accountability that you okay i gotta keep doing this so but other than that if you are self-motivated absolutely you can you can learn it on your own and improve your skills uh let's see what else um oh you're welcome wally uh ladon hi from iran um let's see breon says 100 years it is a great book it is a great book i did read the book but in english after after my failed attempt in spanish uh i went back i think it was probably like a year later i i read the book in english uh it is a great book let's see what else do we have um

i'm gonna maybe i'm mispronouncing names sorry um all right ask about an intermediate level how long can it be before i take the ielts you could honestly you can take the ielts whenever you want i know that if you are going to take the ielts there's probably a certain score that you feel like you need to get whether you're trying to go study abroad or uh in your own country but i think you can take it at any time the one thing i would say when it comes to exams like the ielts or the toefl i don't when it comes to learning language i'm not typically a fan of telling people like oh just study the test just study the test i always think getting a well-rounded approach um learning a language is the absolute best thing you can do but in this case if it's like well i i have to do well on this i think it is it can be helpful to study the test and learn and what i say by that like learn about what is on the test you're going to do these exercises with reading do some examples so you're familiar with what what you're going to encounter when you take the exam same with listening you're going to listen to things they're going to ask you questions it's good to familiarize yourself with the structure of the exam so that you're a little more prepared you're a little more familiar and when you go take the exam you feel a little more comfortable and there are so many resources online like you could just do aisles practice tests just google it and take a lot of these uh practice and and really get a little more comfortable and if who knows if you do feel like you didn't perform well on those practice tests then maybe give yourself a little more time if you need it uh let's see esther ask a good question about phrasal verbs so i said i'm just going to cut and paste it here boom there are a hundred phrasal verbs in english but is it necessary to most of them to sound more english or can we replace them with other words phrasal verbs yeah can be really tricky i think that is something else when it comes to learning phrasal verbs which is a part of really building your vocabulary it's just good to do over time the more you're learning the more you're reading and listening you're naturally going to pick up some of these phrasal verbs like i just used that one right there you're going to pick up the phrasal verbs pick up really in that context in that sense it means to learn something but pick up is another example of a phrasal verb that has so many different meanings because right now i can pick up this bottle of water if i go to a restaurant i can pick up the check and means i'm paying for it or i can go pick up my friend at their house like i'm driving over there and i'm collecting them so it can be really confusing because you can have one phrasal verb that has so many different meanings um or that preposition after the verb can sometimes confuse people so yeah if you want to replace it with um just another word like i used pickup to mean the same as to learn if you just want to say learn yeah that's perfectly fine i think it's excellent um i i just when i don't let phrasal verbs stress you out too much i think they can be very stressful because you see how many there are and it's like oh my goodness this is gonna take forever to learn and just step by step over time i think that's the the best thing to do so all right let's see um mary i'm going to go back oh you're always listening to the lectures excellent that's great i i appreciate that and hopefully like i said i i hope that you guys find my speech easy to follow it's easy to listen to you understand most of it that's perfect i'll take a couple more questions because then uh i'm gonna run out uh i was asked how to improve our speaking skills if we aren't living in an english-speaking country so i briefly mentioned that before and i think this would this is where motivation comes into play because if you are motivated probably in your town or city there is another person out there you just have to find them who would like to practice speaking english and you could create your own speaking club locally and get together have different speaking topics practice speaking with one another and this goes back if you want you absolutely do not have to speak to a native english speaker it's very useful to just speak to anybody just that you're practicing your speaking skills is the most important thing so you could find somebody locally in your town your city or a group of people to try to practice with uh

you could try to find that online sometimes there are language exchanges if you maybe are a little shy and you don't want to search for another person that's when i think you could set things up like i've talked to a couple people who decided they want to practice speaking and they started a youtube channel i don't know if they've posted their videos live but what they would do is they would videotape themselves talking about just any old topic maybe they're giving their thoughts and opinions about politics or maybe they're talking about their family and they would just talk to the camera like i'm talking to you guys right now and that would be practicing your speaking anytime the words are coming out of your mouth you are practicing your speaking skills even if so giving a presentation or pretending like you're going to give a presentation you're still practicing um your speaking skills uh i would send sometimes like i would

when like in spanish i would try to i would think in spanish i would try to do that and you could do the same in english because when you're thinking like using your inner voice it's still kind of like having a conversation because you're trying to think of things quickly you're trying to think of like okay what is the word i want to use what word how do i want to say this express my ideas so you could practice just thinking to yourself and that was an exercise i would do when i moved back to the u.s and i wanted to kind of try to keep spanish fresh in my mind any when i was walking uh home from work i had like a 10 minute walk until i got to the bus stop and during those 10 minutes i would say okay i'm going to spend the next 10 minutes thinking to myself in uh thinking to myself in spanish all right so i would just do that and just look around and try to see well what am i looking at and just have my thoughts in spanish or pretend like if i were having a conversation with somebody in spanish like what how would that conversation go so i know that can that's probably my only suggestion um uh at this point well a few suggestions if you want to practice uh your speaking so let's see um russell and i started to speak with aaron then i forgot everything uh arlinda i have participated in english conversation club so that way i can develop my listening and speaking excellent that's a great idea um if you were able to find this conversation club and uh if it's working for you perfect that's awesome so let's see um after this here i told you that link's down in the description if you guys want to check out the speak up course uh i threw it in the chat i will throw it in there one more time right now because i'm getting ready to wrap this up um the speak up course uh with wes which is me all right there's another link to it if you want to learn more about the course uh learn more about the class and the times uh as well as the price and everything remember use that uh voucher code speak 10. let me write that too i don't want voucher voucher code speak 10 to get a 10 whoops sorry 10 discount that's what i meant to say oh there it is uh which channel hello from thailand hello to you too how are you uh but translating says is not good rosaland i don't know if you're following up on what i'm taught what i was talking about about thinking or translating language translation i i feel like that's another topic i think because some people asked about um translating words and phrases or even just doing direct translation in my view my my just personal view like even if you're let's take reading for example

i i i think as you're starting out learning the language i think it's fine to use some translations to like oh what does this word mean what does that mean you're building your vocabulary with basic words like mother father house and i i think that can kind of get the ball rolling as you improve your english skills i do i think you should try to avoid direct translating or just doing too much relying too much on translation for example if you're trying to learn if you come across a new english word instead of putting that word into a translator and then oh okay this is what it means i would recommend you go online use an online dictionary look up the word find out what the meaning of the word is in english to help you better understand this word this new vocabulary word and just to show you guys um this is the course my preferred site this is just also my opinion i like using cambridge dictionary if you want to look up a word um somebody if somebody wants they can give me a word and i'll look it up if you want to look up a word i think cambridge uses easy language which so that people can easily understand the meaning of the word they give example sentences the pronunciation like many of the other sites i choose this one i think basically i feel like the the way that they describe the meaning of a word i think is useful um i i think is the best which is why i'm recommending it right now so and choose a word let's see um [Music] if i were to write down okay this is a word i was listening to the news this morning and i heard like uh they were talking about somebody being pollyannish um whoops wait a second what do i do uh and i was like oh yeah that's a good word uh oh mary where is it well i'll use you siferous there we go all right pollyannish means somebody who is always optimistic in case you were wondering um i think i spelled it wrong which white didn't come up but mary asked vociferous so again vociferous it says vociferous people express their opinions and complaints loudly and repeatedly in speech and vociferous demands uh etc are made repeatedly and loudly so again if you're describing somebody as vociferous you're typically talking about their speech and they're just being very loud typically complaining about something so i i think this is a good resource if you are building your vocabulary instead of just doing a direct translation but again if you're beginner learner i i think it's fine um that's just my opinion so thank you guys again for joining me um i know it's uh it's been about 45 minutes now i hope that i was able to answer some of your questions and i hope that if you well i hope you're able to achieve your fluency goals for this year and if you're thinking well i don't have any right now maybe spend a little more time thinking about what you would like to improve with your english this year if it's vocabulary related or related to pronunciation or maybe you just want to read more spend a little time thinking about it and again just try to go out there achieve those goals in 2021 which i am also i'm gonna try to achieve my goals as well get more exercise eat better all right always so thank you guys so much for joining me thank you um let's see maziar glad the lessons are useful angela rosalinda uh lolly great to see you hilda uh should write a book actually do i have actually written a couple of books i don't know if i could throw those links in there and show you it's it was about my teaching they're teaching memoirs um about my experience teaching in both south korea and i had another one in namibia amazon uh let me show you it's kind of funny uh this these are books that i wrote kind of a while ago um so here is boom this is the book from my teaching time in korea it's called happy time go fast it's kind of a play on konglish it's i talk about konglish in the book anybody from south korea knows what i'm talking about so that was uh the reason for the title this is about teaching in south korea and then here another one watermelon is life uh if you can get an ebook they're on amazon and this is about my time teaching in namibia but i have not written a book just about teaching english in general maybe sometime uh in the future uh thank you uh mary assan um soli esther uh linda glad you guys could join me fernando uh let you like our my video lessons anita there's a lot more to come uh karina excellent if i and even i remember i talked about the course earlier even if you're not able to join now perhaps the time doesn't work out whatever i am going to run this course again in the future probably in march or april and then i'll even run it later on in the fall so there will be more opportunities to join if it's not uh if you're not able to right now so thank you guys again for joining me hope you enjoy the rest of your weekend and

Amazing Vocabulary Vlog in the Big Apple (New York City)

Now you're in New York... So a couple of months ago, Ioana and I traveled to New York City. The Big Apple! And we'd like to show you a little bit about our trip and some of the things we did as well as show you some new vocabulary words. Enjoy! There are just so many different places to see in New York City. So this building right here is called a skyscraper. And a skyscraper is just a really, really, really tall building. And New York City has a lot of them. Typically they say a skyscraper is building that has 40 to 50 floors or more. And this building right here is the Empire State Building.

One of the most famous buildings in New York City. Here in New York City you meet some very, very cool people. So there's a lot of jaywalking in New York. And jaywalking means when people cross the street when they're not supposed to. So if the light is red and people cross, they're jaywalking. There is a lot of jaywalking in New York. Basically, nobody respects the rules and everyone jaywalks. Should we jaywalk? Run, run, run, run, run... NO! Ioana is not jaywalking. Neither am I. Because...we're allowed to now. This is the Stardust diner. Home of the singing waitstaff. We're going to eat here tonight. That's Danny...our server. Welcome to Central Park.

It's cold. It is cold. Right now the temperature is about I'd say about freezing. It's a little colder actually. But it's windy as Central Park has a lot of ponds. And a pond is a body of water that is surrounded by land. The difference between a pond and a lake is that a pond is much smaller than a lake. Like this one! Right now, it's drizzling outside. And drizzling means when there is rain but it's very, very light rain. So light that you can't really even see it. But you can kind of still see it on your clothes. So right now we are on a ferry. And a ferry is just a boat that's used for public transportation and takes people from one place to another.

And this ferry goes from Staten Island to Manhattan. This ferry is preparing to depart. Thank you for riding the Staten Island Ferry. We hope you enjoyed our trip around New York. And what we'd like you to do is in the comments below please let us know of a city that you would like to travel to and visit sometime in the future. And who knows! Maybe we'll make a video out of it some day. Please remember to subscribe to our channel for more videos lessons on how you can practice and improve your English skills. Thanks for watching! And we'll see you next time.

LESSON 203 OF 749

American Accent Workout Repeat These Sentences Every Day!

Let's learn and practice. That is the most important thing, the American accent. And we're going to practice with a lot of different sentences in order to help you fine-tune your fluency and speak smoothly. And if you're interested in developing your English fluency, please subscribe, turn on notifications. That way I can become your teacher. My name is West, the channel is Interactive English. It's all about helping you reach your fluency goals. So, we're really going to dive in to each sentence. And I have quite a few of them that we're going to practice together. And I want you to repeat after me, and then I want you to shadow and try to say the sentences with me and try to say it at the same time. Now, one thing I want to say right at the very beginning is that you should never feel like you have to speak with any particular English accent. There are many varieties out there, and I think we can appreciate all of them. But, I know that many people live in the US or work with people who are in the US, or maybe you're just fascinated by the American accent because you hear it quite often, movies, TV shows, podcasts, or even music. So, this is to help give you a better understanding as to why people from the US, like me, speak the way that we do. And I want to begin with kind of the fundamentals, some words and phrases that are commonly used. And I think that's a good starting point if you are someone who wishes to emulate the American accent. And we'll begin with the phrase go to the. Except I'm not going to pronounce it like that, and we're just going to build on top of it with other words that are commonly reduced. So, what's going on with the phrase go to the? The first thing that I want to mention is that the word to, as a function word, it's not often stressed. When it's stressed, it sounds like I'm saying the number two. When it's unstressed, the vowel sound is going to change slightly and it's going to sound more like the schwa sound, which is an unstressed vowel sound, and it will it'll sound more like ta. It's a much softer sound.

Go to the. The other thing, which is a very distinct part of the American accent, is the T. I am going to pronounce it as a flat T. It's going to sound like a soft D. And this often occurs when the T comes between two vowel sounds. So, it instead of go to the, it's going to sound more like go to the. And hopefully you can kind of hear how it's a softer sound, go to the. I want you to repeat just this phrase. Repeat this after me. Go to the. Go to the. Go to the. And we're going to be saying this phrase a lot as we go through these sentences because I think that is probably the best thing that you can do right now.

It's just keep practicing and practicing and practicing some more with these individual words and phrases so that you can learn more and understand the American accent. And I'm going to use this phrase with some very common reductions like gonna, have to, wanna, gotta. And as I already mentioned, we're going to keep building on top of this. Let's start with our first sentence. I'm going to go to the store. The way that I want to practice is I'm going to say it two times slowly and I want you to repeat after me, and then I will say it two times at a normal speed, and I want you to repeat after me again, and then I want you to shadow and we're going to practice saying it together.

And that's really going to help you work on your pacing and develop a nice rhythm and flow. And when it comes to rhythm and flow, you need to remember that English is a stress-timed language. If you're unfamiliar with that, essentially it means that when you're speaking English, the stressed words or syllables are said at approximately regular intervals. And everything else really gets reduced in order to fit that pattern. That is the reason why some of these reductions occur. So with our first sentence, I'm going to go to the store. Every time I clap, that is a stressed syllable. And it also you as you can tell, it kind of makes the language sound a little sing-song.

Keep that in mind as we go through this. All of the sentences follow that same pattern. I'm going to go to the store. The other thing that I want you to be aware of is I am going to give you the phonetic spelling of some of these reductions as we do the listen and repeat. When you shadow, I'm going to take it away. This is because I don't want you to focus too much on the phonetic spelling and the way that I'm pronouncing these reductions. I really want you to focus more on how I'm saying it. Let your ears do all the work. And I just want you to practice and say these sentences with me and try to maintain that same speed. I know this is an incredibly long explanation just to get to our first sentence. I apologize. So let's practice this and and talk about what's going on. I'm going to. Going to is going to get reduced to going to. Very common reduction. Following it with our phrase

Let's now say it together, and I want you to shadow and say it with me three times. Ready? I'm going to go to the store. I'm going to go to the store. I'm going to go to the store. All right, great. I trust I trust that you are practicing your speaking skills and saying this with me. The more that you do this, and really kind of making it more of a drill exercise, the more likely that you're just going to make this a part of your speaking fluency. Whenever you're having a conversation, you will just use these reductions and say them the the same way that I do. Here is our next sentence. You got to go to the pharmacy.

In this case, got to, I'm going to reduce it. It's going to sound like gotta. Once again, you're going to hear me pronounce that flat T, gotta. And then there is our phrase, go to the. Gotta go to the pharmacy. You got to go to the pharmacy. That same stress timing. So, I'll say it slowly, just repeat after me. You got to go to the pharmacy. You got to go to the pharmacy.

Now repeat after me at a normal speed. You got to go to the pharmacy. You got to go to the pharmacy. Let's say it together three times. You got to go to the pharmacy. You got to go to the pharmacy. You got to go to the pharmacy. And then our next sentence, she's going to go to the bank. Once again, we're using that reduction, gonna, followed by go to the. She's going to go to the bank.

Let's say it slowly. She's going to go to the bank. She's going to go to the bank. At a normal speed, repeat after me. She's going to go to the bank. She's going to go to the bank. Now let's say it together three times. Ready? She's going to go to the bank. She's going to go to the bank. She's going to go to the bank. Just as a reminder that that softer go to the, it's not emphasized go to the.

Let's have a look at the next sentence. He's got to go to the gym. Using those flat T's, got to go to the. Let's say it two times slowly. He's got to go to the gym. He's got to go to the gym. At a normal speed, he's got to go to the gym. He's got to go to the gym. Now let's shadow. Say it together three times. He's got to go to the gym. He's got to go to the gym. He's got to go to the gym. Good job. Let's move on to our next sentence. We want to go to the mall. This time want to is going to get reduced to wanna. This is another incredibly common reduction that I think you should be using in just casual conversation. Wanna go to the mall.

We want to go to the mall. Let's say it slowly. We want to go to the mall. We want to go to the mall. Two times at a normal speed, we want to go to the mall. We want to go to the mall. Now, let's shadow. Say it together three times. We want to go to the mall. We want to go to the mall. We want to go to the mall.

Our next sentence, they're going to go to the airport. One thing I want you to keep in mind, we talked about the phrase go to the in this case, airport begins with a vowel sound, so instead of the, you're going to hear me say the the airport. Go to the airport. Just something to keep in mind as we say this one. Let's say it twice slowly. They're going to go to the airport. They're going to go to the airport.

Now, at a normal speed they're going to go to the airport. They're going to go to the airport. Now, let's say it together three times. They're going to go to the airport. They're going to go to the airport. They're going to go to the airport. And then our next sentence, I have to go to the doctor. In this case, have to, I'm going to reduce it to just have to. Another very common reduction. Let's say it slowly. I have to go to the doctor. I have to go to the doctor.

Now, at a normal speed I have to go to the doctor. I have to go to the doctor. Shadow, say it with me three times. I have to go to the doctor. I have to go to the doctor. I have to go to the doctor. All right, as you can tell, these are simple sentences. They're not very difficult to understand, but just trying to say these simple sentences with me using these different reductions. Here's our next sentence. We got to go to the office. Once again, we have got to the office because office begins with a vowel sound. Let's say it twice slowly. We got to go to the office.

We got to go to the office. At a normal speed, we got to go to the office. We got to go to the office. And now shadow and say it with me. We got to go to the office. We got to go to the office. We got to go to the office. Let's keep going. Here is the next sentence. They're going to go to the theater. Twice slowly. They're going to go to the theater. They're going to go to the theater. At a normal speed, they're going to go to the theater. They're going to go to the theater. Say it with me. They're going to go to the theater. They're going to go to the theater.

They're going to go to the theater. Now let's do one more sentence and then we're going to build on top of these with some more reductions. But here is the next sentence. I want to go to the museum. Let's say it slowly. I want to go to the museum. I want to go to the museum. At a normal speed, I want to go to the museum. I want to go to the museum. Say it with me. I want to go to the museum. I want to go to the museum. I want to go to the museum.

So, let's go back to our very first sentence. I'm going to go to the store, and we're going to add these different phrases to this sentence using those reductions. And we'll start with I'm going to go to the store and get a few groceries. Just looking at that that final phrase, and get a few groceries. And I'm going to reduce it to n. Get a. I can link that phrase together. Linking is when you link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word. Keep in mind that final t in get, you hear me pronounce that flat t. Get a. Get a. And get a few groceries. Just say that final phrase.

Repeat that after me. And get a few groceries. Let's say the whole sentence. I'll say it once slowly. Repeat after me. I'm going to go to the store and get a few groceries. Now, repeat after me at a normal speed. I'm going to go to the store and get a few groceries. Let's shadow. Let's say it three times together. Ready? I'm going to go to the store and get a few groceries. I'm going to go to the store and get a few groceries. I'm going to go to the store and get a few groceries.

Now let's add our next phrase, to pick up a few things. You can hear that weaker to, and then pick up a We can link that phrase together, to pick up a few things. They're going to go to the theater and watch a movie. They're going to go to the theater and watch a movie. Now let's add to meet up with some friends. To meet up, we can link it together. You hear that flat T, meet up. To meet up with some friends. They're going to go to the theater to meet up with some friends. Let's say it slowly. They're going to go to the theater to meet up with some friends. At a normal speed, they're going to go to the theater to meet up with some friends. Shadow and say it with me. They're going to go to the theater to meet up with some friends.

They're going to go to the theater to meet up with some friends. They're going to go to the theater to meet up with some friends. And then we'll add for the next couple of hours. For the next couple of, we can link it together, for the next couple of hours. Let's say it slowly. They're going to go to the theater for the next couple of hours. At a normal speed. They're going to go to the theater for the next couple of hours.

Now let's say it together. They're going to go to the theater for the next couple of hours. They're going to go to the theater for the next couple of hours. They're going to go to the theater for the next couple of hours. And then we have our sentence, I want to go to the museum and we'll add and walk around for a little while. We'll reduce and to n, walk around, we can link it together, and then there there's that weaker fur, for a little while. We can also link it with the article a, for a. And walk around for a little while. I want to go to the museum and walk around for a little while.

Let's say it slowly. I want to go to the museum and walk around for a little while. Now at a normal speed. I want to go to the museum and walk around for a little while. Three times together. I want to go to the museum and walk around for a little while. I want to go to the museum and walk around for a little while. I want to go to the museum and walk around for a little while.

Now let's add to see the artwork. To see the artwork, keep in mind I'm using the instead of the because of the vowel sound in artwork. To see the artwork. Let's say it slowly. I want to go to the museum to see the artwork. At a normal speed. I want to go to the museum to see the artwork. Let's shadow and me it three times. I want to go to the museum to see the artwork. I want to go to the museum to see the artwork. I want to go to the museum to see the artwork. And then we'll add for the new exhibit. I want to go to the museum for the new exhibit. Let's say it slowly.

I want to go to the museum for the new exhibit. At a normal speed, I want to go to the museum for the new exhibit. Three times together. I want to go to the museum for the new exhibit. I want to go to the museum for the new exhibit. I want to go to the museum for the new exhibit. You did great and and this is something that you can keep practicing on your own cuz kind of drilling these different sounds into your brain so that the next time you're just having a conversation, you're going to say it just like me if you are someone who is interested in emulating the American accent, but again, do not feel like you need to speak with any particular English accent. But in the US, you're going to hear people use reductions like gonna, wanna, have to. They're going to pronounce common phrases like go to the, go to the gym, go to the mall, go to the store, and then reducing those other common words like and to and for will sound like and to for and they are much softer sounds. If you enjoyed this lesson and enjoyed practicing your speaking skills, let me know by hitting that like button and if you did talk to me and I wasn't talking to myself, you can write the word speaking down in the comments. Thank you so much for watching and I will see you next time. So long.

American Accent Workout Linking, Reductions & Real Dialogues

This lesson is all about the American accent. And I know it can sound very fast if you're on the street or watching a movie or TV show, which is why I titled this American fast speech. And if you are someone who enjoys learning more about the American accent, please subscribe, turn on notifications, that way I can become your teacher. My name is Wes. The channel is Interactive English. It is all about helping you reach your fluency goals. And this is a practice lesson and I want you to actually practice your speaking skills. Say these sentences with me and see if you can copy my accent. Now, I will say that you should never feel like you need to speak with any particular English accent. But I do know that some of you may be visiting the US or you live in the US, which is why this may be of interest to you. And if you would like to get the lesson notes, click on that link down below in the description, join my email community, and if you're already a part of it, check your inbox.

I have sent them to you. So, the way that I would like to practice is with several dialogues. And I want to go through each sentence. We're going to do a deep dive and talk about what's going on, different parts of connected speech, intonation, and we're going to practice saying these sentences together as a group. We're going to practice saying the phrases instead of pronouncing the individual word. So, let's look at our first dialogue. And I'm just going to go ahead and say the dialogue so you can hear it. And then we're going to go through this one at a time and just keep practicing and practicing and practicing. And hopefully by the end of the lesson, you will feel more comfortable using some of these different parts of connected speech. And also, you may develop your listening comprehension skills as well, which is why I think this is an important lesson for just about anyone. So, let me say this first dialogue and then we'll jump into it. Did you know we're not going to finish on time?

I should have seen this coming from a mile away. What do you think we ought to do now? As I was saying that, you know, it was pretty fast, but I think you were probably able to listen and understand what I was saying. Now, let's talk about what's happening as I was saying these individual sentences and we will start with this question right here. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? Did you know we're not going to finish on time? What is happening? The first thing I want to point out is assimilation may occur with those first two words. Did you? So in this case, it's kind of like these sounds are blending together. That's the simplest way I can put it. In this case, think of the D and Y. If they were to blend together, you get more of a J sound. It is not something you have to force as you go from one sound to the next. It's just going to occur naturally. Did you? Did you? This does not mean that you are always going to hear this. You may hear people ask the question and they say, "Did you?" and you hear those individual words. But I think often, especially if people are speaking a little faster, maybe they're in a hurry, then assimilation may occur. Did you? Did you? Say it. Say it after me. Did you? Did you? Did you know? We're not going to. This is a very common reduction. We're gonna reduce that to gonna. I think you probably have heard this before. Maybe you already use this as part of your speaking fluency. and then finish on time. Linking may occur. This is when we're going to link the final consonant sound of one word with the beginning vowel sound of the next word. And it's almost like we're just moving that consonant sound over to the next word or syllable. And then finally that n and t. There's a co-articulation. This is again in its simplest form. Think of it as more overlapping sounds. Often it's when your tongue ends up in the same position. So for example, that N sound, your tongue is going to be up behind your top front teeth and you're just going to release and move right in to that T in time. This does help smoothen out one speech because sometimes what I hear is people will pronounce an individual word and then inside their mouth they kind of reset and then say the next word. So really what we're looking to do is transition from one word to the next and do this smoothly and naturally. So here is the phonetic spelling that I've highlighted. If it's easier for you to look at the phonetic spelling as you're trying to say this, then that's great.

Or you can just look at the sentence, look at those words and listen to the way that I'm saying it. And then I want we're going to say it together. So, we're going to do some shadowing as well. So, let's practice this a few times. I am going to say the sentence and I just want you to repeat after me. I'll say it slowly and then at a normal speed and then we'll do a little shadowing. So, just repeat after me. Did you know we're not going to finish on time?

Let's say it one last time for good measure. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? All right. Good. Excellent. Perfect. I trust that you are speaking and saying these sentences with me. So, the response is, I should have seen this coming from a mile away. [snorts] Now, to give you a little vocabulary, to see something coming from a mile away, this is an expression. And it really just means to foresee and prepare for something that is completely obvious. You're like, "Oh, yeah, of course it was obvious. I should have seen this coming from a mile away." Now, when you're saying it and pronouncing this just like me, here's what's going on. I should have. Should have is a reduction. We can reduce that. Once again, there's co-articulation with that n and this time with that voiceless th and this coming I'm going to drop that G. Now, this is not a fixed rule, but this is something that often happens. People do this all the time in the US when we're talking about verbs in the continuous tense. You can hear if I say the ing coming and you hear that ing sound, it's just easier to say in than. So, instead of coming, coming from a mile away, we can link that whole phrase from a mile away. Repeat after me just that phrase from a mile away. It is a little bit of a tongue twister with that from a mile. And you hear those m sounds one more time. From a mile away. All right, are you ready? Let's let's put it all together and say this sentence. Let me just say it one time and then we'll go through it slowly. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. I'm going to say it slowly and I want you to repeat after me. I should have seen this coming from a mile away.

All right. Now, let's say it more at a normal speed. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. Let's now shadow. Say it three times. All right. Are you ready? I want you to say it with me and see if you can maintain that same speed. Are you ready? I should have seen this coming from a mile away. Again, I should have seen this coming from a mile away. And one more time. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. All right. Good. Good. We're practicing all these different parts. And essentially, it is it is a little bit of a drill exercise. The more you say these different phrases again and again and again, when you're having a conversation, you're just going to say them naturally. Well, just like me with an American accent. Here is the next question. And if you notice, I've just been putting up random pictures that in the US, this is Grand Central Station in New York. But the question, what do you think we ought to do now?

What do you think we ought to do now? So, what's happening with this question? What do there is co-articulation, but there's also I mean, there's several ways that you could look at this. So, for example, the T and the D sound, your tongue is in the same position. So, they are overlapping, but really what happens is that that T sound, you're not really going to hear it. So, really, you don't hear any type of T, even though it would be a stop T, it's just going to sound like what. What do you think we ought to do now? You hear me say u. You don't hear a T sound. You hear more of a soft D. When the T comes between two vowel sounds, you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T. It's going to sound like a soft D. This is a distinct part of the American accent.

And this is really something if if you are interested in emulating the American accent, sounding like you have more of an American accent, which of course if you're living in the US, I think you know is perfectly fine. The flap T is very useful. It's very important. Americans, we love it. We use it all the time. And in this case, u you hear that soft d. So let's look at what everything that's going on. What do you What do you What do you Now I I forgot to mention you is a word that is often reduced because it's in this case it's not emphasized. And when that happens, the vowel sound is going to change slightly. So it may sound more like it has a schwa sound. Now this is not something that's going to always happen. It may come anywhere between a U and a Y. But if I were saying this quickly, what do you think? What do you think? What do you think? Just say that phrase. Repeat that after me. What do you think?

What do you think? And hopefully you can pick it out. Let me say it slowly. What do you think? What do you think? What do you think we ought to do? Now there I I've kind of spelled it phonetically as a reduction. Even though I already said those that T, you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T. Otter. What do you think we ought to do now? I'll say it slowly. Repeat after me and then we'll we'll say it more at a normal speed. What do you think we ought to do now? Say it again. More at a normal speed. What do you think we ought to do now?

Now, I want you to say it with me three times. Are you ready? Here we go. What do you think we ought to do now? What do you think we ought to do now? What do you think we ought to do now? All right, good. The last part of this dialogue, we're going to have to go back to square one. And in case you're unfamiliar with uh what what is being said in the sentence to go back to square one, it really just means you're starting over from the beginning because a previous attempt failed. It's really the same as to go back to the drawing board, which is another common idiom in in English. We're going to go back to square one. What is happening? Going to you're going to see this a lot. We're going to talk about this a lot. is going to get reduced to going to. We're going to have to is another reduction. Instead of have to, it's going to sound like have to go back to square one. This is Just repeat after me. We're gonna have to go back to square one. Now, at a normal speed, repeat after me. We're going to have to go back to square one. Now, let's say it together three times. We're going to have to go back to square one. We're going to have to go back to square one. We're going to have to go back to square one.

Now that we've gone through each sentence and really went deep into what was happening and why it sounds the way it does, let's practice this dialogue. I'll I'll say the whole thing and then we're going to take turns and just keep saying this using these different parts of connected speech. So, let me say the whole thing. Did you know we're not going to finish on time? I should have seen this coming from a mile away. What do you think we ought to do now? We're going to have to go back to square one. So, I will start out and I will say A. I want you to say part B and then we'll switch. Are you ready? Let's begin. Did you know we're not going to finish on time?

What do you think we ought to do now? Good. I trust that you're saying it with me and I'm not just talking to myself. So, let's switch. I want you to say A and I will say B. You can begin. I should have seen this coming from a mile away. We're going to have to go back to square one. Excellent. All right, let's keep moving right along. Let's do dialogue number two. And we're just going to keep practicing and practicing and practicing and then we're going to practice some more. How about that? Here is the next dialogue. And let's start out. I will say the whole thing and then we will go through this one step at a time. Don't you want to get out of the pool? What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat.

I'm going to do a few more laps and then I'm done. Let's begin with that first question. Don't you want to get out of the pool? Don't you want to get out of the pool? That looks like a nice pool. I don't know if I'd want to get out of that. So, don't you? Of course, you may hear people pronounce those individual words, but once again, assimilation may occur. This time, if the T and Y blend together, you get more of a ch sound. Don't you? Don't you want to is another very common reduction. Wanna. Don't you wanna get out of the pool. We're going to link that entire phrase. Get out of.

But not only that, you're going to hear me with my American accent pronounce those T's as a flap T because they come between two vowel sounds. So this not only happens in individual words, but with phrases as well, which is why I said it is incredibly common. Get out of. Get out of. Just say that phrase after me. Get out of. Get out of. One more time. Get out of. The reason why I'm really focused on this phrase right now is because you will end up using this quite often in a variety of different contexts. Get out of the pool. Get out of the car. Get out of bed. Get out of trouble. And this is a great phrase to just go ahead and really think about and practice together because you're going to use it. Get out of, get out of, get out of. And the last thing I would say about this question, because it is a yes no question, you really do have a rising intonation at the end.

Don't you want to get out of the pool? Maybe I'm emphasizing it a little bit that don't you want to get out of the pool? So, let's practice this one time slowly and then repeat after me and then at a regular speed and then we're going to do some shadowing. Are you ready? Don't you want to get out of the pool? I'm laughing at myself with that pool. Let me say it again. Repeat after me. Normal speed. Don't you want to get out of the pool?

Now, let's shadow. Say it three times together. Ready? Don't you want to get out of the pool? Don't you want to get out of the pool? Don't you want to get out of the pool? Okay, perfect. I'm just imagining. I'm actually saying this question to you. Don't you want to get out of the pool? And the reply, look, what's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. So, we have a question and then a statement. What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. You can see this theme of assimilation. And it often happens with questions. And this is another perfect example. Whature? So that ts that s plus the y and we get a shh sound. Whature? What's your hurry?

I'm just taking it easy. Elision. This is when sounds or syllables get removed. It happens in individual words like the the syllable, the schwa sound may get removed, but it also happens when the t or d the t or duh comes between two consonants. Now, this is a phrase, but that just that t comes between two consonants. You don't hear it. just taken. Just taken I'm just taking we You hear that? Gd dropping. I'm not saying taking taking it easy. And I can link that phrase together with those flap T's. So, a lot going on in that statement. I'm just taking it easy. But maybe it's a little easier if you see what's going on. And you can see me dropping that T and just and then that taking it easy. Taking it easy. Taking it easy. Let's practice both the question and the statement. I'm I'll say it slowly.

Repeat after me. What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. Let's speed it up. Repeat after me. What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. Shadowing time. Three times. See if you can maintain the same pace and say it just like me. Ready? What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. I'm just I'm trying to get into character as I'm as I'm saying these sentences and I hope that you are too because I think it'll make it a little easier to shadow and say it just like me. The next sentence, let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. So go to the I also want you to focus on this phrase as well. I already talked about the importance of like get out of go to the is another useful one I I I really think when it comes to the American accent because we use this quite often. So what's happening that two it's going to get reduced. So, it's that softer t- sound, but it also comes between two vowel sounds, that t. So, instead of a t, it's going to sound like a duh. Go to the go to the. And just to give you some more examples, I said that you will use this often. Go to the something. Go to the restaurant, go to the gym, go to the mall, go to the store, go to the go to the go to the. So, this is a phrase that you could just keep practicing over and over and over and it's going to sound distinctly American. Anytime you want to say go to the someplace, go to the go to the go to the go to the. And is another word that's often reduced. So, we've we've talked about three of them right now so far with and, to, and what was the other one? You. And that vowel sound changes. So instead of and you're going to hear n get a I can link that together with the flap t bite to eat. I'm going to you you see those t sounds and just we're going to that's how what's going to allow us to connect them together. Bite to eat. Bite to eat. And I'm also going to say that weaker t. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. Say it slowly after me. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat.

Now at a faster speed. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. And now here comes the challenging part. See if you can keep up with me as we say this three times. Are you ready? Here we go. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat.

Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. Okay. And then the final response is I'm going to do a few more laps. I should not few more laps. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I'm going to We've already talked about going to getting reduced to gonna. Extremely common reduction. However, if we're saying I'm gonna, you can reduce this even further. Now, this may get you outside of your comfort zone a little bit. It is not something that you have to do. As we say this sentence, I'm just going to go ahead and reduce it. It's going to sound like amina. And then do a intrusion. And intrusion, it's the opposite of elision essentially because in this case, we are adding sounds. And we're going to add either a slight y or

w sounds. In this case, dw. You can hear hear the sound that we're adding. Dw. That w slight w sound. This is what allows us to link these vowel sounds together. I'm going to do a few laps and is of course going to get reduced to n. At least when I do it right now, then I'm done. I can link that phrase. Then I'm then I'm then I'm So it's going to sound like this. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. Before we say the whole sentence, give it a try with that. I'm gonna I'm gonna I'm gonna try it again. I'm going to And maybe I don't know if it helps to look at the phonetic spelling. Once again, it's not something you have to do. However, I told you that a lot of this is great for your listening comprehension.

This is something you will certainly hear if you're out on the streets and somebody else is talking to you or you're listening to a podcast or watching a movie or TV show and you're going to hear this. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. Now, at a normal speed, I'm gonna do a few laps and then I'm done.

Now, let's say it three times together. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I think you're ready. I think you're ready for the entire dialogue. Before we begin, I'll say the entire thing and then we're gonna switch. Don't you want to get out of the pool? What's your hurry? I'm just taking it easy. Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. I told you it helps to maybe try to get into character. Imagine you and I were we're out at the pool having a good time and then I am going to say A and you say B. Ready? [snorts] Don't you want to get out of the pool?

Let's go to the restaurant and get a bite to eat. Okay, that sounds good. I'll wait right here. All right, now let's switch. I want you to say A. I will say B. You can begin. What's your hurry? I I'm just taking it easy. I'm going to do a few laps and then I'm done. Great job. As you as you can tell, there is a little repetition, and that's good. We're going to keep using some of these common reductions like gonna, and it's good to just keep going back and practicing and practicing and practicing some more. So, let's keep practicing with dialogue number three. And here it is. I will say the whole thing, and then we're going to dive deep into each sentence and talk about what's going on.

Did you? Did you remember to go to the meeting? So once again, to it's going to sound a little softer. T. But remember, I am going to use a flap T. So instead of the T, it's going to sound like a duh because it's following an sound. I gave you another example of a T following an R and the T sounds like a flap T. Started. Started. Started. Started. Remember to started. Remember to remember to. There. There it is. The go to the go to the meeting. Go to the Let's We're just going to keep practicing that we talked about. Hey, go to the restaurant, go to the meeting, go to the gym, go to the mall, go to the store. So, let's say this question one time slowly. You repeat after me. Ready?

Did you remember to go to the gym? Or Okay, never mind. Never mind. I got that. Go to the gym on nine. Um, let's let's start from the beginning. All right. Repeat after me. Did you remember to go to the meeting? Now, let's say it faster. Did you remember to go to the meeting? Shadow, three times. Say it with me this question. Did you remember to go to the meeting? Did you remember to go to the meeting? Did you remember to go to the meeting? Feel like a I don't know why I was thinking like I feel like a parrot just keeps saying repeating repeating repeating as we're shadowing. But that's okay. This is all about getting practice practicing your speaking skills.

I was going to go but it slipped my mind. A little vocabulary for you. If something slips your mind, it just means that you forgot it. All right, somebody forgot to do something or they forgot something and you could say, "Yeah, it slipped my mind." So, what is happening? I was going to go. Of course, gonna. Common reduction, but I I can link that together. And that t that final t but it's going to sound like a flap t when I say it. But I or not, sorry, but I but it. But it but it slip my mind. So slipped. Slipped. You hear me emphasizing that t which is the ed d sound. The ed d in slipped because it's the p is voiceless. It really would sound like a t. Slipped. Slipped.

However, we talked about elision. When like a t comes between two consonants, it elides. You're not really going to hear it. And that's what I was trying to really I guess kind of create a little bit of a chart down there and saying basically slip my slip my you you're not really going to hear that ed and you some people may say well how do you know that we're talking about the past tense? You really just need to put it everything into context as you're listening to somebody else because it's going to elide when they say it. Slip my mind. Slip my mind. It slipped my mind.

Let's just practice that that uh last clause right there. So, just repeat after me. But it slipped my mind. But it slipped my mind. But it slipped my mind. Let's say the whole sentence now one time slowly and then we're just going to speed things up and do some shadowing. I was going to go, but it slipped my mind. Now faster. I was going to go, but it slipped my mind.

Now, let's say it three times. Ready? I was going to go, but it slipped my mind. I was going to go, but it slipped my mind. I was going to go, but it slipped my mind. All right, great. Hopefully, even if this is a new phrase for you if something slips your mind, great phrase instead of saying that you forgot. And hopefully you can even build your vocabulary a little bit with this lesson. And here's some more vocabulary for you. If the other person responds and says, "Oh, you're going to get an earful for this. You're going to get an earful for this." This is more of an idiom. If you say that uh in this case, somebody gets an earful.

you what they think. So, just keep in mind the to get an earful. If I am getting an earful, somebody is speaking angrily to me and nobody likes to get an earful. If it's the other way, if you are speaking angrily to somebody else, then you could change get to give. You are giving someone an earful. So, just keep that in mind. If I'm giving you an earful, I am speaking angrily to you. If I'm getting an earful, you are speaking angrily to me. Hopefully that makes sense. So, of course, think about this context. Somebody didn't go to the meeting, slipped their mind, and they say, "Oh, you're going to get an earful for this. You somebody else is going to get angry with you, perhaps the boss, the supervisor." But let's talk about what's happening. You're going to you're going to get an earful. We can link that phrase together. And of course, that final T and get, you're going to hear me pronounce it as a flap T. Now, for is another one of those beautiful words in English that is not often emphasized, not going to sound like the number four. And that vowel sound is going to change slightly. And in this case, it's going to sound a little more like for. It's a softer sound. For this, for this, for this. Hopefully, it's easy to hear as I was just saying it. Then, let's practice this. You're going to get an earful for this. I'll say it slowly and then we're going to speed things up. You're going to get an earful for this.

Let's speed it up. You're going to get an earful for this. Now, I want you to say it with me. Shadow three times. Ready? You're going to get an earful for this. You're going to get an earful for this. You're going to get an earful for this. Now, the response is, well, I'm going to have to come up with an excuse, which I think is a it's a great idea. Nobody likes to get an earful uh for for something that maybe well, they made a mistake. So, once again, I'm you could say I'm gonna There is nothing wrong with it. It is incredibly common. But if I were to reduce it further, I'm going to I'm going to try to get you outside of your comfort zone. And I'm using it even then as I say that I'm going to I'm going to try to get you outside of your comfort zone and we're going to use that full reduction. I'm going to have to another quite common reduction come up.

I can link that together as well as that final phrase with an excuse. With an excuse we can link that together. I'm going to have to come up with an excuse. Let me well I'll say it again slowly and you can repeat after me. Ready? I'm going to have to come up with an excuse. Let's speed things up. I'm going to have to come up with an excuse.

Now, I want you to shadow. Say it with me three times. Are you ready? I'm going to have to come up with an excuse. I'm gonna have to come up with an excuse. I'm gonna have to come up with an excuse. Great job. I think you're doing an amazing an amazing job. So, I think you're ready to practice and let's say this dialogue together. I'll say the whole thing and then we'll we'll take turns. Did you remember to go to the meeting? I was going to go, but it slipped my mind. You're going to get an earful for this. I'm going to have to come up with an excuse. Simple enough. Straightforward. I will start with A. You and I are colleagues, so I will begin and then you uh will say B. Ready? Did you remember to go to the meeting?

You're going to get an earful for this. Very nice. Let's switch. I want you to say A and I will say B. So, you can begin. I was going to go, but it slipped my mind. I'm gonna have to come up with an excuse. From one colleague to another. Well done. All right. Well done. I love it. Let's practice a little bit more with dialogue number four. And again, these are simple sentences. I think that you understand them even if you were to hear them in a movie, TV show, podcast, whatever it may be. But again, this is more about developing your speaking fluency. If you are interested in the American accent and really understanding why people like me from the US sound the way that we do, let's look at this one. I will say the whole thing and we're going to dive deeper into each sentence. What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options.

We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. I'm going to see if I can find one on the app. Okay, let's look at what's happening with each sentence. As I was saying this, I think you recognize some of the things we've already talked about. And that is awesome. To give you a little vocabulary down here, if somebody says, well, in this case, what's up with the bus or what's up with this or what's up with that? It is a little more informal. If you were to say what's up with something, you could even use it when talking about um a person. You know, what's up with Wes? What's what's wrong?

What's his problem? because you're going to use this to say that you don't understand something or you you you're just wanting an explanation like why like why is this happening? So in this context, of course, it's like the expectation is that the bus should be there and it has not arrived and somebody says, you know, what's up with the bus? What what's up with that? All right, I don't know. Should we keep waiting around? What's up? I can link that together. You can hear me moving that consonant sound over. What's up? What's up? with the with the. Of course, these this is pretty simple as far as these overlapping th's with the bus. And we're going to end with that with the with the and just move right into that voiced th and the what's up with the bus? What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? Now, this is a little trickier. Let me let's let me dive deeper. Even dive deeper right here. Waiting you is a verb. I've already said that often people in the US will drop that G. So instead of waiting, if I drop the G, it then becomes waiting. Now you may have heard something strange going on there. I'll let me say both of those. Waiting. Waiting. Waiting. Waiting. So waiting. When I'm when I say the ing, that T is a flat T. It's going to sound like a soft D. Waiting. Waiting. Waiting. If I drop the G, it's going to change to a glottle stop. It's like I'm swallowing the tea. The sound is coming from the throat. Wait. Wait. To give you uh some more examples with this. And this occurs when you have the the t followed by an N sound. And there are other words. Think of think of these words. kitten, [clears throat] mitten, mountain, certain, and you have a t followed by an N sound. And with each of those words, kitten, mitten, mountain, certain, you hear me pronouncing that glottle stop to hone in on that glottle T, glottle stop. If you if somebody makes a mistake, they say uhoh, just say that right now. Uhoh. Uhoh. Hopefully you can feel that sound in your throat because in between the uo that is a glottle stop. Uh oh. Uh oh. And then you can try to say those words like kitten, mitten, mountain. And in this case with a verb that ends with a t. If we drop the g, wait. There are other verbs too. If I were to drop the G in sitting, sitting or drop the G in meeting and you hear those glottle stops. What makes it even a little trickier is then I'm going to say wait and around. And then I can link the that phrase together. Waiting around. Waiting around. Hopefully that makes sense. And this is when I feel like wow the language is fascinating. It changes from a flap T to a glottle T. a glottle stop when you're talking about waiting versus waiting. I know it's a long explanation, but I really wanted to to let you know what was going on uh with this uh you know gdropping glottle t plus linking. So let's let's practice this sentence and and let's just try that phrase. Waiting around. Say repeat after me. Waiting around. Waiting around. Waiting around. If you feel like you're having trouble making that glottle stop, of course you with the American accent, just use a flap t and say the waiting waiting around waiting around. It is also very common. This is not a fixed rule, but I just wanted to talk a little bit about how people may say the same thing, but it's going to sound different. So, if you are more comfortable pronouncing a flap t like waiting, just stick with that. But as I go through this, I'm going to use that glottle stop. Waiting around.

What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? I'll say it slowly. Repeat after me. What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? Let's speed it up. What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? Three times. Say it with me. Ready? What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? [sighs] What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? Well done. Well done. You know, it's like you and I. We're we're here. We're at the bus stop and it has not showed up. And this was the question. And then the other person says, you know, it's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. It's your call. If somebody, it is again a little more informal, but I think in general, the US people in the United States, they speak rather informally, even at places like work. But if somebody says it's your call, they're going to use this to say that um you know, someone should be the one to make the decision. All right? It's not I don't I don't I'm not going to make the decision. It's up to you. It's your call. So, this person was asking, you know, should we keep waiting around? And they say, well, look, it's your call. You decide. All right. It's your call, but I think we might want to consider other options. It's your call. It's your It's sure you hear that those sounds blending. It's your call. It's your call. But I I can link that together along with that flap t, but I think me way uh we may want to consider other options. want to I'm going to reduce that to wanna and then consider other options. I can link that phrase together. Repeat after me. Consider other options. Consider other options.

One more time. Consider other options. Great. Let's say this sentence slowly and then at a faster speed. Repeat after me. It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. Now faster. It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. Now together three times. You ready? It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. It's your call, but I think we may Sorry. I'm sorry. I'm like losing my own uh uh speaking ability as we we go through this. Sorry. Let's do the shadowing part again. Three times.

Ready? I think I'm I'm fumbling between uh I think we may want to consider other options. Okay. Three times. Ready? Say it with me. It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. All right. a lot of speaking going on in this lesson and you know it's okay. We all kind of trip up from time to time. It happens to the best of us. It happens to me quite often. Um and that's all right. And then the next sentence, we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time.

So in this situation, apparently these you and I, we have to go somewhere. All right? And we're gonna have to get an Uber if uh we want to make it on time. Going to we reduce that to gonna have to to have to gonna have to. It can be a little tricky to say one reduction right after the other. Gonna have to get an Uber. that entire phrase, that final T in the get. I'm going to pronounce it as a flap T. If we wanna another common reduction, make it on time. You you see a lot of these flap T's. I told you it is a very distinct part of the American accent.

People use this quite often pretty much almost almost in every sentence. So, let's practice this sentence right here slowly at a normal speed and then saying it three times together. So, repeat after me. We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. And then more at a normal speed, we're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. Three times. Ready? together. Keep up try to keep up with the the the same pace. We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time.

We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. And I don't know, you you can tell me. I personally think one of the more difficult parts of shadowing is trying to maintain that same speed. And the difficulty in that is just transitioning from one sound to the next as you are saying these words not individually but together as a phrase. Then finally the other person says um I'm going to have to see if I can find one on the app. I'm going to have to see if we could find if I can find one on the app. Of course that I'm gonna get you outside your comfort zone. You're going to hear me say that. I'm gonna if you want to say I'm gonna again very common perfectly fine. I'm going to see if I I can link that together can find one on the app. Find one elision is going to occur. I mentioned maybe the the T or the D. It's going to elide in this case one. It does begin with a consonant sound even though it begins with a vowel one. It begins with a consonant sound. That www. fine one. Fine one. You don't hear that duh in find. Find one on the app. The other thing of course one on we can link that together. The app you I'm saying the stronger the most of the time people are going to say the the the and you're going to use that schwa sound. In this case when the next word begins with a vowel sound that is um a time when you would use the stronger the. So, the app.

The app. Let's put it all together. Uh, I'm gonna have to see if I can find one on the app. I'll say it slowly and then we're going to speed things up. I'm going to have to see if I can find one on the app. Say it faster. Repeat after me. I'm going to have to see if I can find one on the app.

Now, three times. Let's say it together. I'm gonna have to see if I can find one on the app. I'm gonna have to see if I can find one on the app. I'm gonna have to see if I can find one on the app. Excellent. Excellent. Love it. Let's Let's do it. Let's We're ready. All right. We're We're at the bus stop.

Let's get into character. I'll say the whole thing and then we'll we'll take turns. What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? It's your call, but I think we may want to consider other options. We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. I'm going to see if I can find one on the app. I'll start out. A, I want you to save B. Ready? What's up with the bus? Should we keep waiting around? We're going to have to get an Uber if we want to make it on time. Great. Let me know if you find something and and we'll we'll find another way to get there. All right, let's switch. You say A, uh, we're at the bus stop, and I will say B, you can begin.
